Holiday concert

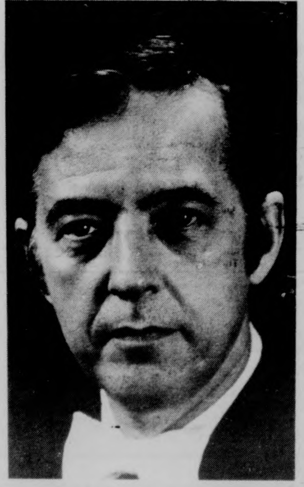
The UMass Symphony Band and University Chorale will join with special guests tonight at 8 in Bowker Auditorium to give a free concert featuring holiday favorites and selections from "Porgy and Bess."

In addition, two trumpet trios will perform "Bugler's Holiday", created by Leroy Anderson, long associated with the Boston Pops.

Guest artists Horace Boyer and Gretchen and John d'Armand will perform selections from George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess." John d'Armand will also perform as Boris in the Coronation Scene from Mussorgsky's opera "Boris Gudnov," which will be presented next year by the Metropolitan Opera.

Conducting the 78-member symphony band will be John Jenkins, UMass director of bands and associate professor in the department of music and dance.



Dr. Richard du Bois

GREAT FOR CHRISTMAS GIVING...

It's Not A Levi's Shirt
It's The Levi's Shirt

The cut is pure classic, with a slightly tapered body. A style that never gets old. And Levi's quality means you can count on it giving you good long wear.

Available in soft, all cotton flannels, bold or subtle plaids to choose from. Also, a big selection of solid and patterned shirts in a wide variety of fabrics. These are the shirts a lot of men buy by the dozen.

★Polyglots still playing for love

Originally associated with the UMass International Club, the Polyglots have been financially independent and function without a coach or captain, although two players usually serve as coordinators to line up matches and organize practices.

The need for a permanent playing field has prompted a need to form an RSO group. The Polyglots will regroup in April on their regular schedule. The club is open to players of all abilities, although criteria for selection for matches requires frequent attendance, reliability, good temperment, and skill as well as a first come, first served basis.

Pats lose for winning

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots' decade of bad luck has taken the cruelest turn of all. Now, they can't even win for winning.

Needing to beat the Miami Dolphins to stand a chance of making the NFL playoffs, the Patriots did their job Sunday — piling up enough offense in the first period to dump the Dolphins, 14-10.

But an hour after their victory, the Patriots learned Baltimore had lost to the Detroit Lions, a defeat that really meant little to the Colts and everything to the Patriots.

"I can't believe they let Detroit do that," said New England cornerback Bob Howard after learning the Lions had blocked a punt for a touchdown with nine seconds left to beat the Colts 13-10. "That eliminates us. We were so happy a few minutes ago. It just doesn't seem fair. It seems like there should be a way of us getting in," he said.

The Patriots can make the playoffs only if Miami loses to a weak Buffalo team Saturday and New England downs Baltimore Sunday.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13 — Born today, you show a great many negative tendencies in your daily life. Disinclined to try to make the best of things, you prefer total failure to partial success. You have been known to be overcome with anger and frustration when the success you excpect does not materialize. Other people find your responses and reactions difficult to predict.

Relatively thorough in your preparations for activities, you are often surprised to find that a particular project is outside the realm of possibility. In short, you discover at times that all the well-meant preparation in the world cannot make up for a lack of talent. There are some things that yield only to ability, and simply will not yield to your determination.

There is no reason you cannot reach the top in your chosen profession, so long as you have chosen it wisely. Knowing your own limitations is the first step to being able to fulfill your ambitions. You would serve yourself best, therefore, to spend considerable time during your developmental years discovering where your talents lie, and thus where you can set your goals.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 14

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Your attachment to another may appear obsessive — and oppressive. Ease up on possessiveness.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Confidence should be the first order of the day. Try to see yourself as higher-ups see you!

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — There are better ways than material gifts to express feelings. Don't feel forced to buy a present.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Prepare without delay for the upcoming holidays. Much can be accomplished through cooperation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A special spirit of the season should begin to permeate all you undertake. Think peaceful thoughts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Allow yourself the benefit of any doubts about your ability to reach the days goals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Be encouraged; you can achieve your new goals within the bounds of propriety. Turn attention inward.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Remember it is what the recipient thinks of your gift, not your opinion, that makes giving successful.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — The desires of those you love are all-important now. Don't be talked out of your usual consideration.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Make every effort to put your feelings into words. This is no time to play the strong, silent type.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Nothing must keep you from seeing what the world around you is like. Wishful thinking is fruitless. Seek the truth.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Adhere to custom, regardless of temptation to favor a free-and-easy approach to the holidays.

Kevin Griffin returned to the UMass lineup Saturday, and the Minutemen co-captain promptly made his presence known as he demolished his Harvard opponent 18-4. The reigning New England champion at 150 pounds missed the beginning of the season because of an extensive lab schedule. Griffin wrestled in the 167 pound category against Harvard, but will be moved down to 158 pounds as soon as he is in top shape. Despite Griffin's heroics, UMass lost the match 21-20. # 'Polyglots' in 9th year; club booters continue

By THOMAS DRAUDT
Collegian Staff

Calling themselves the Polyglots, due to a mixture of nationalities, the convivial and beer drinking, UMass soccer club has endured rain or shine conditions for nine years while battling area colleges as far away as Yale University.

The 'Glots' consist of UMass graduate and undergraduate students as well as residents of the Amherst area. The function of the club is to create organized soccer on a level that does not intimidate the newcomer, but will remain functionally competitive.

"I think they're a marvelous team," said Peter Gooding, athletic director and varsity soccer coach of Amherst College. "Basically they are what soccer is all about. Their approach to soccer is very much like that in Europe where amateur clubs play without coaches and play for the love of the game. They are very fun to play against."

Anyone can play, although the Polyglot bylaws written in 1973 require that a participant have two legs capable of bipedal locomotion, attendance for most practices, an interest in soccer, and being of the male sex, although that is now overlooked.

Opponents include the UMass and Amherst College varsity and JV's, Hampshire College and Stockbridge soccer clubs, and anyone else eyeing rugged, but enjoyable, soccer combat.

This year, the Polyglots boasted a 7-1 mastering of the UMass varsity second team, a 12-0 rampage over Hampshire, a 7-1 victory over the Amherst JV's, a 5-1 win over Stockbridge, and two narrow losses to the Amherst varsity. The opportunity to play the UMass first team was declined by coach Russ Kidd, much to the 'Glots' dismay.

"It's a great bunch of people," said Polyglot defenseman Tom Norton. "Everyone has the understanding that we can screw around, have fun, drink beers but play a good brand of soccer at the same time. This type of club is a rare find these days."

Dunks thrill fans

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

More than 4,200 fans crammed into Curry Hicks Cage and they were treated to an exhibition of slam-dunking by Indiana transfer Mark Haymore resulting in five standing ovations for the 6'8" junior.

Out of the 16 total points garnered by him, 10 were achieved by jumping over the rim and slamming the ball through the basket with two hands. If the five slam dunks, the most profilic was the last, which saw Haymore dribble to the top of the key, leap in mid-air, and come down to the floor only after dropping the ball through the basket.

The fans response to this was a two minute standing ovation after the basket, and when Haymore finally retired to the bench with one minute left to the play in the game.

"Mark's play really inspired the crowd and certainly was a boost to the team. When the opposition sees so many dunk shots, subconsciously they get intimidated about covering the dunker and let him get position around the basket," said head coach Jack Leaman.

Haymore himself took the game in stride. "I still have a lot of work to do as far as getting my timing together around the basket and also to improve my rebounding. There is still a way to go."

When asked if the crowd was a factor in his selection for the dunk shots, he responded that dunking was a natural shot for him.

"I know the crowd really gets psyched for them, but I tend to tune them out while I play. The dunk shot is the highest percentage shot and one of the earliest for me. I can still take the shot from the outside if I have to," said Haymore.

Fouls still plague Haymore to the point where he feels a bit inhibited about moving around the basket, but he contends it's a different style of officiating in Big Ten and East Coast basketball.

"In the Big Ten (Indiana's Conference), referees let you bump and slightly push and shove your opponents, just as long as it isn't blatant. But here, the refs are strict to the books. You really can't get away with anything. I'm just going to see what I can do and what I can't do. I'm going to have to adjust," said Haymore.

As slam-dunking is the most attention getting and most pleasing thing for a fan to see, the second best seemed to be the back court dribbling antics of guard Alex Eldridge.

The 6'2" senior guard who teams up with fellow high school teammate Derick Claiborne, only scored seven points but shot 3-4, stole the ball four times, gave out five assists and was the second leading rebounder on the team with six.

"Besides Haymore," said Leaman, "an important factor of this game was the strength of our backcourt. With both Derick and Alex out there you are talking about both of them having played together for eight years, both high school and college.

"In tonight's game, both of them controlled the tempo of the game, both offensively and defensively and both of them have a knack of knowing what needs to be done to get our game going."

While Eldridge canned seven, Claiborne scored 14, thus outscoring Vermont's backcourt of Greg Davis (1) and Tom Perrin (4), 21-45.

Eldridge himself, early in the game, fell into the crowd after chasing after a loose ball and then subsequently stole the ball on the next play and scored.

He also set up the most "gorgeous play by three men I've seen" — (Leaman), as he took off for the basket and while in the air, flipped the ball behind his back to forward Len Kohlhaas at the foul line, who faked a slot and whipped a pass to fellow teammate Eric Williams underneath the basket for a sure two pointer.

On several occasions, Eldridge had two defenders on him but dribbled through, by, under and over his defenders to escape. On one instance Vermont defender Dane Correll tried to steal the ball on Eldridge but the deft guard simply changed directions, sped up, and then waited for Correll to catch up.

When he caught up, Eldridge just gleamed at him, setting the crowd into laughter.

"The Cage is the place for me and for the team. After we've been on the road for three games, it's good to see the fans come out to see us," said Eldridge after the game.

"Make no mistake about it. The CAGE IS THE JOINT."

Hoopwomen rally stops CCSC

By JIM GOMES
Collegian Staff

NEW BRITAIN — Forward Ginny Peebles sunk two foul shots with 1:07 remaining in the game to put the game away as the UMass women's basketball team came from behind to defeat Central Connecticut 66-58 in New Britain, Connecticut.

The Minutewomen overcame an eleven point deficit at half time with the CCSC Blue Devils leading 33-22. UMass, playing a tight man to man defense outscored their opponents 44-25 in the second half.

"We got out of this place (by) with the skin of our teeth," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "We'll take a victory on the road any way we can get it."

Both teams were cold from the outset, combining to score a total of eleven points in the first six minutes of play. Two Sue Peters baskets gave UMass a 12-4 lead with 12:50 left in the first half.

Central Connecticut, led by forward Laura Hungerford, who scored 11 points in the first half, began to chip away at the lead. Central scored seven straight points, the last two coming on a ten-foot Hungerford jumper to seize the lead at 17-16.

The Minutewomen could not figure out how to attack the 1-3-1 zone defense employed by Central Connecticut. Further complications stymied UMass offensive efforts. Sue Henry, UMass' playmaking guard, picked up her third foul with seven minutes to go in the half and had to leave the game.

Turnovers in the offensive end also plagued UMass in the first half. Sue Peters was called for six travelling violations, while the team committed 16 in the entire half. Referee Mike Moffo commented on the calls. "She (Peters) travelled before she let go of her jump shot, by moving her pivot foot."

Central Connecticut proceeded to outscore the Minutewomen 15-2 in the final five minutes in the half with the partisan crowd at Kaiser Hall Gymnasium loudly voicing their approval.

UMass came out for the second half playing a strong defense and denying Central the open shot. UMass got their fast break on track as Cheryl Carey scored on two layups. The Blue Devils began to melt under pressure as the Minutemen outscored them 20-8 to regain the lead at 42-41 with 12:37 left in the second half.

The Minutewomen's ability to crack the CSC zone defense inside contributed to the comeback.

Freshmen Cathy Harrington broke free inside to score eight points in a five minute span to give UMass a 56-51 lead with six minutes to go.

Central Connecticut hung in there as UMass applied the pressure on both ends of the court. Carey tied up a Central player for a jump ball with 50 seconds left in the contest. On the subsequent tap, Carey, who provided a steadying influence in the game, outjumped the taller Central, player directing the ball to Peters who raced downcourt for an unmolested layup, icing the game at 64-56. The Kaiser Hall crowd screamed no more knowing victory had escaped their team.

"We deserved to win this game because of our second half performance," Ozdarski said. In the beginning, we were just flat, their 1-3-1 zone defense didn't really bother us. We did not play good defense which hurt our offensive effort."

Coach Lincavich of Central Connecticut lauded the Minutewomen effort. "They came out and dictated the momentum in the second half giving them the victory. Our defense was outstanding in the first half, but we let them beat us on the baseline in the second stanza."

Cathy Harrington and Sue Peters shared scoring honors with 19 points a piece, while both Carey and Henry scored 12. The Minutewomen shot 41 per cent from the field and outrebounded their opponents 32-27. Carey led the way with eight caroms with Peebels and Peters snaring seven apiece.

Merrimack bests icemen

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER, Ma. — The UMass Minutemen came here looking for the big upset, and although they played a hard-fought hockey game, the upset was just not to be, as the Warriors of Merrimack scored twice in the third period to clinch a 4-1 victory before 350 fans at the Bolte Center.

The contest was the final game for the Minutemen before the intersession break. The loss drops their record to 3-6.

Merrimack grabbed the lead at 6:34, when Greg Walker rapped in a rebound from ten feet out. Brian Murphy and Murray Scudder got the assists. The Warriors took a two-goal lead two and a half minutes later when Larry Nickulas blasted in a slap shot from the left point.

The Warriors continued to control action in the first period, and had it not been for the superb goaltending of John Riley, the score might well have been 10-0. Riley made 16 saves in the period, and several were of the spectacular variety.

The Minutemen could do nothing until late in the period when they put some heat on Warrior goalie Jim DeSimone, but could not score.

Where the first period was dominated by Merrimack, the second was all UMass. The Minutemen controlled play in both ends, and put lots of pressure on DeSimone.

After seeing several good scoring chances go by the boards, the Minutemen got the big goal they needed at 11:20, when Joey Milan whacked in a rebound off the stick of Nick Carney.

In the third period, the Minutemen played well, but Merrimack played better, and soon took control.

In the early going, the Warriors put all kinds of pressure on Riley, but the senior goalie responded with some excellent saves. The Warriors continued to press, and at 8:53 gained a two-goal lead when high-scoring forward Jim Toomy snapped a 30-foot wrist shot that took a weird hop and got behind Riley.

Dean Fraser put the game out of reach at 15:34, when he blasted in a slap shot from the left point with Don Murphy in the penalty box for high sticking.

UMass resumes action after the semester break on January 27, playing St. Anselm's at home.

The UMass hockey team was defeated by Merrimack College last night in North Andover, 4-1. The team now stands at 3-6 for the season and will resume action on January 27. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Playoff picture cloudy

[AP] — Okay, all you mathematical geniuses. The National Football League playoffs are nearing, and that means, of course, it's time to break out the calculators, logarithm tables, abacuses and similar devices or systems to figure out the myriad possibilities for the remaining four playoff berths.

To begin, four of the eight playoff spots have been filled.

The Denver Broncos, with their 12-1 record, have clinched the Western Division title in the American Football Conference and will participate in the playoffs for the first time in their 18-year history.

The Broncos also have assured themselves of the home field advantage for the opening round of the AFC playoffs Dec. 24, against the AFC Central champion, either the Pittsburgh Steelers or Cincinnati Bengals, and the conference title game Jan. 1 if they get that far.

The Oakland Raiders, last season's Super Bowl champions, are 10-3 and have clinched the wild card berth in the AFC. They will open the playoffs on the road — a bad omen for the Raiders — against the AFC East champion — the Baltimore Colts, Miami Dolphins or New England Patriots. Oakland never has won a playoff game away from home.

The Dallas Cowboys, with a 10-2 record before Monday night's nationally televised game against the San Francisco 49ers, have clinched their ninth National Football Conference Eastern Division championship in the past 12 years and will open the playoffs at home Dec. 26.

An outlook for '78

Only eleven days til Christmas (a couple of hands clap together).

And eighteen days until New Year's Eve (thunderous applause).

1978 is swiftly approaching, while '77 fastly fades (yeah!!!!).

What does the future year hold for UMies? New England fans?

The following is an abstract hypothesis and extended predicted forecast of the upcoming 365 days, beginning from recovery time of New Year's Eve party hangovers.

Intersession month: Thousands, maybe hundreds of U. of M'ers have created an unofficial marathon to the Sunshine State, and the orange groves of Florida. Meanwhile up north, the UMass Minutemen will be making the circuit, travelling to such faraway places as Villanova, Penn., and Duquesne, not to mention 'fillers' with Rutgers (who still think back to last year's encounters) and Providence in Springfield's Civic Center.

Meanwhile, in NFL news, the Minnesota Vikings, having surprisingly advanced to the Super Bowl, only to lose yet another, 50-14, weren't completely desolate after the defeat. Coach Buddy Grant had these words of sentiment for the local press: "We played a hell of a game. Our defense should be recognized for their effort. It's just that our potent offense couldn't get untracked until the second half."

"We can't keep losing" added Grant. "One of these days we're gonna win this thing!!!"

Following the game Pete Rozelle announced the barring of the Vikings from any future championship games on the basis of boredom detrimental to the game of football.

The month of the groundhog: The Boston Celtics won their third straight contest 95-94 in double overtime over the Quincy Chiefs. The win left them only 16½ games in back of the frontrunning '76ers, and the Celts also have a game in hand.

The UMass hockey team meanwhile has been kicked out of Orr Rink, thus ending their season early. It seems that after dumping Amherst College in a scrimmage game 9-2, Amherst's administration expressed their anxiety by canceling UMass' subscription to the ice. Students popular use of the campus pond has eliminated the possibility of rescheduling their games there.

Ronnie Perry breaks leg while walking on court. HC forfeits game rather than playing game vs. UMass without him.

Ides of March: Caesar died this month, and so did the Vancouver Canucks as the Northstars clinched the Smythe Division, with their 12th victory of the season. They open the playoffs vs. Montreal.

U. of M. baseball'ers head south for spring-break practice games.

April showers: Intramural softball season delayed by snow.

May: NBA basketball ends. Celtics win championship after recovering from early season woes, make fantastic comeback, and end up sweeping Portland four straight games in the finals. Fans become so psyched, they tear down Boston Garden, doing the city a favor in the process.

June: NHL season ends. Minnesota wins Stanley Cup.

Fellow students at state college based in Amherst, still celebrating the super seasons of both the men's and women's lacrosse teams. Or is it the end of the spring semester that brings on the beer?

Two students unseriously hurt in frisbee contest held at Spring Day. Hopefully the aspirin administered by the Infirmary will help them get over their concussions, and they'll be back to normal before finals.

July: Fourth of July. Otherwise a dull month for sports. Nothing exciting ever happens this time of year.

Seven die in college fire

Compiled from wires

Providence College, in mourning for the seven students who died in yesterday's dorm fire, suspended all activities including final exams until Jan. 9.

About 2,700 out of 3,400 students attended a memorial mass held in the college's gymnasium not far from the fire-ravaged dorm. The mass was celebrated by Rev. Thomas Peterson, president of the Roman Catholic college.

"As we gather here in sorrow, let us offer each other mutual consolation," said Peterson at the start of the mass.

The fire was apparently started by a lamp used to illuminate a Nativity scene. "The investigation centers around an area of the corridor where Christmas displays were set up, specifically a gooseneck lamp used to illuminate a manger scene," said Fire Marshall Thomas Doyle at a press conference held late yesterday.

Doyle said he was trying to piece together the display from information from witnesses. He was unsure whether the lamp short-circuited or the paper caught fire.

The display was set up on three metal trash cans in the fourth floor hallway of the four story building. It is still being examined at the University of Rhode Island laboratory, according to Doyle.

Twelve women, including two from Massachusetts, remained in the hospital being treated for burns and smoke inhalation. One of the women is reported in critical condition with third degree burns over 80 per cent of her body.

Three other women were treated and released from the hospital yesterday.

Students, as they began leaving for home late yesterday, were still shocked and reluctant to talk about the fire.

"The screams were the worst," said one student who said she lived on the first floor of the burned-out dorm.

Leo Trambukis, Providence public safety commissioner, said six of the students died in the dorm or when they jumped from their rooms. A seventh student was dead on arrival at Roger Williams Hospital in Providence.

Trambukis said two of the women died when they jumped 40 feet from a ledge outside their dorm rooms. A third woman in the room was rescued by firefighters with a ladder truck.

"If they had waited five more seconds, they would have been saved," a fire investigator said.

Jim Pontarelli, a sophomore from North Providence, watched desperate firefighters trying to reach the two women on the ledge, one of them with her clothing aflame. "They were telling them not to jump," he said.

Just before 3 a.m. yesterday, there were shouts of fire and a fire alarm ringing in the fourth floor hallway of the dorm. Some students thought their alarm clocks were ringing. Others said they thought the alarm was a prank. Several false alarms had been sounded in the dorm in recent weeks.

Nadine Rhodes, an East Providence freshman, discovered the alarm was real. "The girls came running down the hall, trying to find Judy Panek, the resident assistant in charge of the fourth floor. They were yelling, 'Judy, my God, there's a fire,' " said Rhodes.

Panek helped guide many of the students down the three stairways, but she was unable to reach some. Flames roared through the hallway, trapping some of the students in their rooms.

School and fire officials praised quick-acting students from other dorms, who helped get the residents out, set up hoselines, moved parked cars and raised ladders to women screaming for help.

DC-3 with 31 aboard crashes

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (UPI) — A chartered DC-3 plane carrying 31 persons, including the University of Evansville basketball team, crashed after takeoff in dense fog last night. Indiana State Police reported there were three survivors.

The two-propeller plane went down about 1 and one half miles east of the main east-west runway at Dress Regional Airport in this Ohio River city in southwestern Indiana.

One of those aboard the plane was reported to be Marve Bates, a wellknown Indiana and Midwest sportscaster.

Evansville, often a basketball powerhouse among smaller schools, was scheduled to play Middle Tennessee State tonight.

Middle State Athletic Director Charles M. Murphy, reached at a Christmas party, said, "I haven't heard a thing. They were supposed to play here tomorrow night. They were supposed to have gotten in here tonight. I thought they'd get here around 7-8 p.m. tonight."

Indiana police said the plane from National Jet Service flew in from Indianapolis and picked up the team for a flight to Nashville, Tenn.

The plane took off in heavy fog and crashed about two minutes later in a cornfield near the Melody Hills subdivision northeast of the city.

"He (the pilot) took off on the runway heading due south," said Rick Notter, an employee of Metro Beechcraft at the airport, who heard the crash.

"As soon as he made the lift-off he started making a left turnout. There's a hill about Happy Holidays!

This is the last Collegian issue of this semester. The staff wishes everyone a happy intersession and we will resume printing with the first day of classes next semester.

Although the UMass campus was cited for contributing to air pollution in the Pioneer Valley, the problem isn't as bad as it looks. See page 3.

UMass' own pie thrower was tried and sentenced last night by the Student Judiciary Board. See page 6 for the verdict.

Weather

The weather forecast for today reports mixed snow and rain changing to rain during the morning with highs rising near 40. For tonight, a chance of showers with the lows in the 30's, is predicted.

Getting the grade: a final analysis

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

It's a funny thing, this finals business.

You'd think that after studying hard for 14 weeks or whatever it is, teachers could at least give you credit for staying alive or something, without putting you through the agony of final examinations. I mean, why should we be retested on stuff we've already beaten to death?

The answer, I guess, lies in the as yet unproven theory that exams somehow accurately test your knowledge of any given subject. A comprehensive final exam, based on this theory will measure a student's total understanding of course material such that he or she can be graded, and (this is the killer) supposedly learn something while studying.

Dubious.

Consider the following situation: Student A has a taxes exam at 10:30 and an auditing exam at 4 p.m. both on Friday, not to mention a finance exam at 8 a.m. Saturday. He begins to study his auditing (since taxes is open book anyway) and suddenly realizes there is no way he can cram 14 weeks of balance sheets into two days.

He figures he may have better luck with finance, but again the task is seemingly impossible. In short, he does his best to study for all three exams, which is to say gets totally screwed up and as a result, ends up taking a bath in all three subjects. Quite a horror show.

Student B, on the other hand, has only a finance exam to study for, since he was smart and somehow got exempt from his other finals. Anyway, he ends up getting an A on the final, and since the final counts 50 per cent of his grade, he aces the course despite the fact that he had a B-C average throughout most of the semester.

Student A, meanwhile, ends up with a C for the course mainly because of the beating he took on the final — it doesn't matter that he had a strong B average prior to finals week.

By now, the irony of the situation should be obvious. I suppose certain people could argue that if you had a strong average throughout the semester you obviously knew the material, and should have had no trouble with the final since it was basically a rehash of the same old rot anyway.

But there is a difference between knowing something for an exam, and really knowing something.

Most of the time, it seems that one studi3s something just enough to get a decent grade on an exam. Ask an accounting major if he remembers the four types of accounting changes and the three ways of dealing with them. (Or is it the other way around?)

Ask an English major if he or she remembers what Hamlet's real motive was.

Ask a marketing major if he or she remembers the four P's.

Ask a biochemistry major if he or she remembers what the energy of activation is for a molecule in an ionized state.

Ask a zoology major if he or she remembers what subphylum the flying squirrel falls under.

My point, finally, is this: memorizing is not the same as learning. You don't memorize knowledge — you learn it. And that might just be the most valuable thing to remember.

Happy finals.

Greek living on the decline

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Membership in sororities and fraternities dropped drastically throughout the nation during the late sixties and early seventies and the UMass Greek system was no different.

Kathy Sandoval, an alumni house parent of Kappa Alpha Theta and a 1975 UMass graduate remembered the membership in Theta and a 1975 UMass graduate remembered the membership in Theta dropping from the high nineties to 14 or 15 sisters in 1971. At present there are 22 sisters in the house.

"It was a general campus wide feeling ... very anti-Greek ... students were getting involved in the Vietnam war demonstrations — they didn't want to join anything, any kind of club," Sandoval said in a telephone interview. "It was the do your own thing feeling," she added.

In a 1971 survey, Paul Stevens, then director of Greek Affairs at UMass wrote, "the rate of depledging seems to be high." Stevens also noted apparent anti-Greek feeling on campus. He did not attribute the decline or "feeling" to anything in particular.

The apparent anti-Greek feeling on campus today dates back to the late sixties. "Do your own thing," anti-establishment and civil rights forced previously ignored issues upon the Greek system.

The restrictive clauses in membership charters, hazing, extreme peer pressure and snobbishness come under attack.

A fall 1965 Collegian article described how students objected to several aspects of sorority life: "Too clannish," "too discriminatory," "regulations are ridiculous ... rules about how many dates you can have ... " There were also rumors some sororities were "wethouses" — "they give you more to drink than coffee and coke."

Elaine Barker, a 1963 UMass graduate and a Kappa Kappa Gamma alumnus who has been an advisor to Kappa since 1964, had a few ideas as to why Greek system is not as popular as it was when she pledged.

Barker cited the rapid growth of the university in proportion to the Greek system as a possible reason for the decline in popularity. "The campus grew and the Greek system didn't," Barker said in a telephone interview.

Barker also said, "Poor public relations" had an effect on membership. " ... You know ... the stories about drunken parties ... the image of the bleached hair, snobby ... ," she added.

Sandra Ritter, a 1968 UMass graduate and a Chi Omega alumnus turned adviser also said growth was a contributing factor in membership decline over the past 10 years.

"The system didn't keep up growth with the college," Ritter said in a telephone interview. "That's why they're having problems now," she added.

Both Barker and Ritter recalled that "going Greek" was the thing to do. "It was socially accepted to join a house ... non-Greeks were in the minority and Greeks had all the power ... ," Barker said.

"Only seniors could live in because there was such a demand," Ritter said.

Later, powerful Greek systems still exist. At the University of Florida at Gainesville there are 28,000 undergraduates and 8,000 of them are Greek said Brenda Stack, a transfer student from the southern school. She said there are several reasons for the success of the system there.

"The university (U. of Fla.) pushes the Greek system," Stack said. "It goes to the Greeks for approval ... most of the high offices in the student senate are held by Greeks ... it's very different from UMass," she said.

"There is no mandatory housing on campus, so dorm life doesn't offer much," she added.

There are twenty-one active sororities and thirty-one active fraternities on the southern campus. There are so many students rushing that most of the rush process is done through a computer.

Stack also said the system is "no fault." "Everyone gets a house ... they just added another chapter because of the overflow," Stack said. Only sisters can live there because of the demand.

Stack said the administration at the Florida school, aids the Greek system, while the UMass administration does not.

An example of this is the calendar schedule of the two schools. Rush at the southern school is held for four days during a freshmen orientation period. Since classes are not held during orientation the rush period doesn't interfere with schoolwork.

At UMass rush is held for a two week period at the beginning of the semester. Rush counselors interviewed said the hectic schedule of classes, rush parties and homework discourages many women from rushing.

One thousand women rushed the Florida sororities while only one hundred rushed the nine UMass houses. There are several reasons why 350 sorority women at UMass joined a sorority.

The majority of sorority women interviewed said they view, and joined the Greek system as an alternate living arrangement with the added benefits of sisterhood and involvement. They said they did not consider joining solely for social benefits, such as meeting fraternity men.

They said their contact with fraternities is an important aspect of sorority life, but the women interviewed contend they are not there to find a steady date or a husband. Many said they judge their friendships with fraternity men to be as, or even more important than romantic involvements.

Sisters from one sorority house laughed at the image of the "sorority girl" with a date every night. "We sit home just like everybody else," one sister said.

The majority of women interviewed agreed their social lives have improved since pledging to a sorority. However they emphasized "improved" did not necessarily mean individual dates but rather a variety of activities in small or large groups.

They said there is not anymore dating going on in the Greek system than there is in any other living area.

Iona Reynolds a 1941 UMass graduate and a Chi Omega alumni says that students are joining sororities at UMass for "identity," ... "it's personal attention ... it's an advantage to join a sorority ... you're not a number," she said.

Sorority women tried to explain, as one sister put it "a special kind of closeness." They cited close friendships that continued through college and even after graduation as one aspect of sorority life that appealed to them.

"Every year the people on a floor change — in a sorority you get to know people well and the friendship continues ... they don't move out after a semester." one sorority woman said.

Sorority women cited the physical layout of a house as a reason they joined a sorority. "Living in a dorm is like living in a hotel" one Sigma Sigma Sigma sister said. " ... you go out for meals and your room becomes a bedroom, living room, kitchen and dining room ... here my "room" is my bedroom she added.

"The house becomes a second home ... you don't say 'I'm going back to the room ... ' you say 'I'm going home" another woman said.

Many sorority women say they find it easier to study in their houses. Most have quiet hours and areas of the house for "noisy study" (i.e. typing). All nine houses say they encourage academics, and all have scholarship programs.

"It's helped me to grow," "couldn't have survived without it," "it helped me get involved." were some of the comments sorority women had on sororities.

Shannon Ellis, director of Greek Affairs at UMass sees many advantages in sorority life. She says close friends, academics, involvement and identity are advantages. "It's a good environment to expand in," she said.

Kathy Sandoval said she thinks sororities and fraternities are picking up. "They're re-establishing themselves ... there are more groups of individuals ... they're sororities and fraternities, offering a more diversified group of people," she said.

"They're different now compared to sororities ten years ago ... You'd have all the cheerleaders in one house, all the people involved with the choir in another ... that's different now and it's for the better," Sandoval added.

BOG may decide not to renew Saga food contract

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

It was by general agreement of the Campus Center Board of Governors yesterday that the contract presently being negotiated between the Campus Center and Saga Food services be the last ever to be considered.

Since it is fairly certain that the contract with Saga, which handles the Campus Center food services including the Hatch and Blue Wall is to picked up for another year, the main concern of the BOG is that some parts of the contract be changed or at least re-examined.

Saga's contract specifications including a possible percentage of profit, and the basing of projected return on present labor rates was under much discussion.

The subject of the specification of present labor rates in the contract was brought repeatedly to the floor by Brian Delima, former Speaker of the undergraduate Student Senate and member of the BOG. He and John Foley, another BOG member, presented the fact that the contract did not allow for the increase in the federal minimum wage to $2.65 per hour effective in January. Foley also added it made no allowances for any increase in labor rates, for those covered by unions.

Jack McGill, food service director for Saga, stated the return should increase as the rates go up.

Presently stated in the contract, Saga guarantees a return of $180,000 to the Campus Center but discussion at the meeting more accurately lowered it to $170,000. In the contract, Saga would like any future return in excess of that amount to be split with the percentages being; 60 percent to Campus Center and 40 percent to Saga.

The combined members of the BOG strongly opposed this percentage split, and said they feel it should be eliminated from the contract.

Delima added if the percentage request were left in there was a possibility of this jeopardizing some work-study jobs.

Collegian Staff

Wilma Rudolph, winner of three gold medals in the 1960 Olympics, will be the keynote speaker for International Women's Week, March 5-11.

The address, to be held in the Student Union Ballroom, is slated for March 6. Rudolph is the subject of a soon to be broadcast television movie starring Cicely Tyson.

The Distinguished Visitors Program which is sponsoring the keynote address, will also present lectures by Paula Gold and Lorna Effron.

Gold is the Assistant Attorney General for Massachusetts in charge of the Consumer Protection Division. Her lecture will be held on March 7. Lorna Effron, author of "Crazy Salad" will speak on March 8.

The IWW coordinating committee has contacted Holly Near as apossible artist for the opening concert slated for March 5. The concert will be sponsored by the Union Program Council.

The IWW coordinating committee also announced the Campus Center Program Council has allocated $500 to the week.

International Women's Week will be a week-long celebration including workshops, lectures, theatre, mime, music and dance programs by and for women.

[illegible] o s[illegible] the s[illegible] student

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

There's music in the air, but you can't hear it unless you have your headphones on in the Music Library, concourse level of the Campus Center.

According to Barb Callahan, a work-study student employed there, the library is for people who like to listen to music while they are studying.

She explained how the library works: when a student comes into the Music Library they turn in their I.D.'s. In return they receive pair of headphones which can be plugged into one of the 20 receiver outlets available.

There are eight channels available and the student can tune in anyone of these. The tapes are changed hourly and all tapes used have been purchased through student request.

"We offer all sorts of music, classical, jazz and contemporary," Callanan said, pointing to two large catalogues on the counter over the main control panel, which she runs.

Callanan said the library was pretty crowded most of the time and because the chairs are so comfortable, "a lot of people come in here put on some headphones and go to sleep."

Besides the music, the library also offers the latest issues of popular magazines and several tables and chairs for quiet study without music.

"I like to listen to music when I study and do my math and there's few other places where you can sit and relax and listen to music and study. I don't have anywhere near the amount of tapes at home they do here," Jon Rosmer said as he requested a tape from Callanan.

"Another thing I like about coming down here is they always have the current copies of magazines they never have at the library because they are always getting ripped off," Rosmer said.

Callanan also attributes the music library's popularity to its proximity to the Coffee Shop and the Blue Wall. One woman told her she came there because she didn't like to fight the wind to get into the library.

Right now the Music Library uses 8-track tapes but Callanan says they are thinking about switching over to cassettes. "We are open seven days a week and some of our tapes are pretty popular and with that much play they start to wear away. Cassettes will wear better.

"My only real complaint is the volume controls don't work very often. You either have very loud music or you can't hear it at all. But I was told they were going to fix that over intersession. Still, it's really great for coming down here, putting on some music pulling your hat over your eyes and taking a nap," Rosmer said.

The Music Library is open Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., Saturday from 11 to 6 p.m., and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Pittsfield mayor opposes local gambling

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

PITTSFIELD — Mayor Paul E. Brindle yesterday said he opposes state legislation that would permit casino gambling in Berkshire County.

"The advantage of tourist dollars brought into the area by casino gambling," the mayor said, "would be offset by the money lost by Berkshire residents at the gambling tables."

There is pending in the Legislature's Committee on Government Regulations a bill, filed for Greylock Associates of Adams, which would authorize casino gambling. It was introduced by Rep. Anthony P. McBride, D-Adams, and has since gained two additional co-sponsors — Rep. David Schwartz, D-Haverhill, and Rep. Royal Bolling, Jr., D-Boston.

The mayor said he is confident no action will be taken on the bill this year and that it will be defeated in 1978.

A spokesman for Greylock Associates said the company had commissioned an economic impact study to show that the still unfinished Greylock Glen resort would release a "dollar cloudburst" on Berkshire County, presumably with the aid of legalized casino gambling.

Brindle said the dismal experience of commercial horse racing enterprises in the area didn't speak well for the gambling business as a generator of tourist dollars.

The mayor said legalized gambling would bring "professional gamblers and prostitution" into the area.

The general impression around the statehouse has been that there would be no action on the bill this year, but it might get favorable action in the Legislature next year.

Rep. Robert B. Ambler, D-Weymouth, House chairman of the Legislature's Committee on Government Regulations, said if the casino bill should be passed next year, he would insist it first be approved by popular vote in the county in which a casino was to be established, not just the community in which it would be located.

"It's a way of retaining a region's character," Ambler said.

Brindle said he was worried the "undesirable" elements associated with casino gambling would harm the Tanglewood tourist industry which has been a summer tradition in Berkshire county for nearly 50 years.

Last month the Berkshire County Commissioners voted to sponsor a bill in the Legislature to permit a non-binding referendum next November asking voters whether they would approve allowing casino gambling in Berkshire County.

The outcome of next year's vote will have an affect on the future of casino gambling in Berkshire county, according to Peter Arlos, D-Pittsfield.

Physical Plant violates air pollution regulations

By HERB BRODY
Collegian Staff

That black smoke commonly seen drifting up from the tall brick chimneys of the Physical Plant is more than an eyesore — it is a violation of state air pollution regulations (namely, Reg. 6.1.1, Section 142D, Chapter 111).

According to UMass Environmental Health and Safety Director Donald Robinson, the plant was cited in October for unsatisfactory "appearance of emissions" — that is, the smoke emanating from the stocks looked too dirty.

The notice of violation was given by Steve Joyce, chief of the Air Quality section of the Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control District.

No poisonous chemical pollutants were found to be present in the stack emissions in dangerous quantities said Robinson. Because the plant's boilers are fired by coal that is low in sulfur content, the plant's emission of sulfur dioxide (a harmful gas) is very low.

The Physical Plant provides the University with all of its heat, and about 20 per cent of electricity, according to chief power plant engineer Gordon Slongwhite.

To meet the state air quality guidelines, the Physical Plant is planning to install filters in the smoke stacks. The filters, which according to Slongwhite would cost about $3 million to buy and install, would remove some of the offending particulate matter, thus making for less sooty emissions.

According to Physical Plant Utility Engineer Ted Delesdernier, the preliminary plans for the design and installation of these smoke filters are still being worked out by the Bureau of Building Construction in Boston. It is not known when the emissions controls will actually become operational, said Delesdernier.

Originally, the Physical Pplant had intended to meet the emission standards by switching to oil, — which, when burned, produces cleaner looking smoke than does coal. Recently, however, the federal government has been encouraging the use of coal in lieu of oil as the nation's primary energy resource.

Coal, besides being more abundant, is cheaper than oil. Also, coal burning emissions are probably less hazardous overall than oil burning emissions — especially if the coal burned is low sulfur coal, as used at UMass. Low sulfur coal should continue in good supply for at least another 75 years, said Delesdernier.

Robinson pointed out that concern over the Physical Plant's emissions is especially high because of the conspicuousness of the problem. The plant's stacks are the only major blemish in the area's otherwise smog free skies; they are difficult to hide.

Attention

Craeman Gethers, a Black UMass student unjustly convicted of armed robbery in 1975 will be visiting the campus today December 14, on furlough from Norfolk State Prison. Craeman will be in front of the Hatch from 10 a.m.-1 p.m. to speak with concerned students and solicit signatures on the petition for his pardon. Everyone is strongly encouraged to take a few moments time to speak with the brother and become acquainted with this case.

A Challenge

By BILL HASSON
Black Affairs Staff

Sports Editorial: A Challenge To Us All.

I would like to make a prediction. I predict that the UMass Basketball team of 1977-78 has the caliber of going all the way to the Championships. There is one essential quality that is lacking. Rhythm in the stands. Rhythm in the stands. UMass, even though it is a fairly conservative institution, has showed some signs of evolution. The campus population is different than it was 20 years ago. There are new buildings, free bus service, a variety of progressive organizations and clubs in the area. Fashions have taken on a different mode. The Outing Club has just celebrated its 50th birthday, but there is no rhythm in the stands. I challenge the spectators to come forth with a new sense of energy for the Basketball team. It is my feeling that the standard pep shouts, rooting songs and cheers are antiquated and should be discarded. Sticks, whistles, drums, tambourines, and any other instrument short of creating a technical foul should be employed.

The rhythms created must be original and true. It is my feeling that this message will strike fear and confusion into the hearts of the opponent and the Basketball team will be on their way to a victorious season.

A Future Story

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

Once about a time, way, way into the future, Professor Obe Wan Kenobe, (ex-film star whose greatest triumph was Star Wars) master of the force and a scholar of just about everything, was conducting his Universal 101 class on planet Zeetron. Today he decided to hold an open class discussion, allowing his students to decide on what topics they wanted to discuss and analyze.

"Oh Great One", (a name he is affectionately referred to by many) "speak to us about the meaning of Third World," said a student whose major is the History of Past Controversies of Primitive Planet Earth.

"Hmm.... Third World, Third World," thought The Great One, with a stab of panic. He remembered that he once was assigned to write a detailed analysis on that very subject before he wa to receive his Doctorate of the Force degree. Only he had waited until the last minute to write the paper, and had talked his old lady into writing it. He never saw the paper, but was told by his professor that it was an excellent paper. Unfortunately, it was destroyed by a group of scientists who thought it would fall into the evil hands of The Past Distruptors. A group of time travelers who were always traveling back into the past with answers and solutions to various problems that the inhabitants of that time period were not ready for.

Thinking of a way out of this uncomfortable position of answering a question he knew very little about, The Great One decided to toss the question back to the class.

After a heated debate that accomplished nothing but mass confusion, The Great One decided to consult The Book of Knowledge, hoping this would shed light on the subject. The Book of Knowledge recorded what the people of Earth had gone on record by stating what they felt was the answer to the many great controversies of their time.

When looking up the term Third World, The Great One and the class found they had to venture far back into Earth's history. Around the 17th century, they found that Europeans whites defined the non-whites of Africa as 'black monkeys' apes, and guerillas.' Later around the 18th century this was revised to 'black sub-human creatures, half-devil, half-human.' Reaching further revision around the 19th century, the United States of American passed a law that stated blacks were considered as a 'piece of property' that could be sold and traded at the will of the owner. Adding more perplexity to the situation was the finding that blacks were later declared to be four-fifths of a man.

"What about other non-whites?" Came the cry from another student, "it appears that the basic focus for the ill-treatment of people throughout that time period by whites was because of the color or physical distinction of one's skin," replied the student with the air of great discovery evident in his voice.

Turning to the topic of Asian-Americans it was learned that whites had gone on record as defining them as 'yellow slanted-eyed devils of the East.' Native-Americans were defined as 'red-faced tomahawk swinging savages'. Latinos were defined as 'greasy-haired brown babies'. The list went on, and on.

"Hey guess what?" Came the shout of one student who was reading the book.

"Yes, what is it?" answered The Great One, while wishing he had taken his sabbitical this quadrant as planned. (A quadrant is equivalent in earth terms to a semester).

"After reviewing all the terminology and definitions given to non-whites, by whites," remarked the student, "the 20 Century witnessed non-whites forced into defining themselves in order to justify their existence in schools, on jobs, and in politics. And that whites who resided as the judges of non-whites, rejected the definitions that non-whites developed of themselves.

"On what grounds were the definitions rejected?" asked another student.

"Well it seems that whites developed another revision of their definition of non-whites," came the answer.

"What is the new revision?" asked all who were present, including The Great One.

"According to The Book of Knowledge, a group of students at The University of Massachusetts went on record as leading a movement to define non-whites as,..... as,..... the student's voice trailed off.

"As what?" thundered the command from The Great One.

"As non-whites now being revised to be un,.... a State of Mind," the timid voice replied.

After 10 tolcheks of silence, (tolcheks equivalent in earth terms to minutes) another student raised a tendril for attention.

"Yes," said The Great One.

"While we're on the same subject," said the student, "let's discuss the topic of Manipulative Inconsistency with the Intent to Maintain the Imbalance of Power."

It is the end of a winning season for the UMass football team. The Minutemen's successful record includes eight wins, and three losses. In the last regular season Division II poll, they ranked second in the nation.

Black Affairs gives tribute to our brothers on the football team and would like for the Community to share in our salute to them.

We are sad to be losing the services of our graduating seniors, Peter McCarty, Moses Williams, and Billy Coleman. These players have provided counteless moments of excitement for the many UMass football fans, as well as contributing their talents to the Minutemen's winning season.

To these students we wish them nothing but the best in the future ahead.

For our returning brothers, Dennis Dent, Cliff Pedrow, and Dale Holmes, we will be looking forward to seeing them in next year's season.

Once again congratulations to all the brothers.

Billy Coleman — Leading rusher, 1977, gained over 900 yards in 11 games, second leading rusher for a single season in UMass history. Senior.

Dennis Dent — Halfback first two years, switched to split end this year. Fastest runner on the team. Deep threat for QB Mike Fallon. Scored the winning touchdown against Harvard on a 69-yard pass play. Junior.

Moses Williams — senior tight end. Good blocking end. Used a lot in two-tight end situations.

Cliff Pedrow — sophomore, halfback, may be a starter next year because of Coleman's and Dave Douvadjian's graduation. Top rusher on the junior varsity in 1976.

Dale Holmes — Saw limited action as a freshman running back. Showed promise in late-game duties. Freshman.

High Notes...

There's a lot of stuff to cover today so please pay attention!

IMPACT — "The Pac' Is Back" — Fantasy

This is Impact's second LP and once again they avoid taking a back seat in the myriad of R&B vocal groups. The album contains some very tasty material which does well to showcase the talents of not only Damon Harris (Their lead and ex-Temptation.) but also of the rest of the group.

The music is pretty much Philadelphian and this can be attributed to the production of John Davis, a name that has become well known due to his work with Carol Douglas, Arthur Prysock and a few great efforts of his own. While Philly remains the strongest influence, there's a touch of Oakland present in that Davis' forceful horn arrangements are performed ably by the Tower of Power horns section.

With all the impressive people in the background, the focus of this LP is still the talents of Impact. The vocals are performed with verve and an air of professionalism that brings the message across very nicely. With this, their second LP, Impact goes further to the front.

PLAYER'S ASSOCIATION — "Born to Dance" — Vanguard

A lot of groups have claimed their music to come under the heading of Disco-Jazz. While many have claimed, the only group in my estimation to come close is the Player's Association. Since their debut LP, they've laid down some music that is the only qualified Disco-Jazz on the market.

While others pretend, The Player's Assoc. continues to successfully combine the elements of the two fields and formulate a truly unique sound. From the world of Disco, they take the beat and Percussion to create the drive that puts the folks on the floor. The Jazz element comes from the superlative horn arrangements of Chris Hill. Their horns are very Jazz in that they are "free" and they take on a very improvisational air.

By taking the best of two wolds, The Association has once again created an LP that you can pat your feet or listen to with equal pleasure. Please allow me to highly recommend this one for disco and jazz buffs alike.

PARLIAMENT — "Funkentelechy vs. The Placebo Syndrome" — Casablanca

From the highest plane of funk in the universe we are bestowed with another piece of funktionized vinyl designed to please our tender earholes. Another edition of P-Funk is here for all Earthlings to behold as sent by the good Dr. Funkenstein himself.

We are grateful to receive Funktelenchy vs. The Placebo Syndrome as it tells the account of the destruction of Sir Nose Voidoffunk at the hands of Starchild sent by Dr. Funkenstein armed with his greatest invention — The Bop Gun. The message is delivered in the good Dr.'s typical un-typical style as we're turned on to his latest vehicle of foot-stomping, body-moving P-Funk — "Bop Gun (Endangered Species)". We are also visually endowed (for a total funk experience) with a giant poster depicting the infamous Sir Nose Voidoffunk and a comic book inspired by the good Dr. himself. Before leaving me in awe and advancing into the space-time warp he warmly calls home, Dr. Funkenstein asked me to remind all his earth-bound Clones, Maggots and even his mere earthling followers that it "Ain't Nothin' But a Party (Don't take it seriously)"!!!

While listening to B.M.C.P. last Saturday, I heard Bro. Rick Grant air the soundtrack of the play, "For Colored Girls Who Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Was Enough". While I truly enjoyed it, I cannot sit tight after the comment he made regarding the musical — "Bubbling Brown Sugar". Rick said (this is not a direct quote) that plays like "Bubbling Brown Sugar" are musicals that depict Black people as singing and dancing and that these things aren't what Black people should be about.

I feel that this is wrong and that "Bubbling Brown Sugar" is not a "Tom" play that depicts a "plantation atmosphere" (as Bill Hasson wrote earlier this year). This play was designed to show the Harlem scene as the place where Black people were allowed to perform uncompromisingly for their brothers and sisters. The show was designed to show places such as The Cotton Club, Small's Paradise, The Savoy and The Appollo Theatre not as spots where the Harlem "coons" went to dance themselves into a harmless euphoria. The play showed these places as spots where very many Black artists, playwrites, etc. were first able to showcase their talents. The Ellingtons, Calloways, the Bessie Smiths, the Fats Wallers debuted and showcased their talents in Harlem in many cases because at first they couldn't perform anywhere else. In Harlem, Paul Robeson laid down the guidelines for the modern Black comedian taking him away from the Steppin' Fetchit mold. Also in Harlem, Blacks were shown to be able to show tender love in a love song whereas beforehand, Blacks only sang (in thought only) jumpin' jive songs effectively.

I'd like to say that the Harlem scene of the 30's and 40's compares very favorably with playin' it cool at house parties and givin' it up in the back seat of a Buick. To deny the message of "Bubbling Brown Sugar" is to deny our greatest artists (a la Ellington, Calloway, Bessie Smith, Louis Armstrong et al) in their finest hours.

This is my last edition and before I go, I'd like to thank all the folks who made it happen. First off, my thanks to all the artists who created and performed the art, the writers who gave it to them, the producers who put it all together and the labels who record to distribute it. I'd also like to thank the label reps who send me the material so I can review it for you. Thanks to Angela for inspiring me to do this and a special thanks to all of you, the readers. With your positive feedback, you made it all worthwhile. I love ya!

Just for the record

Africa, Asia, and Latin America may beat the industrialized world in fully exploiting solar energy, thus escaping agonies that await other areas at the end of the oil era, a research institute said here this weekend.

A study by Denis Hayes of the World Watch Institute, a private, nonprofit organization based in Washington, said less-developed countries will make the switch to using the sun's abundant power because they have little choice.

Mr. Hays said many such countries, faced with little capital and inadequate fuel reserves, already realize they cannot afford to copy industrial nations in making a major commitment to petroleum when world oil production is expected to peak around 1990.

Speaking Tour: Miners Struggle Key Battle For All Workers

Speakers IN BOSTON

- Stearns striker and his wife

Stearns strikers have been on strike for 18 months against the Blue Diamond coal company in eastern Kentucky to bring in the union. The 130 miners have had to struggle against company gun-carrying thugs, court injunctions and scabs. Over one hundred miners and their wives were arrested for picketing but the strikers have remained solid. Most of them are on strike for the first time and as one miner put it, "We thought it was our own private fight but now we know that the working people are behind us. They say it can't be done, but we're doing it." A Stearns striker and his wife will talk about the strike and its importance.

- Member of the Miners Right To Strike Committee

The MRTSC is one of the groups which founded the National United Workers Organization and is a key force in the miners wildcat strike movement. Right now they are actively waging their contract fight and are coming under sharp attacks from the coal operators and their mouthpieces. He'll talk on whats at stake for labor in the miners strike.

Pie-thrower pleads guilty

By ROBERT CAPOZZI
Collegian Staff

The Student Judiciary Board last night delivered a sentence of "Jeopardy" in the trial of Joseph M. Gould, the UMass student accused of throwing a pie at Governor Michael S. Dukakis during a Dec. 2 economics conference in the Campus Center.

After pleading guilty to the charge of "violating the Code of Student Conduct," Gould reacted to the board's decision by yelling, "You're all fucking bastards."

Student Attorney General Jeff Lutsky recommended the sentence of jeopardy which is a "suspended suspension" according to the University of Massachusetts Regulations and Policies.

The Judiciary Board stated the sentence will remain in effect through spring semester 1978 and in accordance with part 2, section B of the book of regulations and policies which states, "During this period a student found guilty of any violation of regulation may expect the suspension to be declared in effect and to be separated from the University."

In asking for a sentence of jeopardy Lutsky said, "The University does not wish to condone such action." He added he wouldn't want this case "to set a precedent" and said the defendant did "trespass" the rights of an "individual who was a guest of this campus."

Recommending a less serious sentence of "Admonition," Defense Attorney Jon B. Hensleigh said a sentence of jeopardy would "look terrible on the defendant's record and giving this person jeopardy for such a minor prank could ruin his academic career."

The lesser sentence of admonition would merely advise the student of his-her faculty conduct and would not be taken as with prejudice by any future judicial board.

Hensleigh added that in throwing the pie Gould was probably "expressing the viewpoints of quite a few students across campus."

In closing, the board informed Gould that the sentence was subject to appeal.

★ DC-3 crash

300-400 feet above the airport level about a mile away. The plane disappeared into the fog and about a minute and a half later I heard his engines cutting out and he went down. I saw it explode in flames."

"It was burning pretty good, as it fell to the ground," another witness said.

The basketball flight was scheduled to leave about 4:30 p.m. CST, but the wife of one of the passengers said it was delayed more than two hours by the bad weather conditions.

A tenth of an inch of rain fell in the hour prior to the crash.

Rescue workers used four-wheel drive vehicles to reach the crash site.

The survivors were rushed to Deaconness Hospital, in Evansville, police said, while bodies of the dead were taken to the university basketball arena and to a police garage.

Among those seen boarding the plane were the team's first-year coach Bobby Watson, Bates; business manager Bob Hudson; and players Steve Miller and Brian Taylor.

This plane crash was another in a long, gruesome line of air sports disasters.

The list of victims of these disasters include a Hall of Fame basketball player, one of the most famous football coaches in U.S. history, a former heavyweight champion of the world and a U.S. Olympic figure skating team.

Other sports figures who have died in air tragedies include members of an Italian soccer club, a well-known pro golfer and members of three U.S. college football teams.

It was New Year's Eve 1973 when four-time batting champion Roberto Clemente crashed off the coast of Puerto Rico moments after takeoff in a four-engine cargo plane on a mercy mission to Nicaragua. Clemente's body has never been recovered.

The first nationally known sports figure to die in an air tragedy was Knute Rockne, who died March 21, 1931. Rockne rose to fame as the football coach who guided Notre Dame from an obscure little school in South Bend, Ind., to a national college power. Rockne's light plane crashed in a corn field in Kansas.

Rocky Marciano, the only unbeaten heavyweight champion in history, died Aug. 31, 1969 in the crash of a private plane. Eight years earlier, Feb. 15, 1961, 18 members of the U.S. Olympic figure skating team died in a jet crash in Belgium.

In 1949, 18 members of the Turin Soccer Club, champion of Italy, perished when their plane crashed into a cathedral, and Tony Lema, nicknamed "Champagne Tony" because he celebrated his victories on the golf tour by treating reporters to the bubbly stuff, died in a crash in 1966.

Sixteen members of the California Polytechnic football team, died in a crash at Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 29, 1960; Wichita State's football coach and several players were among 29 persons who perished, Oct. 2, 1970; and 38 Marshall University players, five coaches and a trainer were among 75 who died in another crash only six weeks later.

Other sports air tragedies involved former middleweight boxing champion Marcel Cerdan in 1949, 13 Brazilian athletes in 1950, six Czechoslovakian hockey players in 1956, seven members of the Manchester United Soccer team of England in 1958, eight Danish soccer players in 1960, catcher Tom Gastall of the Baltimore Orioles in 1956 and second baseman Ken Hubbs of the Chicago Cubs in 1964.

agreed he would try to get the percentage stipulation dropped.

After being questioned as to price increases, McGill said that since costs rise the prices must also rise. Since alcohol and beer is continually consumed, he said, those are the prices that will be going up.

In a general discussion about the need for and the actual expense of a food service operation in the Campus Center, it was brought up by Henry Doyle, BOG member, that the $100,000 used to pay the administrative salaries of Saga could instead be used, and possibly cut if an in-house operation were to be started at UMass for food service.

H$rris said this would probably take nine months to set up, but could be done.

Bahai faith comes to UMass

By LOUISE BRAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Bahai Club currently has a display area on the concourse level of the Campus Center every Monday and Tuesday.

Barry Magnus, a UMass student who was one of the people representing the Bahai Faith at the display said, "We find a great cross section of people at the University stopping at the display."

The display includes pictures of Bahai houses of worship throughout the world and Magnus said, "People who have seen these places in their travels often stop. Others stop out of curiosity about the Bahai literature that may be taken free, or just to talk.

"We Bahai's feel that the Bahai faith has something to offer to each individual's life. By making a public display, people will become interested in the Bahai Faith, investigate its teachings as being useful in their own lives".

The word "Bahai comes from the name of the founder of the faith — Baha'u'llah (Glory of God). A Bahai means a follower of Baha'u'llah. Bahais live in over 300 countries and territories of the world They are people who came from different religious backgrounds, economic and social classes, and different racial and national backgrounds. This faith does not have any priesthood or professional clergy.

The Bahai faith stresses world mindedness. A quote from Bahai writings said, "let your vision be world embracing, rather than confined to your own selves."

The Amherst Bahai Community in cooperation with the local chapter of the United Nations Association sponsored a celebration of the United Nations observance of Human Rights Day. The event was held last Saturday at Amherst Jr. High School. There were 3 main speakers followed by informal socializing.

Dr. Russell Alspach, a representative of the Amherst UN Association and former UMass English teacher said Human Rights Day should remind people that everyone in the world is guaranteed equality, and the world will not realize human rights until "you and I probe into our own hearts and minds and find there tolerance and a much greater word-understanding."

Bill Gibson, a UMass doctoral student, gave a presentation of Bahai Views on Human Rights. He spoke about the need for a "new world order" and a multi racial society. He quoted a Bahai Declaration of Human Obligations and Rights: "The source of human rights is the endowment of qualities, virtues and powers which God has bestowed upon mankind without discrimination of sex, race, creed or nation. To fulfill the possibilities of this devine endowment is the purpose of human existence".

An inspiring moment in the celebration came when Scott Stevenson, a junior high school student, read his award winning essay that analyzed human rights struggled in the past to the present. Amherst School Superintendant, Donald Frizzle, presented Stevenson with a prize of the Chegal stained window that was originally done for the United Nations Building. This gift was from the Amherst Bahai Community.

After the program, everyone was given the opportunity to view displays and art concerning human rights set up through the room. Live music and international foods were provided by the Bahais.

CAOS party a success

By MONICA YATES
Collegian Staff

Members of the staff from Counseling Assistance for Older Students were pleased with the success of a recent party they sponsored.

The party, attended by over 100 students and held in the Alumni House at Amherst College, featured music by Avatar, a local five piece latin-jazz-fund band.

The party was held as a means of bringing older and non-traditional students together with each other and with the rest of the five college community, according to CAOS counselor Christine O'Shea.

Most older students live off campus and may feel isolated, said O'Shea.

"A party like this is a good chance for everyone to get together and have a good time," said Jim Dell, a 27-year-old senior majoring in English who attended the party.

"I'm not an 'older' student, but I wanted to meet some new people. The music is excellent," said Matthew Hyman, a UMass junior. Many of those attending felt the music was largely responsible for the party's success. "You just don't get to hear this kind of music at most UMass parties," said Alicia Burnett, a 25-year-old history major.

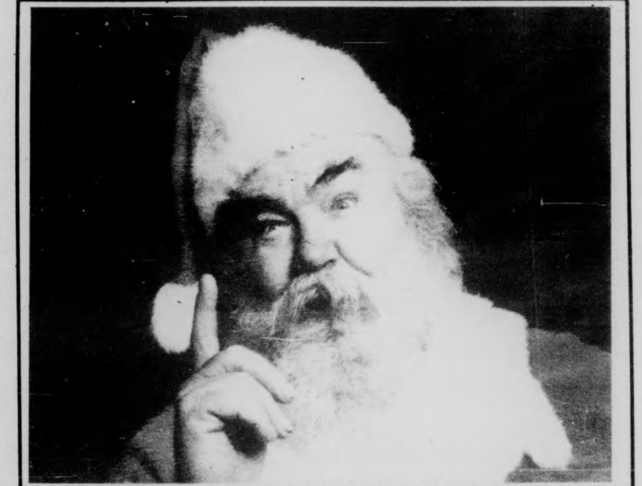
Avatar performed selections by Stevie Wonder, Cannonball Adderly, and Antonio Carlos Jobim. About half the material performed was original, said alto saxophonist Jon Weeks.

The CAOS office serves older students at UMass, who make up 47 per cent of the total student population. Any student over 24 is classified as an older student. The CAOS office, in 207 Hasbrouck, has been in existence since 1974. It is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The program, the only one of its kind in the country, was initiated to fulfill the needs of older students, offering peer counseling, referral, advocacy and support, said O'Shea.

It serves as a model for other institutions interested in setting up agencies for non-traditional student needs.

A party was given by CAOS last year, but, according to Paul Vasconcellas, another CAOS worker, "the music wasn't very good. We lost money." Overall, the staff at CAOS was pleased with the success of this year's party, and plans are being made for a similar one next semester.



"Now I'm not one to say I told you so, but I warned you that finals were coming up soon, and if you don't pass your Chem III exam there'll be nothing but coal in your Christmas stocking."

Dec. 12, 1977 — San Diego, Calif.: Patricia Bartz, 26, jumps for joy moments after her release from jail. She is one of the 142 American prisoners returned from Mexican jails under the exchange program.

American prisoners home from Mexico

SAN DIEGO [AP] — Forty-one American prisoners brought home from Mexican jails as part of a historic swap treaty gained their freedom on parole yesterday. Most rushed from the gates of a federal prison here into the arms of waiting relatives or friends.

Alison Margaret Baughman, 24, of Jefferson Town, Ky., was the first to be freed from the Metropolitan Correctional Center here. As a group of reporters surrounded her, she kissed an unidentified friend. She declined to comment other than to say that freedom "feels fantastic."

James Robert Douglas, 27, of Austin, Texas, said: "The first thing I want to do is get a drink. I've got a little bar picked out right over there."

Douglas, who spent four years and three months in Mexican prisons for cocaine possession, said, "I'm afraid my life is going to be changed. Right now, I'm not sure just how. I think I'll go work in a circus."

As many as 44 men and women were eligible for immediate release, either because they had served two-thirds of their sentences — which made them eligible under the treaty between the United States and Mexico — or had enough "good behavior" time to reach that level.

Of the 142 Americans who have been returned, most were flown from Mexico City last weekend after the return of 36 Mexicans from U.S. jails. Fifteen of the Americans were bused from La Mesa prison in Tijuana last Monday.

Two more airlifts, carrying about 100 more prisoners, are scheduled to arrive in San Diego on Friday and Saturday.

FDA rejects naming cigarettes as drugs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration has turned down a request to classify cigarettes as a drug and make them available only by prescription, the group which made the request said yesterday.

But the group — Action on Smoking and Health — said the agency has not closed the door to some sort of cigarette regulation, perhaps by classifying cigarettes as "devices."

ASH, backed by two former U.S.surgeons general and more than two dozen anti-smoking groups, earlier this year asked the FDA to declare cigarettes to be a drug because they contain nicotine and have drug-type addictive effects on users.

"interestingly, the FDA did not argue that Congress had taken away their power to regulate cigaretts," ASH said. "Instead, the FDA made it clear that it is still considering regulating cigarettes under a less stringent portion of the FDA Act.

"In its petition ASH had urged the FDA to regulate cigarettes as a 'device' for administering nicotine if it decided not to regulate cigarettes or nicotine as 'drugs.'

"Shortly thereafter the Anesthesiology Device Classification Panel of the FDA unanimously recommended to the FDA that it should assert jurisdiction over cigarette filters.

Egyptian and Israeli delegates talk peace

CAIRO, Egypt [AP] — Egyptian and Israeli delegates huddled in a hotel room yesterday night, sipping coffee and discussing procedure hours before the start of the Cairo conference that participants hope will lay the groundwork for Middle East peace.

In Washington, the White House said Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin will confer there Friday with President Carter "on how best to continue the move toward a just peace settlement in the Middle East." The Israeli government press office said the trip's purpose was to discuss "problems connected with the peacemaking process," but did not specify what the problems were.

A senior U.S. official said in Damascus that Syrian President Hafez Assad, convinced that Egypt has betrayed the Arab cause, told Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance his country could not attend the Cairo peace talks and might not even attend a Geneva conference. Vance, on a Middle East tour, met with Assad for four hours Tuesday.

The meeting between Egyptian and Israeli delegates in a room of Cairo's century-old Mena House hotel lasted 90 minutes and focused on technicalities of how the talks should be conducted when they begin Wednesday, an Israeli spokesman said.

The talks will be the first open negotiations between Egypt and Israel in the 26-year history of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Representatives from United States and the United Nations and two observers from the Vatican will join the Egyptians and Israelis. The other invited Arab nations have refused to attend.

A White House spokesman said Begin requested the sudden meeting with Carter. Asked why the prime minister asked for the session, White House press secretary Jody Powell replied: "I have no information to provide on what the prime minister might wish to discuss with the president."

He said the Egyptian government was informed of Begin's travel plans Monday "and I can characterize their reactions as positive."

As the talks neared, Egyptian chief delegate Ahmed Esmat Abdel Meguid and his deputy, Osama el Baz, met with their Israeli counterparts, Eliahu ben-Elissar and Meir Rosenne, an Israeli spokesman said.

FBI infiltrators expose underground revolution

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Two FBI agents who infiltrated the ultra-secret political underground say they trained in the desert with a tiny band of revolutionaries who were preparing a new campaign on violence.

According to one high FBI official, the group "was talking about assassinations, about sniping, about blowing up buildings, about putting a bomb under the seat of some judge's car."

Five persons, including the 62-year-old "patriarch" of the leftist underground movement, are now in custody, facing arraignment today on charges stemming from an alleged plot to bomb the office of Rep. John Briggs, R-Calif., an outspoken opponent of homosexual rights.

Though the FBI was able to engineer the arrest of five persons allied with the radical Weather Underground, leaders of the revolutionary group — such as the best known, Bernardine Dohrn — remain fugitives.

"If we knew where they were, we'd pick them up tonight," says one FBI official.

Leftist sources surmise the FBI may have decided to finally "surface" its undercover agents out of frustration for the failure to locate better known radical leaders.

On Nov. 19, Richard Giannotti and William Reagan ended their long undercover work with the five arrests, exposing a rare view of the left-wing activists' secret, and sometimes violent, life underground.

The undercover agents say they began working with five revolutionaries last May, directing firearms training in a secluded Mojave desert area, and receiving instructions on explosives from two women who led a small "combat team." One agent said mis-information on firearms was purposefully supplied.

The FBI believes the group was a part of the Revolutionary Committee that split from the Weather Underground's leadership in a feud that involved male sexism in the Weather Underground command and its decision to downplay violent tactics.

Among those arrested was Clayton Van Lydegraf, the 62-year-old San Francisco leader of the Prairie Fire Organizing Committee.

Also arrested were Judith Bisell, Leslie Mullin, Michael Justesen and Marc Curtis Perry, veteran antiwar activists who were active in the Seattle area during the 1960s.

The agents were trusted members of the group, but even so they never knew anything more than the first name of the others — and then only "code names": Esther for Ms. Mullin, Josie for Mrs. Bissell, Vince for Perry, Rudy for Justesen and Harry for Van Lydegraf.

The committee, whose name is drawn from Mao's belief that a single spark can ignite a prairie fire, is led mostly by women, according to the FBI report, along with Van Lydegraf. An above-ground "support group" of the Weather Underground, it has become more independent in the past year due to the split in the Weather Underground.

The small group was led by the women who, in turn, took orders from Van Lydegraf, who on behalf of the Prairie Fire organization was "directing the operation as to targets and methods to be used," according to the FBI.

Tornado hits Houston

By JAMES L. OVERTON

HOUSTON UPI — The occupants of Frank Lawrence's American Auto Parts store huddled against the damp wind blowing through the shattered plate glass window.

After yesterday's surprise tornado was over six-packs of cold beer and sandwiches appeared and the conversation turned to the dark funnel cloud that jumped across this semi-rural side of town.

"This is the first tornado I've been through," said Lawrence, 39. "I've often wondered what it looked like up close. I got a bird's eye view this time.

"It was black and whirling. It was very dark. The whole thing started out about 10 after eight. Then it got quiet for a second. Then it sounded like an old buzz saw cranking off."

For the next minute or so things got a little confused, around the auto parts store, which sits at the intersection of Liberty Road and what locals call the Old Beaumont Highway.

"That's when the glass came flying through the office," he said. "I didn't have to tell anyone to hit the floor, but everybody did. I did, too.

"I don't think we got the full force of it, judging by other damage. I believe we'd been dead, if we got hit hard here. We got the fringe of it rather than the full center. It scared the dickens out of everybody. But there's a lot of people worse off than we are."

Just down the street in this wooded residential area, Manuel Hernandez, 37, loaded his few worldly possessions into a blue pickup truck, surveying the indistinguishable remains of what had been his mobile home.

Across the street, a faded orange and black "closed" sign floated in the windowless door of Jack's Barber Shop. The contents of the interior were strewn throughout the small, dilapidated frame building set back from the road.

Next door a group of workers on one side carried the contents of a service station and loaded it into a covered truck.

Mr. and Mrs. G.J. Martin, both in their 70s, lived on the same street corner 43 years and never saw anything like the wind fury that blew through their neighborhood.

Alleged CIA spy released

WASHINGTON UPI — The Cuban government will release before the end of the year an American citizen imprisoned since 1963 on spy charges, State Department officials said yesterday.

The officials said the Cubans informed the U.S. diplomatic mission in Havana they intended to free, Frank Emmick, 63, of Toledo, Ohio. No date was given, but the officials said they believe "it means within a week or two."

Reps. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., and Richard Nolan, D-Minn., who visited Cuba this month, said earlier in the day they were told by the State Department that Emmick would be returned to the United States before the end of 1977.

Emmick, who has a wife and two children living in Toledo, was arrested in Havana in 1963 and charged with being the head of the American CIA in Cuba. The two lawmakers said Emmick denied the charge but was sentenced to 30 years and in 1973 was given another 20 years for smuggling a letter through the Cuban underground to then CIA Director Richard Helms.

Richmond and Nolan talked with Emmick and four other Americans held prisoner in Havana during their Dec. 5 visit. They said Emmick has suffered two heart attacks while in jail.

They said they appealed to Castro to release four other Americans in Havana jails but no word had as yet been received on them. They are Lawrence Lunt, 53, of Wyoming; Juan Tur, 61, Tampa, Fla.; Everett Jackson, 37, Garden Grove, Calif.; and Claudio Rodriguez Morales, 48, of Puerto Rico.

Judge to rule on suit to keep feminist poem in Chelsae H.S. library

Her Say News Service —

Boston Federal Judge Joseph Tauro said he will rule next March on a class action suit filed to keep a feminist poem on the library shelves of Chelsea High School.

The poem, titled "The City to a Young Girl," is included in poetry anthology which the Chelsea Board of Education wants banned from the library. The Board of Education has charged the poem is "objectionable, salacious and obscene" because it contains certain words describing a woman's body.

The class action suit was filed by The Right to Read Defense Committee following a July ban on the book by school officials.

The poem's author, Jody Caravaglia, wrote the verse as a 15-year-old high school student in New York City. She said her poem "expresses feminine outrage against public lechery, an obscene dehumanizing situation." The poem contains the words "pussy", "cunt", and "tit."

In the meantime, The American Civil Liberties Union in Ludlow, Mass. said it will take "whatever action is necessary" to get the internationally distributed health manual Our Bodies Ourselves, back in use at a local high school there.

The high school prohibited the book, which is widely used by women as a non-sexist guide on birth control, treatment of venereal disease, pregnancy and childbirth, from being used in a senior girl's home economics class.

Potential foster parents to be screened for sexual offenses

BOSTON UPI — Legislation to allow state officials to screen potential foster parents for past sexual offenses was filed in the Massachusetts Legislature Tuesday, following the breakup of a nationwide boy prostitution ring.

Senate Majority Leader William Bulger, D-Boston, filed the bills at the request of Suffolk County District Attorney Garrett Byrne, whose office broke the ring last week. Bulger said action on the four bills probably would come early next year.

Several of the boys victimized by the ring were wards of the state, said Byrne; and, while none of the 24 men indicted were foster parents, one child was put by a state agency in the home of a person allegedly involved operation.

Byrne said he wants "not only to allow, but compel all state agencies to conduct a thorough and vigorous investigation before a child is placed in a state foster home." He said the privacy law now protects criminal records of would-be foster parents who have been convicted for child-abuse crimes or any crime deterimental to the moral fiber of young children placed in the home."

However, Albert Halprin, counsel for the state Security and Privacy Council, said Byrne was wrong. "Mr. Byrne knows, or should know, the criminal offender record information law was amended this year to deal with this type of situation. The only requirement for providing information about foster parents' sex offenses or convictions which jeopardize foster children is that the disclosure outweigh the privacy interest involved," said Halprin.

Seventeen of the 24 men indicted by a grand jury last week have been arraigned or are in custody in Massachusetts or in other states. Seven are still being sought. The charges ranged from rape and sodomy to indecent assault.

The indictments capped a several month long probe that determined as many as 63 young boys — between 8 and 13 years old — having been involved in the sex ring working out of a private home in the Boston suburb of Revere and attracting "customers" from around the country.

Byrne, who said more indictments are expected, has turned over to California authorities information which alleges many of the young victims had been taken to Los angeles to be used in child pornography. Copies of such films had been seized as evidence.

Mondale assesses Carter's first year

By CHERYL ARVIDSON

WASHINGTON UPI — President Carter overwhelmed Congress with legislation this year, and the plan for 1978 is to set administration priorities for the best effect, Vice President Walter Mondale said Tuesday.

During a breakfast interview with reporters, Mondale recalled that, in planning for nuclear war, "if you fire too many missiles too close together, they kill each other off," and that may be what happened with the legislative package.

In retrospect, he said, Carter probably wanted too much and sent too much to Congress and ended up "clogging the machinery."

"As a new president," Mondale continued, "I think he was more optimistic about the expedition with which the legislative process works than many old timers in this town. Now, with a year's experience, he's seen the problems he's working with first hand.

"What he's learned about the process will permit him to better schedule and pace his proposals. That doesn't mean he wants a slower pace...He's an activist president."

On the other hand, Mondale said, Carter's focus on a variety of "inherently unpopular, profoundly complicated" issues that "must be solved" was helpful in getting public debate started, and public reaction is vital.

"It's good to know what you can do and can't do," Mondale said.

The vice president said the administration will "seek to develop a range of priorities for presidential actions in the next year so to be sure to stage these matters — set schedules — so it is easier for Congress to deal with and for the public to understand."

Mondale said there will be few legislative initiatives from the White House, in 1978. With the energy bill, Panama Canal treaties, tax and welfare reform already on the agenda and the on-going responsibilities like appropriations, "you have a major schedule in place already for next year."

Monnale defended the administration's dealings with Congress.

NAACP links prison deaths to negligence

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The Connecticut NAACP Tuesday said a federal report into deaths of five inmates in the Danbury prison fire was a cover-up and its own study showed negligence contributed to the tragedy.

According to Ben F. Andrews Jr., executive director of the state NAACP, the deaths and injuries to 50 other inmates resulted from "inexcusably poor judgement" on the part of prison supervisors.

"The report by the federal investigators has not shed any light on the when, where or now of the fire — and we have rejected it," Andrews said of the Bureau of Prisons study.

He said the NAACP's inquiry revealed "a serious absence of balance between safety and security," at the medium-security prison in the July 7 blaze fed when flames ignited flammable overhead paneling.

For example, a lieutenant at the medium security facility was "more involved in collecting keys from other correctional staff members than in assisting in the evacuation," which was counter to prison policy, Andrews said.

"We're talking about the locking and relocking of doors," Andrews told a news conference Tuesday, "that ultimately cost the life of inmate Donnell Proctor."

Andrews said Proctor had been described by federal investigators as panicking shortly before his death, but had in fact "in the last moments of his life acted heroically" in an attempt to warn other inmates away from a locked door.

Andrews said if the prison's fire regulations had not been ignited "no lives would have been lost and injuries would have been substantially reduced, if not totally avoided."

One of the most crucial points made in the NAACP report, said Andrews, "is that at least one of the officers had a key which could have opened the metal door containing the standpipe fire hose.

"This fire hose has sufficient water and length to have extinguished the fire in a matter of minutes" even in the hands of inexperienced firefighters, he said. It was not used.

The NAACP reports also concluded additional lives might have been lost in the blaze if a female correctional officer — whom Andrews identified as Leorah Richardson — had not disobeyed orders by opening doors instead of locking them, enabling trapped occupants to flee.

Instead of being credited for her action she was transferred out of state along with some inmates whose testimony was crucial to the NAACP probe, Andrews said. At the time Andrews said the woman was told not to talk to reporters.

Andrews also said on-site interviews with prison staff and inmates revealed an inmate injured in the fire was denied admission to the prison hospital and later died on prison grounds. He identified the inmate as Robert L. Moore.

Because the federal report is "lacking in objectivity," said Andrews, the NAACP is calling for further investigation by Congress and the federal General Accounting Office.

Andrews said the NAACP undertook its own investigation to explore apparent "racial overtones" in connection with the fire, since all the inmates who died or were injured in the fire were black.

He said there was no hard evidence discrimination played a part, but he didn't dismiss the possibility.

Andrews said copies of the NAACP report will be released to the families of inmates and their attorneys "for possible legal action.

He also said the NAACP is asking federal prison officials for an autopsy on a sixth inmate, James Feeney, who died November 29.

Team searches fishing boat lost off Nantucket

BOSTON [UPI] — An international air and sea search team yesterday combed 19,000 square miles of chilly Atlantic Ocean in icy weather off Nantucket Island for a missing 8-foot fishing boat with 13 Maine and Massachusetts men aboard.

Seas were reported "relatively light," but one Coast Guard helicopter was forced to turn back because of icing, Coast Guard spokesman Dale Gardner said. The Coast Guard cutter Active and six aircraft from the U.S. Coast Guard, Navy, Air Force, and Canadian Forces were looking for the scalloper Navigator reported missing Saturday.

The team was concentrating on an area of "roughly two squares" Gardner said. "One search area is a smaller square extending off Cape Cod and Nantucket. The larger square extends from Nantucket Island south to 230 miles east of Atlantic City, N.J.," he said.

The sea patrol was to continue through the night, with the Coast Guard cutter Sherman replacing the Active, but the air search was to be called off for the day at darkness if it proved successful.

The Navigator was due to return to New Bedford, Mass., Friday after a 10-day fishing trip.

The vessel was last contacted Nov. 30 about 15 miles northeast of Nantucket by the fishing vessel Oceanic out of New Bedford, Gardner said. "Previously we believed the last contact with the Navigator was Dec. 7," he said.

The National Weather Service had predicted snow possibly changing to rain Tuesday and rough eight-foot seas, but Gardner said seas were only three feet.

"We have two search objects in mind," said Coast Guard spokesman John Bablich. "One, is a vessel and the other a life raft.

"I think the life raft has a canopy that automatically would open up to protect the crew from the elements," he said. "That would be a key part of survival of passengers. Survival time would be extended if they were in that."

Senate to establish lobby

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday night the Student Senate passed a motion allocating money for the establishment of a legislative advocacy bureau in Boston. This action is part of an overall student government program supporting the Massachusetts State Student Association and the establishment of a student lobbying office on Beacon Hill.

This office is now a reality. During the month of January, people from UMass-Amherst and other public schools in Massachusetts will be working in Boston, through a legislative internship program. They will be doing research on many issues that affect students both directly and indirectly. In order for any lobby or advocacy group to be effective, they must educate both the legislature and their constituents [you] on what's going on. Only if we care about the quality of our education will others bother to care.

If you are interested in working on this project, applications are available in the SGA President's office in room 430 of the Student Union Building. All applications must be submitted by 5:00 p.m. on Friday, 16 December 1977. The position pays $50 per week for four weeks and we are attempting to arrange for credits.

This project is of immense importance to all students at the university and at other institutions of public higher education across the state. We need a strong voice in Boston. We can only succeed with the help and support of many students across the state. Therefore, we are extending an open invitation to all of you to stop by the office on the 3rd floor of 3 Joy Street on Beacon Hill whenever you are in Boston this January. So please stop by and talk to us about how you can help to insure that the education you receive will be the best one possible. Have a merry Christmas, a happy New Year and come and visit us this intersession.

"A warm thought" for Belchertown

To the Editor:

The Student Health Advisory Board is sponsoring a community service project "A Warm Thought" — a Christmas tree for Belchertown State School Residents. Small winter garments are being sought to help decorate the tree which will be delivered to the School shortly before Christmas.

The tree is set up in the main lobby of the University Health Services. Please stop by. Your contribution of new or used-clean mittens, hats, gloves, scarfs and the like will be much appreciated. To those of you who have already helped, thanks!

Response to Ross's lecture

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the December 12 article regarding Matthew Ross' lecture. Through the reporting of the lecture an allusion was given that "Lebanon still showed signs of the Civil War of 1975-1976 between the progressives and the conservatives, etc., and that the war which was won by the conservatives, after Syrian intervention, resulted in heavy damages and a Lebanese government which is run by Syria.... Tal al Zaatar is to the Palestinian people what Warsaw is to the Jews. The survivors were resettled at Damour and Tal al Zaatar was destroyed."

I am very sorry that Mr. Ross' lecture on the Palestinian people passed without my knowledge. As a Lebanese Maronite, I assure you that if the lecture didn't come at exam time I would have been able to obtain more information concerning Mr. Ross' trip and his associations during the visit. Needless to say, I feel that his hosts were Palestinians.

Concerning Syria's invasion of Lebanon, I would like to say that Syria never had the idea of invasion. They intervened at the request of the Lebanese government and will leave when asked. The only reason for Syria's intervention was to save humanity from what is called the P.L.O. or the Palestinian terrorists. Lebanon is for the Lebanese and not for the Palestinians. I shall insist on saying that because I'm sure Mr. Ross' source of information did not tell him that Tal al Zaatar is a Lebanese place, and that it was a camp run by Palestinian terrorists.

The camp was responsible for the assassination of thousands of Lebanese. How did Mr. Ross dare mention Damour, the village where Palestinians were responsible for the killing of children and the raping of women? In addition, fetuses were carved from their mother's wombs, nuns were raped, and priests were brutally murdered. These facts go against their case. Palestinian terrorists say that their way to destroy Israel is to begin by destroying Christians in my homeland. I don't think that terrorists such as these would want to live in peace in Lebanon or in Israel.

Polish-Americans deserve respect

To the Editor:

It didn't seem to take long for a clipping on one of the bulletin boards in Herter Hall describing life in Poland to be defaced with writing. This writing both reflects the ignorance and contempt of Poland and Polish people in the defacer [which is certainly present in the minds of many persons on the campus] and perpetuates a common, but psychologically harmful stereotypical put-down of Poles [and Polish-Americans] as a group. Such a put-down of any ethnic or minority group should not be welcome on any campus, where people are hopefully learning to be more open-minded as well as to pursue a career.

Perhaps such persons can be helped out of their ignorance and contempt of minority peoples if they take courses here at UMass which will educate them about the different cultural as well as radical groups in the world. For example, the Slavic Department on the fourth floor of Herter Hall offers various courses dealing with Slavic [and Slavic-American] people, all taught by experienced and dedicated instructors. It can easily be an enjoyable as well as enlightening experience to take one of these course.

In the meantime, here is something to think about: the majority of Polish-Americans are laboring people, and a considerable number of America's laboring people are Polish-Americans and other ethnics. Where would this country be, where could it go, without its laboring people? It is time that these people get greater respect than they presently do.

Sheep shearings to fight the freeze

By NAISMITH DARLINGEER

It was raining Currier and Ives out there and we were waiting it out at the Host of the Highways, being force fed "Frosty the Snowman", as it was piped in through the air waves.

It has arrived; and let's face it, it's here to stay a while. Each year a good fifty per cent of us, gambling on another week of clemency, are caught with our pants down as the blistering New England winds fan our cheeks.

Now I wasn't wearing my Bermuda shorts that day, but I must admit to being guilty of unheeding the Boy Scout's motto: I was not prepared and I can't remember a winter when I have been.

Let those among us, not guilty of the same, cast the first moan. Since Plymouth Rock, New England winters have been no mystery to us. Just look at the ads in the newspapers: there's a sale on skis, hockey equipment, down-type jackets and vests, sweaters and impregnable Siberian boots. Scattered throughout the latest issue of Yankee you can find French, Scandanavian, or old fashion New England cast iron wood and coal stoves, Icelandic scarves, "Down East" flannels, and the ever popular "Original Irish Country Hat from the rugged coast" is displayed on every other page.

Now if that's not enough, the figurehead of New England's fuel famine, New Hampshire Governor Meldrim Thomson, is sunning himself and family in Taiwan, where granite and snow are unheard of.

Those of use left behind must shell out the tender for the price of oil while the cost of keeping warm is ever on the rise.

It was just a year ago, on December 15 at a minute past 7 a.m., that 7.5 million gallons of heavy No. 6 crude oil went down off the Nantucket coast. The Argo Merchant was bound for Salem, Massachusetts with a hull full of the precious petroleum.

A New England winter brought her under and immediately we began looking for someone to blame. Whether or not the captain or the crew were at fault, it is our dependency on imported oil that was the true culprit.

At this stage of the game New England cannot survive without oil. Though we have suffered through more than 300 harsh winters, the first half of them without any oil at all, our progress has brought us to a point where blood and oil share parallel prominence in our personal and financial lives.

Last week Thomson visited Northampton and told whoever would listen that New England needs a "readily available and inexpensive source of energy. If you can find a way to produce energy better than nuclear power," he said, "well, that's fine with me."

He then outlined a method that would provide both energy and employment for the six states.

"Some 86 per cent of New Hampshire land alone is forested," he said. "With an annual harvest of 2 million cords of wood, 45 per cent soft and 55 per cent hard wood, we could lay it out 4 feet high, 8 feet wide from Concord, N.H. to Los Angeles" if production was increased.

He said that the wood industry in New Hampshire alone could provide an additional 4500 jobs.

The trees were here long before the Pilgrims; they were the first source of fuel and are rapidly becoming the latest discovery in meeting our needs. For one third of the world wood has been the only source for heating and cooking while it figures as only one per cent of the energy consumption of this country today.

Back in warmer months, energy exhibits dotted the Western Massachusetts landscape offering countless alternatives to our existing oil and natural gas methods as well as to nuclear means of energy production. In early October Gov. Michael S. Dukakis told an audience at the University of Massachusetts that he would like to see this state "take the lead" in solar energy development.

Last week he nominated Meldrim Thomson as chairman of the New England Regional Commission. Dukakis said that Thomson had "mellowed through the year" on energy matters. But Thomson told reporters last week that he had been nominated because Dukakis, "I find, is now mellowing on energy."

As anti-nuke protestors patrolled the sidewalks outside the hotel where Thomson was addressing a gathering of the Hampshire County Republican Club, he said that the protestors should "divert their energies to a constructive end towards the good of America."

"If only they were industrious Americans, not afraid to work," he said, "then we would have a strong America for a thousand years."

New England was born and raised by solid working stock and as long as cold winds blow down from the north it will continue to produce more of the same. We will survive this winter as we have survived every winter in the past and the hard winters to come.

Nuclear power facilities have a life expectancy of about 40 years, according to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. After their expiration, their radioactive waste products will pose a threat for more than 50,000 years.

This is not the New England that I have known. The chill factor is a part of New England tradition; part of the New England image. We have accepted it; many of us have learned to love it. We will continue to bundle up against the cold, to fight it with woolen sweaters, heavy mittens, and hot chocolates by the fire.

Blame it on the cold snap

Brrrrrrrrrrr....

Yesterday's Collegian lead story was headlined, "Work study hiring frozen". So what else is new? The undergraduate psychology office suffered from frozen typewriters yesterday, and my sources tell me the frost kill had devastating effects on the campus marijuana crop.

Right now I'm typing with my thumbs (mittens) and wearing my winter coat. My most creative moments come while writing "in the raw" so please excuse me if this column turns out to be a bore...blame it on the cold snap.

George (Meany) has been scratching his brain and doing up toe-shoes for years. His parents gave him a fish tank last Christmas to teach him responsibility. At least he knew how to clean out the filter...

I've always been a big fan of dormitory life, and I was pleased to see that a survey recently conducted for the Residential Resource Management Office found that of 146 students asked, some 52 per cent said they were generally "satisfied" with their residential hall. Of course, that means that nearly half the students were either unsatisfied or too cold to comment.

ZZZZZZZZZZZZZ....caffeine shock is setting in. Eight cups of coffee and 12 cans of Coca-Cola in the last 24 hours. Last night at 4:30 a.m. I couldn't remember who wrote, "Who's afraid of Edward Albee?" and started howling like a Woolf.

Hunter Thompson called it "bad craziness," although for him the state was drug-induced. While some of us may find LSD conducive to our studies, the majority are tripping on NO-DOZ and Monarch notes....

I stopped in for advice from my next door neighbor. In his room were four people with pens sticking out of their ears. They were listening to Alice Coltrane's "Ghana Nila" and rocking back and forth in their chairs. One of them smiled at me and said, "Being leisurely is very close to wanting to get lucky." Another one agreed. "What is rational is usually the hardest to explain," he explained.

Bad Craziness...

A good friend was sitting in the corner swatting at imaginary bats with a slide rule. "Hey," he grinned. "Let's do up some toe-shoes." But the others remained seated, one murmuring something about a tri-cornered crepe suzette and "the ramblin' P." Another was carrying on a conversation with her pocket calculator.

These are not normal people, you may be thinking. But alas, exam week is upon us, and the normal takes a menacing lurch toward the maniacal. Have you ever scratched your brain? Take a Bic pen, stick it in your eye and twist gently to relieve tension.

On the other hand, George Meany was reelected at age 83. George has been scratching his brain and doing up toe-shoes for years. His parents gave him a fish tank last Christmas to teach him responsibility. At least he knew how to clean out the filter...

I was going to finish off this column like everyone else with a list of Christmas gifts, but I've grown terribly stingy ever since I sold my soul to socialism (the evils of money and what not, so I keep it out of circulation). So I offer this final list of messages which will be of little interest to them what doesn't know me:

To Michael: You don't know what you're in for.

To Gail: Bon voyage

To Tony and Bob: Best of luck out there in the cold, cruel world.

To f.b.: Takee Outee

To B.J., Fitz, and Kathy: B.C.

To B. Cliff: Give me a hard time next semester and I'll ruin your name campus-wide.

To the 13th: Thanks for the parties, gang.

To my readers (all four of you): Have a happy holiday season.

Corrections in the grad senate meeting report

To the Editor:

I'd like to clear up some confusing statements in the December 6th article titled "Graduate Senate opposes Puryear's replacement plan". First of all the title is incorrect. The Graduate Senate is on record as supporting Chancellor Bromery's motion [made in the faculty senate meeting of Dec. 1]. The intent of that motion is to make time for the administration to receive from the faculty more feedback on the reorganization plan before implementation of any plan. What we are opposing is having the administration of the graduate school reorganized without having answers on how that will affect graduate students.

One of the main problems that surrounds this whole issue is the lack of clear information. The budgetary processes, as well as a major portion of administrative detail, is kept mystified, so that the students aren't able to repond quickly [or sometimes at all] to changes that occur within that system.

The statement attributed to me about the Graduate Schools budget is also inaccurate. The Graduate school at the present time has money designated for its use. It reports to the Provost on its budget and the Provost has final authority over any budget within the Academic area. However, this is still a different situation than having the budget arise from [be designed in] the Provost's office. It may be more efficient, managerially speaking, to have the budget be designed and implemented from within the Provosts office, but that process would not allow for the more independent perspective that the Graduate Dean now furnishes. It is our belief that the Dean of the Graduate School is in a situation that allows for alot of direct contact with graduate faculty and graduate students. This situation allows for a different perspective than that of the rest of the administration. And graduate students need that kind of direct liason to the administration to handle problems unique to our situation.

I did not however in any way categorically state that if the Provost's office assumes responsibility for the graduate offices they would become inaccessible to graduate students. What was said by many graduate students at the meeting, including myself, was that we fear if all the administrative details were to be thrown into Whitmore with the undergraduate process, we would be lost in the shuffle of that already overburdened system. Indeed undergraduates would also lose out because of the increase in numbers.

Again, I did not mean to imply that the main problem lay with not knowing who had the authority over these decisions on reorganization. The question of who has authority was made in reference to the fact that the Board of Trustees could come back after this is settled and decide to re-evaluate the organizational structure of UMass, especially if the Parks plan for reorganization of higher education passed in the legislature. It was not intended to challenge the authority of the Chancellor or the Provost per se.

Line status and staff status were clarified for those present at the meeting. I did not say that the Dean of the Graduate School has line status. I said he made some decisions that were line decisions, but he also has many staff functions. One of the suggestions that other graduate students brought up for "solving" the problem was to make the Dean's a line status position.

I also stated that Associate Provosts could be fired more easily because they were staff — not because they have "little weight".

There was a history presented as to the change in how the univeristy management develops. It used to be that most of the administrators of a university arose from the faculty ranks. This was at a time when universities were small, elite institutions. Today, with the rise of massive institutions, the administration is having increasingly to fulfill the role of management. And like in any other corporation, the management wants the right to "efficiently" run things. In fact, if you read Paul Parks' reorganization plan, it makes the suggestion that the administration does not need to come from within the institution; that it can be brought in from the outside. Perhaps faculty do not make good managers and that one does not need to come from the faculty to be able to run an educational insitution smoothly.

[It should be noted that at the present time the Dean of the Graduate School, the Provost, and the Chancellor all have faculty status]

I believe it is this change in management to which the faculty are reacting. Theyare losing control over the university which they used to have. They are resisting this and indeed I believe it is why the faculty decided to unionize just recently. Graduate and undergraduate students have also changed since the time of the smaller elite colleges. Students were taken care of — groomed — in those days. Today most of us see ourselves as better educated workers, not people who are going to be the upper crust of society. We see management for what it is and when rules are imposed upon us we react with resentment.

In our senate meeting and again here I will make a suggestion. We must take some time as students to research and understand how this university functions and how this functioning affects us. An aware constituency is able to take action when it needs to. If we had been aware of how this administration functioned a year ago we would not be trying to figure out how reorganization will affect us now after the fact.

The one other issue that I would like to address which so far has only been between the lines or behind the scenes is the whether racism was involved in the response towards the Provost. The faculty, the administration and the student body all have racist attitudes. Our society is pervaded by racism. We must deal directly with these prejudices. But the issues should not be confused. Reorganization should be seperated out from the reaction to the Provost by whomever. I hope to deal further with the issue of racism on campus in another article. For now let is suffice for me to say I am opposed to the linking up of the discussion of the reorganization plan with attacks on the Provost's performance.

The Provost is part of management and acting in that capacity he is implementing a plan I feel needs to be clarified on its affect upon the graduate students of this university.

Christmas greetings from jailed Seabrook protestors

To the Editor:

Hello friends! We thought we would bring you some news and thoughts from confinement. We are a few of the 216 April 30 Seabrook nuclear power site occupiers who, for varied reasons, did not have an appeal recorded in the Rockingham County Superior Court. We were sentenced on 12-1 and received sentence reductions from 15 to 10 days, plus a fine of $100.00. There are 3 of us currently in Brentwood, all working off fines at the rate of $5.00-day.

For those people who might be confined here in the future as well as for anyone else who might be interested, we'd like to give you a basic rundown of the situation here.

After a couple of days of "medical quarantine", during which we were kept locked in cells in a county jail, we were [illegible] to the House of Corrections, a very large farm, which in addition to its crops raises beef cattle and pigs. We live in a 24-bed dormitory and work basically an 8 hour day on the farm. The work consists of feeding livestock, cleaning their stalls and pens, cutting cord wood for local sale [a good alternative], and lately shoveling snow.

The farm produces a lot of the food for us, and as a result, the food is pretty good and plentiful, although a vegetarian would have a limited diet since meat is served at most meals and there is a real lack of fresh fruit and juices.

After a rather tense period, we seem to have arrived at a point of mutual respect with the other inmates. Some of the tensions centered around whether we would refuse to work, and whether we would get them in trouble by things we sent out — letters, news releases, etc. After a couple of days, things began to mellow out with the other inmates and we began to get a lot of interested questions about who we were, why we were here, and about nuclear power. This has led to some interesting discussions. Still, though, jails are violent places and it takes a lot of energy to cope with the constant noise from the radio and T.V., the heat and close quarters.

The decision of whether or not to go to jail is one that each individual called before the court must make for her-himself, and the discussions about the value of such a decision can go on for hours. It is the experience of the three remaining of the 10 who came to Brentwood that being a "prisoner of conscience" can be a very enlightening as well as strengthening experience.

Once inside the jail there are decisions to be made, such as whether or not to cooperate with the system. For instance, at Brentwood the men must cut their hair and shave their faces. They must also choose between working on the farm or being put in solitary lock-up. Once on the farm crew, the degree to which one works is another point of consideration. We at Brentwood have chosen to cooperate and have found it a good way to create an interest in the nuclear power issue. Guards, county employees, and fellow inmates have been sensitive to our cause, sometimes have shown a very direct interest, and have expressed their ideas on nuclear power, its alternatives, and the politics of occupation.

Recently the Clamshell Alliance has been talking of a mass withdrawal of appeals from the Superior Court, with the alternative being a jail term and or a fine. If you are considering this a real possibility, or if for some reason your appeal was never entered, and you now face the possibility of being jailed, we hope that this letter may supply some information that will aid you in making your decisions.

We personally are finding the jail experience to be strengthening our cause and providing some sense of accomplishment and satisfaction in seeing the act of civil disobedience through to its consequences.

There are many ways to stop the nukes. We hope that you will choose yours and join in our alliance against Seabrook and nukes everywhere.

Letters may be sent to these and other Seabrook prisoners at the following addresses. They will be appreciated greatly. Rich Duff, Ed Cyr, and Mike Boover — P.O. Box 427, Epping, N.H. Jay Adams, Rennie Cushing, George Islen — Stratford County Jail, 6 street extension, Dover, N.H. 03820. Joan Sheehan, Mildred Freudenthal — Grafton County Jail, Box 267, Woodsville, N.H. 03875.

Progress for disabled measured at Laconia

LACONIA, N.H. [UPI] — In a world where progress is measured in inches and years, sitting tied into a wheelchair rather than collapsed on a mat can be an enormous victory.

Another victory can be learning to control your body so that at age 50 you no longer have to wear a diaper all day and live in a building that forever smells of urine soaked into the floorboards.

These are the victories for which the Laconia State School and Training Center struggles night and day as it tries to straighten the contorted limbs of the multiply handicapped and nurture the minds of the mentally retarded citizens of New Hampshire.

They are victories not attainable for all because there is money to give individualized attention to less than half the 641 residents. For many it is already too late to correct the muscle damage, the brain deterioration, the grotesque deformations which occurred over the decades when society thought nothing could be done for the mentally retarded but to feed and shelter them.

"Now we know that isn't true at all; we can greatly improve the performance of handicapped people," said Dr. Gary Miller, state mental health director.

"You can't cure them, but you sure can improve their status and condition," added Laconie Superintendent Jack Melton.

since he assumed that post in 1975, Melton has testified constantly before legislative committees, begging for more money and warning the school will be sued for illegal imprisonment if it does not begin to provide training for all.

"I wanted to be sure I cited the deficiencies for the Legislature, openly and honestly, so it would not look like we were running a snake pit," Melton said.

"Regardless of mental retardation or anything else, a resident of the school is a citizen of the United States," Melton said, and confining people with custodial care and no other treatment is deprivation of rights without due process of law.

The lawsuit is about to become a reality, not a threat, warns Rep. Alfreda Smith, D-Salem, president of the Laconia State School Parents Association. Her group's letters of grievance — charging understaffing and a lack of state commitment — led to a limited FBI investigation this fall.

U.S. Attorney William Shaneen said he expects to hear from the Justice Department in Washington by January whether it will bring suit itself. If not, parents will sue, Mrs. Smith said.

"They have never had enough attendants to take care of our children," said Simone Pepin of Nashua. Her son, Marc, entered the school when he was eight because he was self-abusive and doctors said it was his best hope.

"When I placed him 12 years ago he could walk and run. Now he is a cripple. He has pulled tendons because he had to be tied to the bed with 10 ties because he was so self-abusive and because of the lack of attendants. Of course he fought it. A normal person would go crazy tied to a bed in a room by himself," Mrs. Pepin said.

Mrs. Smith's daughter, Janet, 16, lives at the school in a huge elevated crib Mrs. Smith designed so that Janet would be guarded without being tied down. The right side of Janet's brain never developed fully. She cannot walk, talk or feed herself.

"When she was still home she could walk from one window to the window on another wall But she was kept in bed for a long period of time and it broke down the muscle in her legs," Mrs. Smith said. She doesn't know whether intensive care now would enable Janet to walk again.

Miller shudders at the prospect of a court battle over the school. In other states, he said, litigation "has made hardened adversaries out of people who originally had the same goals.

"What is particularly disturbing is that the Legislature has already begin to show awareness of the needs here," Miller said.

In 1970, the school had about 1,300 residents. That population has declined steadily as local school districts began to provide special education for the less handicapped, and local mental health centers sprang up.

Team rescues girl from plane wreckage

KERRVILLE, Texas [AP] — A 3-year-old girl, trapped for 35 hours in the wreckage of a small plane with the bodies of her parents and brother, was rescued Tuesday by searchers who found her "mumbling and groaning."

Rescuers unstrapped Shera Sneed from the back seat of the plane, which had crashed on an 1,800-foot hill about 50 miles northwest of San Antonio, and took her to a nearby hospital where doctors found she had a fractured arm and leg.

The plane had been spotted Tuesday morning by a helicopter, and a rescue team headed for the site in four-wheel drive vehicles.

The searchers also found the bodies of Shera's father, San Antonio attorney Gerald Wayne Sneed, 33, her mother, Susan Parr Sneed, 32, and Shannon, her 5-year-old brother. The family had been returning home from a visit to Shera's grandparents.

"Shera was just mumbling and groaning when we got there," said Dan Waters of First Texas Flying Service, a family friend and the first at the scene. "It was nothing you could understand. She had a few abrasions but other than that she looked pretty good."

Waters said he tried to comfort the girl but she did not recognize him and apparently did not know what had happened.

The plane crashed Sunday night during a persistent drizzle. Air traffic controllers in San Antonio had received a distress signal from a plane reporting that it was low on fuel and was attempting to reach the Kerrville airport.

Spencer Treharne of the First Texas Flying Service said the plane apparently came without about 20 feet short of clearing the hill.

"He knew the Kerrville airport and was trying to get in," Treharne said of Sneed. "When the engine started to sputter he could not get in. The hill is on the boundary of the airport you might say."

The crash site was three miles northeast of the airport.

Air rescue efforts had been hampered by the rain and the aerial search had begun only Tuesday morning.

Sheriff Paul Fields said the nose of the aircraft was buried in the loose dirt.

Report shows that fewer men are going to college

WASHINGTON [AP] — Young men are finding college less attractive, Census Bureau study shows.

The report released yesterday suggested fewer men are enrolling because they are not eligible for GI education benefits or they no longer need Vietnam war draft deferments.

It speculated another reason may be that young men now consider a college education less important.

The proportion of 18-and 19-year-old men who have completed one year of college declined from 13.6 per cent in 1970 to 10.9 per cent this year, the report said.

However, during the same period, a higher proportion of women the same age completed the same education, increasing from 12.9 per cent to 13.2 per cent.

Larry Suter, who heads the education statistics branch, said women have exceeded men in education at that age group for three years. But any gains they are making are caused mainly by declining male enrollments, he said.

Among 20-and 21-year-olds, men with a year of college education dropped markedly from 46.8 per cent in 1970 to 38.5 per cent in 1977. Women gained from 35.8 per cent to 38.4 per cent.

The larger gap in the 18 and 19 age group may be because women enter college at an earlier age, Suter said.

Education researchers have said most people thought a college education was a necessity in the 1960s but that in this decade it has not always paid off as well.

Spanish ballet at FAC "seductive"

By REBECCA ADAMS
Below the Salt Staff

Seduction, reflection, gaiety and energy were the themes for the evening. Sound diverse? Well, that's the idea.

Variety was actually the main idea as the Ballet Nacional Festivales de Espana performed for the very receptive audience at the Fine Arts Center last Saturday night. The company was created in 1973 and is the first national dance company sponsored by the Spanish Ministry of Welfare and Culture.

Since its inception it has consistently refined and perfected its repertoire to present authentic Spanish dancing at its best. This includes the regional dances; specifically, the usually gay dances of Middle Spain, the delicate ones of Eastern Spain and the warrior-like dances of the north.

Amid the dazzling silk ruffles and lace, each member of the audience was offered a chance to explore the romantic and exciting flavor of the Spanish dance. The costumes were magnificent with enough changes to constantly dazzle the eye. Of course, the symbol of Spanish dance, the castanets, were ever present and, especially for those who had never seen them, quite exciting.

The basic characteristics of the dance consisted of excellent fast-paced heel tapping, hand clapping, finger and head snapping and the castanets. The flair was created by the defined masculine and feminine roles and the seductive plays used by each.

Unfortunately for us, though, the company was on the last leg of its tour and seemed a trifle worn from its travels. Some of the energy, at least in the first half, was somewhat contrived. Some of the dancers, too, seemed to just be going through the motions, as if they had done them a million times over.

One thing this reviewer found confusing was the mixture of classical ballet slippers with the "heel-to-toe" style of footwork which characterizes this type of dance. Most dances were done with the traditional heeled shoe which was appropriate but delicate slippers and flat feet was really almost comical.

The parting dance, titled "Andalucia," was a piece depicting what might be a Spanish club or coffeehouse. There was a guitar and singer while the solo dancers each did an improvised interpretation of the music. Gradually they were joined by the rest of the company as the pace got faster and faster. The dancers and audience had a great time as a typical evening at the club unfolded with yelling, laughter and just general showing off. It was a great ending, creating flushed cheeks and a rousing standing ovation.

It's a pity that more people weren't able to attend. The center was barely half full and those empty seats really missed a treat. Despite the size of the crowd, though, the applause was overwhelming. Actually, the applause was a little bit too much. The dancers expected it after each little part and it often times broke up the mood.

The excitement this dance form conveys is not easy to copy. But an interesting addition to the dance department here at UMass would be some courses in "character" dance, the American adaptation of this style. It is not only fun but would allow the UMass dancer to break away from the New York dance mold and experience the world of dance.

Saxist Kozak to appear in Northampton this week

Saxophonist Michael Kozak will be appearing with the Life of New York this Thursday and Friday at 7:30 p.m. at the Main Street Center in Northampton. Kozak will be accompanied by bassist David Wertman, trombonist Michael Keith and Steve Swell, drummer Mohammed Abdullah, and xylophonist Tony Bocco.

I had the pleasure to witness some of these musicians in performance last week (see below) and they play a music of a sweeping creative energy that one seldom sees (or hears) outside of certtain enclaves in a few of our largest cities. Most of these musicians are from the avant-garde jazz scene in New York, and the Valley should feel honored that these — among other creative musicians — have chosen this area as a place to practice their art. To see them would be to gain a good idea of where modern creative music is going.

The Main Street Center is located at 138 Main St., Northampton. A donation is requested.

Heliotrope Dancers, Jaz Match perform

The Heliotrope Dancers appeared with De Jaz Match last Friday evening in Northampton. Combining the talents of bassist David Wertman, trombonist Michael Keith, and troupe of various musicians and dancers, the presentation was a colorful, spirited celebration of improvisation in both the musical and dance idioms. They should be seen when they appear again, as they are doing something which one seldom gets a chance to see in this area.

Snow Policy

In the event that snow days occur during final exams, or registration day, the following alternate schedule is established:

FINALS

Two additional, alternative exam periods would be added to the four regular periods (8 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 4 p.m.). Added would be: 6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. periods. By using two successive days of alternate periods, one day of exams can be rescheduled in the same order into the alternate periods e.g., periods one and two (8 a.m. and 10:30 a.m.) into the alternate periods (6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m.) of the same day and periods three and four (1:30 p.m. and 4 p.m.) into the alternate periods (6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m.) of the next scheduled final exam days. The same rooms are assigned in all cases.

The alternate schedule is the automatic rescheduling of the first period missed into the first available alternate period. Example: The announcement on Dec. 17, is "The campus is closed all day for classes and exams. The University will be open for evening exams." The automatic rescheduling of exams is period nine (8:30 a.m., 12-17) will be held at 6:30 p.m., 12-17, period 10 (10:30 a.m., 12-17) at 8:45 p.m., 12-17; period 11 (1:30 p.m., 12-17) at 6:30 p.m., 12-19 and period 12 (4 p.m., 12-17) at 8:45 p.m., 12-19. Amplification of the plan is contained in a memo being sent to all deans and department chairpersons.

REGISTRATION DAY

In the event that the campus is closed for registration on Jan. 30, graduate registration will take place in the same location on Jan. 31 between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. Undergraduate and Stockbridge registration will take place at the originally scheduled time and place on Jan. 31. First day of classes will be held as scheduled on Jan. 31.

In the event that the campus is closed until 11 a.m. for registration, graduate, undergraduate, and Stockbridge registration will take place in the same location commending at 11:30 a.m.

The snow day announcements have been amended during the final exam period and on registration day to reflect the above and are listed, with their codes, below.

WORK DAY EXAMS

— The campus is closed until 11 a.m. for classes and exams and to all but snow day personnel.

— Campus is closed for the afternoon and evening classes and exams and to all but snow day personnel. Second shift does not report.

Membership meeting of the Yellow Sun Natural Foods

The shortage of workers at the Yellow Sun Natural Foods Cooperative will be discussed at a general membership meeting Friday, at 7 p.m. in the downstairs meeting room of the First Congregational Church, 17 Seelye St., Amherst.

The results of a work policy survey filled out by members in the last six weeks will be discussed and will serve as a basis for formulating a new policy.

The coop's reciprocal work agreement with the Amherst Food Cooperative and consideration of converting the Yellow Sun from a cooperative to a collective will also be discussed.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 14 — Born today, you are ambitious, and would undertake almost any task to secure success. So long as your principles remained uncompromised and your standards of effort and production remained high you would have no qualms about becoming involved in activity others shun. A completely tolerant individual, it is difficult for you to imagine giving up advancement because you refused to work with someone whose presence, lifestyle, or ethics was different from yours.

You are not a highly emotional individual, but you accept emotionalism in others as a valid reason for action. You understand the power of anger or fear or anticipation or joy, even though you do not experience these to a great degree. Because you are able to put yourself in another's place, your own lack of deeply-felt emotion does not deter you from maintaining excellent relationships with others. You can always be trusted to understand, even when you cannot share an experience.

You have great mental agility. You are able to see a complex problem, find the heart of it quickly, and come up with a number of feasible solutions, ahead of anyone else. You will no doubt be called upon often for your problem-solving talents. You need only take care that you leave enough time for getting to your own needs and problems.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Look to your success with relationships at home to restore faith in yourself. Avoid a tendency to rush.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — You may have to put in long hours for little immediate reward. Look to the future for profit.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Take no unnecessary risks. Accident seems to be waiting for a chance to happen today.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — You can play a vital role in another's success. Don't pretend knowledge you don't have; give advice early.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your forceful personality can transform the unpleasant moments into pleasant interludes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The mood at home is established early by children. Don't try to demonstrate what you don't feel.

GEMINI (May 21-June-20) — You could easily spoil the high spirits at work by allowing your depressed mood to dominate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Keep alert to changes around you. Don't depend on another's knowledge to get you out of late trouble.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Considerable courage may be asked of you today to take advantage of an opportunity for personal fulfillment.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Your admiration of another may make you emulate one you should ignore. A question of standards arises later.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — You can do much to inspire loyalty to your cause. Make sure others understand what you want to accomplish.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Don't be caught unaware; preparations begin in earnest. The coming holidays cause you unrest at evening.

Room-to-Move offers undergraduate course

Room-to Move, an alternative counseling center for students, is offering a three-credit undergraduate course in developing basic counseling skills. The course, Pre-Service Training: Developing Counseling Skills, is open to all students, but is especially designed for students who want to volunteer or have fieldwork experience at Room-To-Move during the fall 1978-79 academic year.

If interested, sign up for Developing Counseling Skills for this spring semester. Course applications are available at Room-to-Move, in the lower level of the Student Union Building. The deadline for returning completed applications is Dec. 19, 4:00 p.m. If you have any questions, please call Room-to-Move, 545-0401.

Learning Program seeks volunteers

The Alternative Learning Program, an alternative high school on campus, is seeking volunteers for the spring semester.

The program in Cottage B, behind Worcester Dining Commons, usually has between 15 and 25 volunteers per semester in all subject areas, including crafts, vocational skills, physical education, interdisciplinary classes, and the more traditional areas of English, math, social studies, and science. Classes take place in a small (average 4 to 6) informal atmosphere, and course content is mutually developed and agreed upon by you and the students. Supervision and support is provided by the three fulltime staff members.

There are 14 students in this program who have come from six different high schools in Hampshire seeking a more personal, individualized atmosphere in which to learn. The program has existed on campus at UMass since September, 1975.

If you have 3 to 4 hours a week, and some background in creative writing, literature, journalism, any kind of history, math, dance, gymnastics, self-defense, auto mechanics, business or secretarial skills, natural science, physics, organic gardening, womens studies, or any other subject you think you might interest somebody drop by Cottage B, or call 545-2584 for more information. The program operates Monday-Friday rom 8:30-2:30.

Credit is available through the School of Education.

Explosion at nuclear site releases slight radioactivity

WATERFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Two explosions at a nuclear power site yesterday released a slight measurement of radioactivity and officials shut down the complex pending a complete investigation.

Officials of the site said, "there was no threat of radioactivity," although one worker was slightly injured and hospitalized "after being exposed to radioactivity."

Federal officials in Washington said the exact cause of the explosions which occurred at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m., had not been established but there was "no indication" of sabotage.

Northeast Utilities operates the complex which houses Millstone No. 1 and No. 2 nuclear reactors.

A Northeast spokesman said a "gaseous explosion" blew a door off the base of a 150-foot chimney which releases radioactive material for the facility's two plants.

There was a minimal discharge of radioactivity accompanies by "a very slight momentary puff of radioactivity," according to the spokesman.

The incident pooed "no danger of contamination to anyone outside the plant site," and no evacuation plans were necessary, he said.

The unidentified workman suffered cuts and bruises and was taken to Lawrence and Memorial Hospital in New London.

The smaller, first blast occurred at 10 a.m. Northeast officials said it appeared the two blasts were connected but they could not determine how exactly.

CRIME ON THE CAMPUS took a new twist at American University this fall, and it's all told in a page-one box of the Eagle student newspaper.

Seems that a daring duo with imagination took $243 from a cash register in the bookstore when the cashier locked her machine and walked to the rear of the store to talk to the manager.

Witnesses said that two persons, shielding themselves with a large poster, approached the register, opened it and removed the money.

Police have fingerprints but no suspects.

LOVE IT OR LEAVE IT is what Gov. Meldrim Thomson seems to be saying as he calls for the dismissal of a University of New Hampshire journalism instructor who wrote a newspaper column critical of the state.

What aroused the governor's ire is an article titled "You're an Unfriendly Meddling Neighbor, New Hampshire," which appeared on page one of the Nov. 14 Boston Globe. Columnist Jack Thomas teaches a journalism course on the Durham campus.

Thomson termed the article an "inaccurate, fictionalized and insulting piece of garbage" and "to keep Jack Thomas in the employ of the University one minute longer would be a gross affront to our citizens and a gross waste of their tax dollars."

UNH dean of the college of liberal arts, Allan Spitz, was quoted in the page-one piece in The New Hampshire student newspaper that I can't imagine a set of circumstances that would lead to an employee's dismissal from the University based simply on a governor's request."

ADD WOMAN'S LIB ... at Northwestern University, the College of Arts and Sciences faculty has voted a ban on the use of masculine nouns, pronouns and possessive adjectives as generic terms in the written and oral discussion of University business.

The action came after what the Daily Northwestern called "an emotional discussion" sparked by a female faculty person who said that "improper use of language at NU has promoted the wrong kinds of symbols." A female history prof opined that "This is a crucial issue for the human race." A male English prof pounced on the resolution as "barbarism of the English language" that he said he found to be "so frivolous that if I didn't know better, I'd think this was a red herring to hide the real problems of women."

Applications now accepted for summer counseling jobs

Applications are now being accepted for student group leader positions in the 1978 Summer Counseling Program. The program will operate from June 4 through July 24, 1978. Eleven sessions for first-year students will be held, along with five transfer programs.

Training sessions for the 30 selected counselors will be held late spring semester and the week of May 30 through June 2. All positions require residence in an assigned residence hall and meals in the dining commons for the nine-week period. Summer counseling positions require full-time participation. Summer school courses cannot be taken.

Qualifications for counselor positions include successful work experience, a positive attitude towards University life, knowledge regarding academic course planning, high energy level, a willingness to accept job performance standards and to attend the spring training sessions.

Interested and qualified students may obtain an application from the Community Development Center, 123 Berkshire House. Applications must be returned on or before Feb. 3. Selections will be announced during spring break.

Gov. Sargent interviewed on WMUA's "FOCUS."

WMUA (91.1 FM) will air a recent interview with former Massachusetts Gov. Francis Sargent tomorrow at 6 p.m.

The 60-minute interview with Sargent was done by Robert Levine, co-director of WMUA's News and Public Affairs Department. Sargent, a liberal Republican, was defeated for re-election by Michael Dukakis in 1974.

★ Thoughts on a soccer season and awards

"I think that a program of tuition waivers seems to be the right direction to go," explained Quinton. "But, our facilities here are just as good as any that I have seen in this region and I think that we can manage at this level."

"I'd just like to comment on the good attitude this past season of members of the team who were out for a few minutes here and there and, though naturally disappointed, stayed with us and were always ready to give 100 percent when called upon," Quinton added.

"It would be wonderful if we could field a freshman, JV, and varsity squad," continued Quinton. "There are certainly enough talented players around to do this although I wouldn't deny a talented freshman the opportunity to play for the varsity. Since we are an educational institution, we want to see people develop their talents and so it's a shame to see a potentially able person idle-away the season on the bench," explained Quinton.

Another aspect that Quinton brought up during the interview was the lack of appeal that soccer has among black athletes in this area.

"For reasons that are not clear to me, the game has not appealed very much yet to this particular group in our population," said Quinton. "It would be good to see Massachusetts try to increase the popularity of the game of soccer among black students." It should be noted here that UMass has only one black student playing soccer who holds a spot on the JV roster.

"When we take the field, we are a credit to the University both in terms of playing quality and as a smart-looking club," concluded Quinton.

In related soccer news, goaltender Mark Hodgdon was named as the MVP for the season in voting that took place during the team's annual banquet which took place last Thursday night. In addition, Joel Mascolo and Pat Veale were voted in as next year's co-captains while Mike St. Martin received the Most Improved Player award.

A hint about point spreads

Betting on football games is commonplace in the United States. It is an industry in Nevada, a steady income for bookies nationwide, and a losing proposition to uninformed observers. (Most college students fall into this category.) The only winners in football betting are the people who are financially and mentally able to devote a 40 hour week to it, in the same manner as your everyday blue collar worker devotes time to his job.

But the professional gambler has no stated routine, he isn't tied down to his office, and he doesn't have to run around making business appointments. The only necessity a professional gambler requires is a roll of dimes or a phone in his home, to contact his bookie(s) before game time. Another difference between the blue collar worker and the gambler is the weekly income; the worker has a fixed income, the gambler has not.

Betting is a tough way to make a living. Acquaintances of mine have found themselves deep in a hole when their "pick of the week" let up excess points, and thus didn't cover the spread. (The "spread" or "line" is the number of points assigned by professional oddsmakers to the favored team in a given sporting event. Points constitute the spread in football and basketball, white goals and runs are the determining factors in betting hockey and baseball games respectively.) Picking the winner of a given event isn't terribly difficult. Constantly picking winners over the spread is near impossible. Statistically, you have a fifty per cent chance of correctly picking a given game. But there are so many determining factors that are considered before money is put down, that "the public" as a mass is wrong more than they are right. This is a proven fact. One bookie (whose name I won't reveal) swears that if he bet $100 against the public's choice (at even money) in every bettable sporting event, he'd be a millionaire.

There are two significant reasons why over the long run, the public is a perennial loser. The first and foremost is the 6-5 odds that bookies receive as a "surcharge" on every bet. This means that for every five dollars you want to win, you have to put up six if you lose. This constant advantage a bookie receives is called the "vig" (thanks J.W.). Thus the concept of why bookies seldom end a weekend in the red is comprehendable. Hypothetically, Lenny K. bets $600 to $500 on the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to beat the Seattle Seahawks by seven points. Ricky E. also bets $600 to $500, but takes Seattle, receiving seven points. Tampa Bay wins, but only by six. The bookie collects 600 dollars from Lenny K., and pays out 500 dollars to Ricky E., leaving him a hundred dollars profit for the single game. Thus, even if the bettor wins fifty per cent of his game, the vig he pays when he loses makes him a perennial loser over time.

It is of prime importance that a winning gambler know an enormous amount of information concerning his bets before he places them. The successful gambler reads as many newspapers as he can, because some of what he reads is likely to contain biased information. (An example of this is reading only the Boston Globe and then betting on a Celtics game.) By reading a lot of newspapers, gambling publications, and receiving statistics, the bettor is able to predict with a fair degree of accuracy what is going to happen in a given game, and subsequently wager effectively.

Successful gamblers know about "middling" bets, theories about streaks, how teams round into form and then out of it, and make the best of their knowledge. They will shop around to various bookies (because bookie spreads often differ), and are aware that lines differ considerably depending on where you live. Hypothetically, the Patriots might be a one-point favorite over the Colts next weekend. A local gambler might have to give three points if he wants to bet on the Patriots, and conversely a bettor in Baltimore might have to give a point if he bets the Colts in Baltimore. The smart gambler is aware of the actual (Vegas) line, he is aware of all possibilities, and can take advantage of varying point spreads.

An increasing number of people are starting to bet on sporting events, because gambling adds to the excitement of watching a game. Its popularity is rising to such a pinnacle that television and radio programs are replacing professional athletes as color commentators for sports programs, with professional gamblers (i.e. Jimmy the Greek, Larry Merchant). Point spreads are of more importance to many than is who actually won the contest.

The Gambling industry is rising to a peak of popularity, and will continue to rise until the public faces the truth: betting on sporting events is a losing proposition for the large majority of bettors. The bookies will continue to earn a living and the public will pay for it. There is a very thin line between winning and losing. Everyone loves a winner and criticizes a loser. Unless you can devote all of your energies to "staying on top" of all situations, expecially those involving gambling, don't involve yourself in them. To "the public" I offer this advice; when it comes to betting on sporting events, your best bet is not to bet. Put your money back in your pocket, enjoy the game for what it's worth, and have a good intersession.

A first for Tampa Bay

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

To the reader: This is what you get when somehow, a columnist's story gets cut off ... another column. Merry Christmas, with a Happier New Year. Sarcastically yours,
Smitty

You know, some historic things have happened on weekends: The attack on Pearl Harbor, the first UMass party (then Mass. Aggie), and now this:

Tampa Bay's first victory!!!!

To some people, this may not seem such a big deal. After all the victory (1) doesn't clinch them a spot in the playoffs (2) wasn't over an arch-rival (3) didn't exactly come against a powerhouse football team.

But it is a big deal.

The Bucs could've laid down and died, to finish their sophomore year in the NFL 0-28. Last year, they could excuse their record because of first season jitters. Their sister in Seattle managed to get off to a better start.

Headed into this year, people were just waiting for their first victory. But no NFL team wanted to be Tampa's initial victim. That fear was psych enough for most opponents.

New Orleans was scared to lose. If their fear could've been transformed into points, the Saints might've won.

But that's not possible, and they lost.

Or rather, they got beat.

Had the game gone into overtime, or the score been closer, you could say the Saints lost.

But it didn't, and it wasn't, and they were beaten by John McKay's boys. Handily.

Hey, I wasn't there after the game (wish I could've been), but you can imagine the plane ride home to Florida:

Cigars lit.

Streamers hanging from the ceiling of the plane.

Champagne flowing freely as the drafts (for those Bucs who are of legal age).

Ecstasy!!!

According to the Boston Globe, 8,000 fans greeted their team when they arrived at the Tampa Airport.

"The greatest victory in the history of the world" exclamed an understandably enthusiastic McKay.

He could be right.

Naturally the Saints took the defeat hard. Head coach Hank Stram just about apologized to the city of New Orleans for not continuing T. Bay's misfortunes.

Which makes me feel it couldn't happen to a nicer guy.

What's in store for Tampa Bay now that they own this new streak of one straight?

Well, they could make it two with a win this weekend over the once awesome, St. Louis Cardinals.

Or wait until next season, when the new scheduling process of the NFL will give them a somewhat easier schedule.

In any case, win number two won't take as long to get as number one did.

Christmas arrived early for Tampa Bay fans.

Let it never be forgotten that on a weekend when an established team played to lose (let's not mention any names for fear the people down in Maryland may get angry), a non-established team played to win. And did!

I guess there really is a first time for everything!

Losing is better than winning

To be rational is irrational and to be irrational is rational, at least that's the way I look at life and more specifically professional football after this past weekend.

Rationally speaking, the New England Patriots, thanks to their 14-10 victory over the Miami Dolphins Sunday, should have a shot at the AFC Eastern Division title this Sunday in Baltimore, but they do not. (If you think Buffalo is going to beat Miami in the land of palm trees this Saturday you've been reading too many Captain Marvel comic books).

Irrationally speaking, the Baltimore Colts, thanks to their very suspicious loss to Detroit Sunday (13-10), have enhanced their AFC Eastern division title hopes.

Let me explain.

Whether Baltimore won or lost to Detroit had no consequence to Ted Marchibroda and Company because the Colts still had to win against the Patriots this Sunday regardless of the Detroit game.

Follow closely, the rules are complicated. The first tie-breaker that determines the title holder concerns head-to-head competition.

There were numerous possibilities:

1 — A Patriot's victory Sunday made them 9-4. A Dolphins' loss made them 9-4. A Baltimore victory over Detroit would have made them 10-4. Thus, a Miami victory this Saturday would have meant a Patriots chance to create a three way tie at 10-4 by beating Baltimore this Sunday and consequently, an AFC Eastern Division title for the Pats, because they would have the best head-to-head record (3-1).

2 — However, a Baltimore loss has created the following: The Patriots, Colts, and Dolphins are all tied with identical 9-4 records. Now, a Dolphins' victory this Saturday makes them 10-4, but more importantly a Patriots' victory and Baltimore loss will create a two-way tie between the Patriots and Dolphins at 10-4 (the Colts would be 9-5). However, the Dolphins win the title because of fewer losses in the division (two, which is tie-breaking rule number two).

But behind the Colts' loss to Detroit Sunday is another motive, which is so despicable it makes me sick.

3 — The Dolphins play the Bills Saturday, while the Patriots and Colts tangle Sunday, which means the Pats will watch Bob Griese humiliate the Bills by a 35-12 score in the Orange Bowl Saturday, and the Pats will merely finish out the season the following day against the Colts. No motive. Yet, the Colts, thanks to their intelligent loss, will be shooting for the title because in a two-way tie with Miami, the Colts win the title.

4 — No going back to my first point, if the Colts had beaten Detroit, and if Miami were to defeat Buffalo Saturday, then both the Patriots and Colts would have had a shot at the title this Sunday. A Baltimore victory would have given them the title with an 11-3 record (if they had beaten the Lions). A Baltimore loss would have created a three-way tie at 10-4 and the Pats would gain the title thanks to tie-breaking rule number one.

Rules are always confusing and vague, that's why the above seems about as clear as muddy water. Stated simply: A Baltimore win over Detroit last Sunday, a Patriot victory this Sunday and a Miami victory this Saturday would have meant an Eastern title for the Pats. A Baltimore loss to Detroit means a Patriot victory this Sunday is meaningless because the Dolphins would win the title in the event of a tie for first with the Pats.

Rules are about as interesting as filling out your tax form every April. Yet, as dreadfully boring as rules are, they are needed to define procedures, such as defining the amount of money you owe Uncle Sam or defining the winner of a game or defining the champion of a league.

Yet, there is something wrong with the rules if someone can avoid paying taxes and win championships thanks to losses.

In effect, the Colts loss is a boon to them. By losing, they take the incentive away from the Patriots, who will sit at home and watch the play-offs even if they beat the miserable Colts this Sunday. However, a Miami victory Saturday doesn't amount to a hill of beans to the Colts, who can capture the title by beating the Patriots.

In effect, the Patriots are punished for winning and the Colts are rewarded for losing.

This whole article makes as about much sense as taking final exams on Saturday mornings with two 3,000 word compositions due the same day.

I have purposely withheld the reason "why" Baltimore wins the title in the event of a tie with Miami, to prove the system favors the losers and not the winners.

As mentioned, there are rules for breaking ties for first, and here they are: 1 — Best won-lost percentage in head to head competition (Miami and Baltimore 1-1); 2 — Best intra-division record (both Miami and Baltimore 5-2); and 3 — Best intra-conference won-lost record (Baltimore wins title with 8-3 record compared to Miami's 7-4 mark).

Do you know why Baltimore wins the title? Because they lost to Detroit and that's not an intra-conference game.

Something is definitely rotten in Denmark.

To be rational is irrational and to be irrational is rational.

Lindsay named star

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Bob Lindsay of George Washington was named Eastern Eight Basketball Player of the Week for the week ending Dec. 10, the league announced yesterday.

Lindsay, a 6'4" guard, scored the go-ahead basket in the Colonials' come-from-behind win as well as six of GW's final eight points. In the GW victory over Maryland, Lindsay scored 25 points and had five assists.

Two weeks into the season, Penn State's Jeff Miller leads the league in scoring with a 21.5 points-per-game average, and Maurice Robinson of West Virginia is the top rebounder with an 11.7 average.

Duquesne's Jessie Hubbard has the best free throw percentage with .916, and Mark Haymore of Massachusetts has the best field goal percentage with .814.

Kohlhaas views 1977 as important hoop year

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

For 6'9", 225 lb. Len Kohlhaas of Walpole N.H. this year as starting center for the UMass basketball team may be his best, if not his most important.

"This is my year if I want to get anything done in basketball. I'm starting and I have to do well. A lot of people are expecting me to do a lot," he said.

Kohlhaas was regarded as a 'sleeper' in high school but this did not deter the coaching duo of Fan Gaudette and Ray Wilson from recruiting the big youngster and awarding him a four year scholarship to UMass.

Three years of varsity play at Fall Mountain Regional High School under coach Steve Holmes comprised Kohlhaas' high school basketball career. As a sophomore, he was a member of the team that won the New Hampshire Class I Championship. His junior year was his best statistical season, averaging 20 points and 18 rebounds and a high game of 42 points and 35 rebounds.

Kohlhaas' stats dipped to 17 points and 13 rebounds during his senior year in which he was named All-State. These statistics aren't bad considering the fact that he only averaged half a game in playing time. (Due to Fall Mountain's ability to run opponents off the court with scores like 29-3 after one quarter and 78-22 after just three periods of play, Kohlhaas was rested early to let some of the other players into the games.)

On his arrival here at UMass, Len Kohlhaas was prepared to wait for his time to come....

"I realized that no way I'd be starting. After you get here you have to learn the system," he said.

....and his time may be now. It may also be the time for UMass basketball.

"Potentially, this could be the best team ever here. Like Coach Leaman said earlier, "We have size, speed, and can shoot.' We also have good depth for the first time in a long time," he said.

On the Eastern Atletic Association or Eastern Eight as it is also called:

"It's gonna be a good league, given time to grow. Last year there wasn't one dominating team. Duquesne wasn't given much of a chance and they won it," he said.

Kohlhaas has played under coach Jack Leaman for three years and in that time he has developed high praise for his mentor.

"He's a great coach, one of the greatest coaches around. He knows his stuff, his teams are well prepared, and over the years he has gotten the most out of the talent he has had. That's one of the reasons I came here," Kohlhaas said.

After his UMass years are over, the sport management major hopes to continue in basketball, preferably as a player.

"I hope to play somewhere. I'd like to get a tryout here (the NBA) and if that doesn't work out I'd like to go to Europe and play. I've also given some thought to Athletes in Action," he said.

"I'll just wait until the time comes. Right now, I just don't want to stop playing," Kohlhaas concluded.

Physics prof lends hand to booters and coach Kidd

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team has a distinction that separates it from most of the other sports on campus. Coached by Russ Kidd for the last two years, the soccer players have an assistant coach who is a tenured professor in the Physics department here.

Arthur Quinton, age 53, has served as coach Kidd's assistant on a voluntary basis for the last two years and has added an interesting touch to the coaching scene. A native of East Anglia, England, Quinton played soccer at the University of London and at the University of Western Ontario where he also coached while attending graduate school. In addition, he coached for the Amherst Soccer Organization before he began his coaching duties with the Minutemen.

An Amherst resident with a PHd. in Physics from Yale, Quinton has some interesting thoughts and comments on the successful season that the 10-5 Minutemen recently completed. Quinton revealed some of these thoughts in a recent interview that took place in his office in the Graduate Research Center.

"The club owes a lot to Russ Kidd," began Quinton. "He obviously enjoyed the game and has infected the team with his good spirit and fine attitude towards the sport."

In addition to his praise for Kidd, Quinton says that the support by the administration is "adequate" and feels that some type of scholarship program should be made available to coach Kidd when recruiting players.

Matmen return to action after abbreviated XMas

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

C'mon Amato, do you call that a vacation? The members of the UMass wrestling team will have just enough time to hit the ol' homestead and exchange a few gifts next week, because the Minutemen will find themselves in Greenvale, New York on December 27.

"It's a college tournament at C.W. Post," explains coach Dave Amato. "I'm not making it mandatory, but most of the squad is thinking about going."

After the Post Tournament, the Minutemen will return to their homes, but training for the spring semester begins on January 3 when the team takes residence in the fraternity Kappa Sigma for the duration of intersession.

The team will have two meets during intersession, as it travels to New Jersey for a January 21 clash with Hofstra and take on Springfield College January 26.

Wrestling Notes — Larry Otsuka woke up on Sunday morning and was surprised to see his face adorning the front sports page of the Boston Globe. The huge photo depicted the UMass grappler in his victorious match against Harvard.

"It was really nice, and I never expected it," said Otsuka. "Steve Whitman brought it into my room on Sunday morning and showed it to me."

Otsuka has very quietly become one of the top grapplers in New England in the 134 pound class, and is drawing the attention of rival coaches.

"He's improved 100 per cent over last year," said Harvard coach John Lee after his victory last weekend.

Kevin Griffin made a successful comeback against Harvard, winning his first match of the season, 18-4.

"I was really tired at the end of the match," said Griffin. "I'm going to wrestle at 167 pounds for now, but by the end of the season I want to be going at 150 pounds."

Freshman grappler Tony Perry tied his match Saturday, but the high-school champ from Springfield had to wrestle in pain.

"He had strained ligaments in his thumb," said Amato, "but it wasn't bad enough to keep him out of the lineup."

"It feels much better now," said Perry at Monday's workout.

.... Sometimes you just can't win. Another freshman wrestler, Rich Schriazzi, was not scheduled to wrestle against Harvard last Saturday and thought he'd travel to Quincy to visit his family for the day. His plan was to drive to Cambridge with teammate Dave Daly (who was to wrestle in the junior varsity meet), and then catch the subway to Quincy.

However, Bill Ranzuli called coach Amato and told him he could not make the meet and when Daly stopped off at Schriazzi's Webster dorm room to pick him up he gave him the news.

"Coach says you're wrestling for Ranzuli," said Daly.

So Schriazzi quickly went down to Boyden for wrestling equipment and called his girlfriend and two sisters in Quincy; telling them to meet him in Cambridge so that they could see him wrestle.

It seems, however, that the Harvard grappler was also sick and the Crimson forfeited the 134 pound match to UMass; which meant that Schriazzi made the trip for nothing.

Sorry, Rich....

Speaking of the JV team, Dennis Fenton's squad have taken two meets in a row and are undefeated on the season.

"They were really tough on Saturday (Harvard)," said Fenton. "There were some mistakes here and there, but nothing that can't be worked out in practice."

Fenton, who graduated from UMass last Spring, is in his first year as a wrestling coach after a glorious career that brought him to national competition four times.

"It really is different watching the matches as a coach," said Fenton, "but I get more nervous and tense now then I ever did when I was wrestling."

Timmy Fallon is ready for action after a recent illness kept him out of the meet with Harvard. His absence really hurt the Minutemen, who have yet to enter a meet at full strength.

When the Minutemen go against Hofstra January 21, it will be the first time that both UMass co-captains, Griffin and Fallon, are in the lineup.

Hopefully.

★ Swimwomen lose

captured the two top spots. Bullard compiled a 171.80 points and Strobel scored 152.55. UMass' Leslie Dunphy was outstanding in the required diving event, posting a first place victory. Bullard continued her winning ways with a third place victory.

Before the divers took to the board, the Minutewomen were losing by the score of 25-18. After the first diving competition, the divers closed the gap within three points with the score of 29-32.

Meegan Primavera, who missed today's meet due to illness, is expected to return to action over the intersession. The next meet isn't until Feb. 1 when the aquawomen challenge Bridgewater State at 7:00 in NOPE.

Springfield, Boston College and Rhode Island round out the meets before the New Englands which are on the 16th and 17th of February. Almost two months from now, the season ends on the 25th when it faces Southern Connecticut at home in NOPE at 1 p.m.

12 games fill up intersession

Huskies invade in Cage clash

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The next time you read a Collegian basketball article, it will be January 31st and Jack Leaman's band of merry men will (pick one) be: a. 16-0, b. 4-12, c. 8-8, d. have beaten Holy Cross, Providence, and Rutgers, e. lost to all of them, or f. none of the above.

Twelve games will take place during this winter break and by the time January 31st arrives, one will have a better idea of what caliber of basketball team UMass is.

In that stretch, UMass will host two games at the Cage, UConn (tonight) and Bentley (Saturday). Both will start at 7:30 and will be broadcast on WMUA (7:25) WMUA is planning on broadcasting all UMass home and away games during the winter break.

UMass will play two games at the Springfield Civic Center, (Jan. 7th-Rutgers and Jan. 25th-Providence College) and will be at the Boston Garden Jan. 27-28th for the Colonial Classic. In this four team tournament, UMass will be in contention with Boston College, Holy Cross, and UConn.

Away from the Amherst area, UMass will open up three days after Christmas at the Hartford Civic Center for the UConn Classic (UConn, Niagara and Manhattan). The other away games for the Minutemen will be Jan. 11-Villanova, Jan. 17-UConn, and Jan. 20 — Duquesne.

Back to the matter at hand, tonight's game with the Huskies from UConn will mark the first of four games the Minutemen will play with them.

If the games this year are anything like games of the past, one can expect close and exciting contests between these two rivals. For the game series, UConn holds the decided edge 47-34, with the first game played in 1907.

In last year's games, Leaman's squad won two one point affairs with the Huskies, 81-80 and 65-64. The last time UConn won was two seasons back, 73-69.

This year's UConn squad presently stands with a mark of 3-2; having beaten Fordham 68-52, Yale 73-58, and UNH 82-68. They were blown out against Syracuse 101-61, and most recently lost to BU 66-61.

"It's been an up and down year," said UConn Daily Campus Sports Editor Rich DePetra.

"We looked good against Fordham, Yale and UNH but against Syracuse we were overmatched. Against BU, I don't know what happened."

For first-year coach Dom Perno, it's been a tough job replacing the nation's No. 10 scorer and UConn's all-time basketball scoring leader Tony Hanson, who graduated last spring and is now playing in Italy.

Perno has 11 returning lettermen but the problem is finding 11 healthy ones. John Delagrange, a 6'8" junior college transfer, is doubtful for tonight's game with an ankle injury, while starting guards Joe Whelton and Randy LaVigne won't be 100 per cent, again suffering from ankle injuries.

Besides Whelton and LaVigne, the other starters for the Huskies will be 6'8" Jim Abromaitis, and 6'9" Jeff Carr. If Delagrange will not play, his spot will be taken by 6'11" Al Lewis or 6'7" freshman Jim Fearon.

The bulk of the scoring punch will be expected from the 6' guard, Whelton. He has been averaging 20 points game, but has a reputation as a gunner.

"Lately, Joey's been taking the bulk of the scoring, putting up 20 foot jump shots, but in order for us to be effective, UConn has to get more production from Abromaitis, Carr, and Delagrange," said DePetra.

For UMass, the season's mark is now 4-0, and the fans are still buzzing about the play of center Mark Haymore who thrilled the capacity crowd at the Cage against Vermont with 16 dunk-filled points.

"We still have alot of work to do as a team, both on offense and defense," said team captain Derick Claiborne.

Merwomen outsplashed by Crimson, 74-56

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swim team suffered a 74-56 loss in last night's meet against Harvard in NOPE. The highlights of the meet included two broken records.

UMass' Lynn Lutz smashed her own Minutewomen record in the 1,000 yard freestyle set earlier in the fall. Lutz finished third with an 11:59 that eclipsed her old mark of 12:17.

Remarkably, Harvard's Liz Kelley swam even faster than Lutz, as she slashed and broke Smith's T. Nacks' time of 11:00.5 with a first place finish at 10:56.7.

The defeat now gives the Minutewomen a 5-5-1 mark. The Crimson are now 3-1 in the league.

UMass started the meet on a positive note with a first place in the 400 medley relay. Kathy Jurcik, Maryanne Primavera, Deb Schwartz and co-captain Lise Hembrough composed the winning team.

Deb Schwartz was one of the bright spots for the Minutewomen capturing three first place finishes. Schwartz's time in the 100 yard breaststroke- was 1:14. Teammate Maryanne Primavera finished third with a time of 1:20.

Schwartz continued her mastery over the breaststroke in the 200 with a time of 2:14.5. In the most exciting race of the evening, the 200 yard individual medley, Schwartz edged out a foe at the finish line in 2:22.7. UMass' Celia Walsh captured third in 2:32.5.

In the 200 yard freestyle, Harvard gained first place, but UMass co-captain Rachel Mach earned third with a time of 2:10. Harvard took second.

The 100 yard backstroke story was similar. Gina Struart, a Harvard standout, took first with a 1:10. UMass' Jurcik trailed close behind swimming a 1:07. The Crimson gained third prize in this event. Jurcik finished second in the 200 yard backstroke with a 2:30.1 time. Harvard captured first and third position.

The Minutewomen were more fortunate in the 200 yard butterfly. Celia Walsh clinched a first place with a time of 2:28. The Harvard attack took second and third with 2:32.7 and 2:44.0 respectively. Walsh had to settle for second in the 100 yard butterfly. She lost by only four-tenths of a second.

Lutz earned third in the 500 yard freestyle event by doing a 5:53.8.

The Minutewomen had a decisive victory in the diving events. In the optional diving UMass' Khris Bullard and Suzie Strobel

A gift for every sport

Ah yes, Christmas.

That wonderful time of the year is here again. The season to be jolly, to be merry, and all that type of stuff.

And, of course, the time to receive gifts.

Just like anybody else, people in athletics deserve gifts. Although a few people may deserve to have coal stuffed in their stockings instead of trinkets under the tree, what the heck. Be generous.

So, what without further ado, the Van Handle list of sports goodies:

First, UMass:

To Dick MacPherson: Another Phil Puopolo, John Willis, Peter McCarty, Billy Coleman, John Gladchuk, Kevin Cummings.....

To Jack Leaman: An NCAA tournament berth, a Colonial Classic title, and a win over Holy Cross.

To Dick Garber: Another championship season.

To Dianne Thompson: This year, the chance to represent UMass in the post-season softball playoffs.

To Mary Ann Ozdarski: Wins over Southern Connecticut, Queens, and a trip to Mississippi in the spring.

To Dick Bergquist: Some big bats to go with those good arms.

To Judith Davidson: Another chance to stick it to Springfield, and the chance to be a hero.

To Jack Canniff: What else?

To Russ Kidd: A playoff berth and a couple of more Tommy Koutsoukos.

To Dave Amato: Some more home meets.

And now, for the pros:

To Ted Marchibroda: A book entitled, 'The Will to win'.

To the Boston Celtics: A trade involving Sidney Wicks and-or Charlie Scott.

To the Boston Red Sox: A left-handed pitcher (somewhere, anywhere).

To the Boston Bruins: Nothing. They have everything they need.

To Bill Campbell: Rolaids.

To Luis Tiant: One more year?

To Denny Doyle: An escape from limbo.

To the Denver Broncos: A Super Bowl championship.

To Pete Rozelle: A way to unscramble playoff messes in ten easy lessons.

And, finally, to my faithful scribes:

To Mike Berger: More quotable people, and a slap on the wrist for no annual 'Grabbag of of Goodies". (Thanks a lot, Berger.)

To Mark Marchand: The reason why Don O'Malley didn't show up for his physical, and more 'Booter Banter'.

To Rich Eckel: More scoops.

To Steve Buckley: Wrestling until it comes out his ears.

To George O'Brien: A hockey puck and a golf ball.

To Jim Gleason: More field hockey features.

To Russ Smith: A successful intramural season.

To Bill Edelstein: Metawampe, RIP.

To Mike McHugh: The ECAC hockey guide.

And, finally, to Dave Rodman: The ability to find the sanity I lost when I took this job.

Thanks, folks. It's been bizarre.

Area group studies future of DNA here

The complexities of recombinant DNA research began to be untangled during the month of January by the nine-person study group appointed by the town of Amherst to investigate proposed DNA research at the campuses of UMass and Amherst college.

The study group, appointed by the October Special Town Meeting, was established along the model created by the town of Cambridge, Mass. for research being conducted at Harvard University.

Recombinant DNA research is not scheduled to begin in Amherst in the fall.

At their first meeting, Selectman Diana Romer told the group their work would include "broad discussion of issues and the nitty-gritty of making recommendations."

The group plans to review guidelines established by the National Institute of Health to determine if the safeguards set down are strict enough. They said they hope to report their findings, and any additional recommendations, at the May Town Meeting.

Once guidelines are established by the study group, a town appointed Biohazards Committee will have the power to grant or deny licenses to perform recombinant DNA research. The Biohazards Committee will also be charged with monitoring adherence to the guidelines.

DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is the material that carries chromosomes necessary for hereditary information to be shaped.

Currently, DNA research is conducted with the E. coli bacterium. DNA is inserted into the DNA of the E. coli DNA, producing a new form of life.

UMass goals set by Patterson

Interim UMass President Franklin K. Patterson set forth some ambitious goals before the University trustees at their January meeting at the Worcester Medical School.

Patterson, who will serve as UMass president until the presidential search committee determines a permanent successor, made a lengthly statement at the opening of the meeting highlighting five goals he would like to accomplish during the spring.

In his remarks, Patterson said he will press for improvement of common services, which are administrative services shared by all campuses; improving control of expenditures and quality of performance, and securing a yearly budget; to maintain, renovate and develop the University's physical plant; strengthen the University's image; and to press forward with master planning, giving direction to the University as a whole, and to its various segments and improving relations with the state's community college system.

In discussing the image of the University, Patterson said, "I've tried to make it clear to representatives of the media that I believe in full disclosure to the greatest practical degree as far as a public institution is concerned. We should welcome public scrutiny, and we should expect our failings and foolishnesses to be known."

Franklin K. Patterson

On accepting the presidency he said, "The reason I accepted the presidency on an interim basis was two-fold and very simple. First, I believed there was a real need for a chief executive to serve the University in an active, deeply committed mode during the transition, interim period — and — if you can forgive an old-fashioned view of things — I saw it as my duty to accept the responsibility as it was defined. Second, I accepted because I understood that the board was prepared, indeed eager, to go forward with certain important current tasks essential for the University's welfare."

"As any other president would," he said, "I will serve only at (the board's) pleasure. In turn, the board should know that, if absence of support for me should develop during the interim period, I will be most happy to return to my professional duties with all dispatch."

Patterson also said the 26-member trustee board "is, and will be.... the most crucial element in the evolving quality of the University itself."

Trustees fill jobs; Chancellor chosen

The UMass Board of Trustees this month filled two positions vacated by resignations and University central office vice president announced her intentions to move on.

UMass-Boston Associate Vice Chancellor Claire Van Ummersen was chosen to replace Carlo L. Golino as chancellor of the Boston campus and George Kaludis was selected to succeed Jay Janis as vice president for management. University Vice President of Planning Nan S. Robinson late last week said she will be leaving UMass to become the deputy commissioner of education in Connecticut in March. No plans have been made yet to name her successor.

The trustees also appointed Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to be senior vice president for University collective bargaining. Bromery last year had served in an interim capacity as executive vice president, with responsibilities for both labor relations on management.

Claire Van Ummersen

The 42-year old Van Ummersen, of Winchester, begins serving as interim chancellor tomorrow while the trustees arrange a search for a permanent successor to the 64-year old Golino. Golino announced his resignation last fall following several months of conflict with the trustees.

Kaludis, 39, is filling a position vacated a year ago by Janis, who became the Undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Kaludis will serve as vice president until the end of this fiscal year in June. He is presently the executive vice president of Ingram Book Company, in Nashville.

Robinson, in March, will be joining a reorganized Connecticut Board of Higher Education, which has only one person who served on the previous board.

Robinson said last week the new Connecticut board "has a mandate for single consolidation" of high education. She said the system there is similar to the system in Massachusetts, which is being evaluated for reorganization by a joint executive-legislative committee. Robinson has been involved with long range planning for UMass and also the joint development of the Boston campus and it's neighborhood in Columbia Point.

Robinson will be receiving a reported $42,000 a year as deputy commissioner in Connecticut. She received $36,350 from UMass.

— JOE QUINLAN

Bromery appointed to 'blue-chip' board

Chancellor Randolph C. Bromery

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, appointed last month to the Board of Directors of the Exxon Corporation recently commented, "it is very difficult to get on the Board of Directors of Exxon. In New York, parlance they call that one of the 'blue-chip' boards."

His responsibilities will include serving on two committees and attending board meetings in New York City. Members of the board are expected to attend at least ten of the twelve board meetings scheduled for one morning every month but said, "It isn't like it's going to interfere with anything. I wouldn't have taken it if it did."

He will be serving on the nominating committee which "reviews the criteria for new persons who may come on the board," as well as the contributions committee which deals with, in part, the corporation's contributions toward higher education.

Bromery said he feels his position on the board is important both for himself personally as well as for UMass. An occurance usually reserved for presidents of private schools, he feels with his appointment he will be able to represent public schools concerns as well as his own.

"The private schools like to get their presidents on these corporate boards because that represents, to move around the table there, a large chunk of corporate America. So, to me, I feel a lot of positive spin-offs, not only for me professionally and personally, but I think for the University and the campus."

Amherst legislators join committees

State Senator John W. Olver and Representative James G. Collins, both of Amherst, have been recently appointed to committees on higher education by Governor Michael S. Dukakis and Speaker of the House Thomas W. McGee.

Olver, an assistant professor of chemistry at UMass prior to being elected to the State legislature, has been named to the New England Board of Higher Education. The Board is charged with directing the expansion of educational opportunities and most efficient use of all resources for postsecondary education throughout New England.

The board is specifically geared towards expanding the educational opportunities in the fields of medicine dentistry, veterinary medicine and other related technical, professional and graduate training.

Olver, vice chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, is in line to replace Ways and Means Chairman James Kelley, (D-Oxford), who will not seek re-election this year. Political observers though say Sen. B. Joseph Tully, (D-Dracut) who now chairs the committee on counties, may be a strong opponent to Olver.

Rep. Collins, appointed vice chairman of the Special Commission on the Reorganization of Public Higher Education in the Commonwealth, will be working on the commission with 15 legislators and 10 appointments made by the governor.

The special commission is created to formally review both the structure of public higher education and the relationship between public and private higher education in Massachusetts.

UMass budget hike only paces inflation

UMass this election year has been granted its first budgetary increase from the governor's office since Gov. Michael Dukakis was elected in 1974.

But University budget officials say the six per cent increase proposed by Dukakis will only allow the University to keep pace with the rate of inflation.

The governor is proposing to allocate $116,303,627 for the University. Last year UMass received $110,313,603 after the legislature tacked on additional monies to the governor's proposal.

Every year since Dukakis became governor, he has proposed level funding for the University budget, an allocation equal to the budget of the previous year but actually less because of the inflation rate.

The legislature has responded in the past by adding more money to the University budget than Dukakis had proposed.

Students spared CC Hotel housing this semester

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

This semester's housing situation "looks good," with 10,500 beds in residence halls assigned and no students housed in either the Campus Center hotel, area fraternities and sororities or dormitory lounges, according to Ashoke Ganguli, a staff assistant with Residential Resource Management.

Last semester about 400 students were left without dormitory rooms, partly a result of the 4,100 entering freshman and transfers, the largest number in UMass history.

Some students staged sit-ins to protest the use of their dormitory floor lounges as makeshift rooms for dorm-less students, on-campus exemption applications were being accepted for juniors and sophomores and staff members of the Housing Office worked overtime daily to find dormitory space for the students, following last semester's housing shortage.

"Things aren't hectic," said Gerald A. Quarles, assistant housing coordinator. "Most people are already assigned."

Fall semesters usually present some problem for housing incoming students, he said, but spring semesters are always easy because the University has a certain amount of students who withdraw after the fall semester, which provides housing spaces. "Lord knows I could use an easy opening," said Quarles.

The total number of registered undergraduate students last fall was 18,161 and last spring's undergraduate students numbered 17,512, according to a spokesperson in the Registrar's Office. The total enrollment for this semester can't be determined until about two weeks after registration, the spokesperson said.

Most of the students left without rooms last semester were male. By the end of the semester they had received room assignments or were moved into converted dormitory lounges. Five students who had been living in the Campus Center hotel since the beginning of the semester chose to stay there until the end..

Dean of Students William F. Field said he has met with some students who lived in the hotel longer than three weeks and whose academic semester was disrupted by the housing shortage, and he has "processed about 50 or 60" reimbursements, based on an individual basis and the amount of time the students were without permanent housing. "The kids who really had a rough time I've already seen," Field said.

To determine what caused the housing problem, a Housing Task Force was formed. "The task force sort of went in intially with the orientation 'Let's find out what happened'," said Paul Hamel, student assistant to the vice chancellor of Student Affairs. But as the group went on, he said, they felt "what happened, happened," and it was more important to look into the system and "redesign it."

The task force consists of "people right in the middle," said Hamel, such as Housing Office and Residencial Resource Management personnel, heads of residence, members of the Physical Plant and is headed by Frederick Preston, acting associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs.

The Housing Task Force is preparing a report to present its findings, but according to Hamel, a release date can't be determined yet.

As ass't provost

Bischoff resigns

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Associate Provost and Dean of the School of Physical Education David C. Bischoff last night said acting Provost Jerimiah M. Allen has indicated he would accept Bischoff's resignation as associate provost.

Allen last night declined to comment about the resignation, saying only "We met this morning and discussed a number of things."

Bischoff was the only dean who did not participate in the controversy which lead to the firing of Paul L. Puryear from his position as provost. Allen, as dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts was one of the deans who requested Puryear to resign.

Allen "indicated he would accept my resignation," Bischoff said last night.

Bischoff said he submitted his resignation early last week because he believes every provost should organize his own staff and also because he thinks he should direct all his time to the School of Physical Education.

Bischoff has been an associate provost for seven years and a dean for six. He said he had also submitted his resignation as associate provost when Puryear became Provost in 1976.

Bischoff is currently the only permanent associate provost in the office because Vere Chappell, the other associate, is on sabbatical leave this semester.

Allen last week in another interview declined to comment on whether he believes it is a conflict of interest for a dean to serve as an associate provost.

Earlier this month nine of the 10 academic deans requested in writing that Puryear resign, and Puryear later requested six of the nine deans to resign.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who had left Puryear in charge of the campus while taking a vacation, returned to the campus and fired Puryear after confering separately with him and the deans.

Bischoff said he remained outside the controversy because he was an administrator in Puryear's office and also a dean.

Acting provost to name dean of humanities

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Acting Provost Jerimiah M. Allen yesterday said a decision on who he would name to the position of deaa of the faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts could "conceivably" be made today, but probably no decision will be made until later this week.

Jeremiah M. Allen, acting provost

Allen has not named a successor to the position, the same position he vacated when he became acting provost.

Sources yesterday told the Collegian there are three prime contenders for the dean's position. They are Richard W. Noland, chairman of the English dept.; Gerald W. McFarland, chairman of the History dept.; and Micheline Dufau, chairman of the French and Italian depts.

Allen yesterday afternoon met with a five-member advisory committee from the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences to discuss possible candidates for the new dean. Contacted after the meeting, Allen said the committee submitted "about a dozen" names to him for consideration.

Allen also yesterday declined to comment on who his successor might be or who he would like to have succeed him, saying "that's not the kind of thing you discuss in public."

Meanwhile, McFarland said he is aware his name is being considered by Allen for the deanship.

"I'm very interested in the position," McFarland said. He said he and Allen have "worked together compatibly" in the past.

Noland and Dufau could not be reached for comment.

Allen was appointed acting provost following the dismissal of Provost Paul L. Puryear earlier this month by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery following a dispute between Puryear and Bromery.

Gluckstern, former provost in finals for UM prez

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Former UMass Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern, now the chancellor at the University of Maryland at College Park, is one of the final 25 candidates being considered to succeed Robert C. Wood as UMass president.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery is also among the final 25 candidates.

Gluckstern left UMass for College Park in 1975 following the research funds scandal in the School of Education. The scandal, uncovered in 1974, involved abuse of federal research grants by some education faculty and also charges of awarding doctorates to undeserving students. The dean of the school, Dwight Allen, resigned in 1975.

Gluckstern last night declined to comment when asked if he is a candidate for the UMass presidency. "I'm enjoying my responsibilities here as chancellor," Gluckstern said.

A search is also being conducted at the University of Maryland to replace the university president when he leaves this spring.

The College Park campus, with a 36,000 student body, is the flagship campus of the University of Maryland multi-campus system. The president of the system operates from an office on the College Park campus.

Collegian sources have said Gluckstern impressed the members of the UMass presidential search committee in an interview earlier this month.

Bromery this weekend said he was surprised when he heard that Gluckstern is among thee candidates for UMass presidency because he thought Gluckstern would inform him personally.

"If I was going to enter my name for president at Gluckstern's university," Bromery said, "I would have phoned him."

A final day with Robert C. Wood

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Three days before Christmas, outgoing UMass President Robert C. Wood was looking forward to his last week on the job after seven years atop a growing three-campus university system.

As he leaned back in his chair and glanced around his spacious office, itself a target of attack by both the University community and the public, he said he felt "increasingly good" as the date for his retirement approached.

"What happens in reality is everyone wants you to sign off on various projects," he said, "I've been looking at every piece of paper no one's looked at before."

The president's office is located in One Washington Mall, opposite the mayor's office in government center in downtown Boston. The rent for the two floors which hold the offices of the University administration is being paid out of interest earned on trust fund monies, ever since the governor said no more state funds could be used to pay the fee.

Yet Wood had managed to maintain his offices in the downtown building, a location convenient for the business he conducted each day — close to the state house and near the offices of the court appointed city-wide coordinating committee, a group who nas been charged with overseeing the School Department's efforts to desegregate Boston schools, and of which Wood is chairman.

His successor, a Frank L. Boydon professor at UMass-Boston, Franklin K. Patterson, will probably oversee the office's move to 100 Arlington street, in a building now used by one of UMass-Boston's colleges. Patterson, as interim president of the University, will serve until a trustee committee selects a permanent successor, a job which could take until summer.

Beacon Hill bills

Wood is interrupted by a visit from a member of the staff in charge of keeping Wood up to date on any and all state legislation which has an affect on UMass.

Kass quickly lists off the status of several items in the legislature and relates the day's gossip.

The hospital study committee, which will look at the proposed pay-back plan for Worcester medical students; an open meeting law which would require the University trustees to open up discussions on personnel, including tenure and hiring; an amendment on the meals tax for an exemption and some mid-year fund transfers were the major items that day.

Wood said there are nearly 100 bills which affect UMass that are proposed every year, and all must be monitored. In some cases, the staff must provide legal briefs or other information to present the University's view on a particular piece of legislation.

One bill, sponsored by a group called the Advisory Committee on Intergovernmental Relations, would require the legislature to approve all federal monies going to the University, which Wood said would mean the legislators would have to approve every federal grant the University won.

Problems with new offices

Wood next sees the planning staff for a discussion of renovations of 100 Arlington street.

Nan S. Robinson, University vice-president in charge of planning, briefs Wood on current problems. It seems the faculty in the College of Public and Community Service will have to be temporarily located in a different area during the spring semester so that renovations to their 8th and 9th floor offices can be completed, along with those on the 12th and 13th floors for the University's central administration.

Robinson will soon be leaving UMass to take a position on the Connecticut Board of Higher Education.

Faculty recently presented Wood with a petition requesting the renovations be done in two stages, so they would not have to be housed in temporary facilities during the coming semester, a method with which Robinson termed "too expensive".

Robinson describes the 100 Arlington street building as "charming", a building constructed for the Boston Gas Company in the 1920's, with plenty of brass, and an art deco decor.

Robinson reported that the renovations were proceeding as scheduled, with the entire job expected to be completed by July, with a $1 million dollar price tag.

Many of the existing rooms at 100 Arlington will retain their original uses — the Boston Gas board room will be used by the UMass trustees as a meeting room, while the Boston Gas president's office will be used by the UMass president.

Robinson also reported on the University's plans to to acquire land on Nantucket Island, supplementing land they already own there.

Wood's report released

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Outgoing UMass President Robert C. Wood's final report, released the week after Christmas was titled "Retrospect and Prospect".

Accordingly, it was filled with the accomplishments of Wood's seven years as University president, along with warnings about the future of the state university in an era of tight budgets and static enrollments.

The 32-page report, characterized as "bittersweet" by the Globe, was largely devoted to the growth of the three UMass campuses during Wood's tenure.

Some examples —

-"Slowly, sometimes more painfully, we have become a system. While respecting the academic and operational autonomy of the individual campuses, we have established a central capacity to plan, to allocate resources, and to coordinate effort and energy on a common basis with an increasing consciousness of our common identity as one institution with many parts.

-"The changes in student demand, belatedly acknowledged across the country, had many sources, including public reaction to campus unrest, a major national recession, the end of the Vietnam War and the draft, and a new wave of 'who needs college?' skepticism. But regardless of the souuce, the changes were clearly reflected in the attitudes and actions of those sensitive barometers of national mood, the state governments."

-"Without tough-minded planning, the future may well mean higher and higher percentages of tenured faculty, less and less attention to the most promising new fields, deterioration of physical facilities, and a loss of flexibility in the face of changing demands and technology."

-"We must be especially alert to proposals to regionalize or homogenize our institutions. Amherst, thrown into a regional confederation of several state and community colleges, would find difficulty in pursuing its university mission. So would Worcester; so would the Harbor Campus. And these arrangements would be no help at all in establishing the appropriate boundary conditions with the private sector.

South Meadow deposits safe

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

South Meadow Apartments tenants' security deposits are safe, according to the Amherst Town Manager's office, despite the initiation of foreclosure proceedings by a Holyoke bank which holds the mortgage on 160 units formerly a part of the Brittany Manor apartment complex.

James Sardate, an assistant to Town Manager Louis Hayward, last Friday reported the security deposits were being held in a special account in the Community Savings Bank of Holyoke. That bank plans to sell its holdings in South Meadow at public auction on February 8 in the complex because the owners have failed to make payments on a $1.8 million mortgage. Sardate said he received his information "directly" from Beverly Durnakowski, the local representative of Colony Management Company of Hartford, Conn., which manages the property. Sardate claimed "indirect" confirmation of the security deposits' safety from a Community Bank vice president.

Amherst area students comprise a majority of the tenants living in the East Hadley Road complex. The Student Legal Services Office is prepared to aid students living in the complex if the safety of the security deposits is not assured. Attorney Michele Leaf said she will work with any tenants who seek LSO assistance.

In 1974, when South Meadow was still a part of Brittany Manor, the owners of the complex were forced into bankruptcy. LSO aided student tenants then in their attempts to recover security deposits.

Owners of the 400 apartments comprising South Meadow and Brittany Manor have had financial troubles with the complex since John C. Chalakos of Windsor, Conn. was forced into bankruptcy while constructing the apartments in 1969. At that time, Community Bank in Holyoke and the Society for Savings in Hartford combined efforts and took control of the complex.

The Society for Savings now holds a $3.5 million mortgage on the 240 units still known as Brittany Manor. The Daily Hampshire Gazette last Thursday reported the Society for Savings was also considering foreclosure proceedings.

Maxwell Belding of Hartford took over the 400 apartments from the two banks and finished construction in 1972. In March of 1973 he sold the property to owners that went bankrupt in 1974. After a year of court control while the bankruptcy proceedings were being completed, Belding and Sol Fromer of New York obtained the apartments through their company, Glenwood Realty Trust. They subsequently set up Brittany-Amherst Realty Trust which took over the complex from Glenwood. Belding is also president of Colony Management Company.

The 1974 bankruptcy helped win passage of an Amherst town bylaw designed to protect tenants' security deposits. The bylaw was ruled invalid by the state Attorney General's office but the town is appealing the ruling.

Last year, the state enacted its own security deposit law. However, Attorney James Starr of LSO said the state law is not as strict as the town bylaw was and does not offer tenants as much protection. Despite the apparent safety of tenants' security deposits, Starr claims the current financial proceedings in South Meadow and Brittany Manor are a good example of the need for the strict town bylaw. He pointed to what he said were insufficiencies in the state law that make it possible for landlords to handle security deposit money in a less strict manner than has been employed in the current situation.

Education conference planned

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Prominent futurist R. Buckminster Fuller who will be serving as a scholar in residence to the UMass Future Studies Program this April will be kicking off a major four-day conference on the future of education.

Fuller will be joined by world heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, who is known also as a unique international spokesman for effective educational opportunities.

The conference, entitled "Learning Tomorrows", is being sponsored by the Future Studies Program, a division of the School of Education. It will be a first for UMass as well as the rest of the country.

"There have been conferences on education and on the future, but never on both," said planner Al Peakes, a graduate student in the Future Studies Program. Peakes, along with a group of other graduate students and faculty members, have been planning the conference since July.

From Apr. 18-21, educators, students, and any interested people are expected to fill the Fine Arts Center and Campus Center to discuss current trends in education through a variety of lectures, seminars, workshops and exhibits from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Topics covered will include racism, sexism, busing, affirmative action, career training, and variables such as population, resources, economics and social structure.

According to Peakes the purpose of the conference will be to try to come to a consensus about what can be done to head education in the right direction. He said it will also help other educators develop Future Studies Programs.

"There are a wide range of opportunities for graduates of future studies programs," said Peakes. "They can be teachers, writers, workers in government, or members of citizen action groups. We have a better than 90 percent placement record in meaningful activities," he said.

At present, there are six other schools in the country offering future studies programs. The UMass program, started seven years ago, is the oldest "Already the conference has had the effect of pulling the school of education together, giving it a new sense of purpose, and revitalizing the faculty and students," said Peakes.

Since the conference is being held during spring break, teachers and administrators from all over New England as well as some from California, Minnesota, Europe and Africa will be able to attend. Conference planners expect some 5,000 people from off campus to attend each day. These people will be charged admission to help defray the cost of the conference, estimated to be some $20,000 to $30,000.

UMass and other five college students will be able to attend the conference free of charge, however. Through a course entitled Seminar: Future of Education Workshop, credit is also available. The course is scheduled number 265074.

Among other speakers at the conference will be leading women futurists Elise Boulding and Hazel Henderson, psychologist Dr. Kenneth Clark, and educators Jonathon Kozal and Roy Edelfelt.

Greek area security tightened

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

New front door locks were installed last week at Chi Omega sorority house in Fraternity-Sorority park in response to an incident at a sister sorority earlier this month at Florida State University where a man killed two women, raped another, and then beat two others before escaping.

"I was nervous," Laurie Killilea, Chi Omega Alumni chairman said Friday. "We had the same locks for the past seven years. Girls lose keys and what happened to our sisters in Florida could easily happen anywhere else. It really sickens me to think someone could do that to innocent people."

Outside locks were to be changed during the semester, she added, but the Florida incident prompted an immediate installation.

Forty women live in the UMass chapter of Chi Omega. The two story building is locked 24 hours a day. An unused rear door is bolted and sealed.

According to Shannon E. Ellis, Greek area director, the security of the 10 sororities in the area is "pretty tight," with many of the houses having barred basement windows and frequently changed combination locks.

"But the biggest security problem can often be the residents," she said. "After a late date, someone can easily forget to shut the front door without realizing. It takes something like the Florida scare to make everyone more conscious."

Ellis said house meetings will be held throughout the Greek system early in the semester to stress the importance of keeping doors and windows locked at night, particularly during the spring weather.

Fraternity-sorority park is under the jurisdiction of the Amherst police force, which also patrols Amherst College and Hampshire College. However, Saul L. Chafin, UMass director of security, said campus police patrol several parking lots in the Greek Area and often extend their coverage to the park houses.

"We encourage these students to utilize us as a resource," Chafin said. "The Florida murders were a tremendous shock. It immediately alerted me to the fact that this department must insure that a similar incident doesn't happen here."

A strong crime prevention awareness drive, emphasizing the importance of locking doors and stopping strangers from entering the houses, will also be held within the sororities and fraternities, he added.

According to Sgt. David Jankowski of the Amherst police force, three off-campus rapes were reported to the department in 1977. Two were hitchhiking-related incidents and one involved a woman swimming nude in the Hadley Resevoir.

On campus, four rapes were reported to UMass security last year. In one incident, a female student met an 18-year-old UMass student at an Amherst bar and she agreed to return to his dormitory with him. After two hearings in Hampshire District Court, the case was dismissed.

Barbara Estabrook, director of the Health Education division of campus Health Services, said this type of "confidence rape" is more likely to occur than the brutal attacks in Florida.

"Women drinking at a bar, even women hitchhiking, have to learn not to go off with a man they don't know well. This is a transient community and there are many vulnerable women here," she said.

The Florida slayings evoked memories at Smith College of an incident two years ago when a sophomore woman was stabbed several times in the back while jogging alone at night near the college.

After recovering a few months later, the student withdrew from Smith. No one has been apprehended for the assault.

"Women have learned to be more watchful. They just can't be out alone after dark and expect to be safe," said a spokesperson for Smith College.

The school has since improved outside lighting and implemented a security van system for women traveling around the campus at night.

Sgt. Jankowski agrees that women living in a college community must be cautious.

"Nuts from all over the Commonwealth know they can come to Amherst and find many vulnerable people. It's a real danger," he said, pointing to the Florida murders as "an unfortunate incident. I just thank God it wasn't here."

Students favor detectors despite minor annoyances

By RITA ZEIDNERE
Collegian Staff

UMass dormitory residents returned from intersession break to find an unfamiliar piece of equipment in their rooms: smoke detectors. Although the Student Government Association had sent out notices that the smoke detectors would be installed, many students entered and didn't know what the little white box on one wall was.

The detectors, installed by University Physical Plant personnel last week, were one of several proposals of a Fire Safety and Prevention Program. Several fires on the UMass campus, plus arsonist scares and the recent Providence College fire have all pointed towards a need for more effective fire safety programs.

All but one student contacted by the Collegian last night said the smoke detection system in dorm rooms is a good idea, and added they will keep the equipment plugged in, despite the shortage of wall sockets. Mary Abot, a freshman who lives in Coolidge said, "I live on the 21st floor and I'd like to know if there was a fire. I'm sure I'll keep it plugged in."

Presently, the detector plugs into the A.C. wall socket. But plans have been made to install the detector directly into walls during the coming summer.

One student contacted who did object to the installation had already unplugged it. "My room already has an overload, and I get sparks out of one plug, so I took it out as soon as I saw it."

But a shortage of plugs is only one of the problems students saw in the detectors. Many students are concerned about how sensitive the equipment is and whether it would inhibit smoking in the room. Others were concerned with how often the alarms would go off because other dorm residents were "testing out" the system.

At the present time, no rigid plans exist to ensure the detectors be kept plugged in. However, heads of residence are emphatic that they remain in use and are devising methods to prevent students from rendering them ineffective.

$4-6 million in renovations recommended

Fire study cites problems

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

An 18-month fire safety study of UMass housing completed during intersession by University personnel recommends safety renovations estimated to cost $4-6 million.

The recommendations are being evaluated this semester by UMass administrators, including Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury and the Director of Environmental Health and Safety Donald Robinson, who directed the study.

Plans have been completed for $300,000 worth of fire safety renovations this summer for Baker, John Adams highrise and Van Meter dormitories.

The study was conducted by Robinson and members of his department and included inspection visits by UMass officials of fire safety equipment at other colleges and inspections of the UMass campus by outside consultants.

Robinson said his department conducted the study under the usual department budget and did not receive additional funding. He estimated the department spent $1,000 to obtain outside consultation.

The first of the recommendations, to install smoke detectors in the campus living quarters of students, was completed this week at cost of approximately $100,000. University officials decided to install the smoke detectors immediately this semester in part as a reaction to both the fatal dormitory fire at Providence College in late December and the series of suspicious fires at McNamara dormitory here on campus during the last several weeks of the fall semester.

University police are still investigating the suspicious fires, usually set in trash rooms or janitor closets during late hours of the night. Nightly patrols of the eight story dormitory by campus security officers are expected to continue at least through the first few weeks of this semester.

The second recommendation of the fire study, to connect the fire alarms of 18 dormitories in the Northeast and Central residential areas to the central monitor system on campus, is expected to be carried out this semester, according to Robinson.

Residents in these dorms presently must report a fire by telephone because the alarms in the buildings only sound an internal warning. Alarms in the other 23 dorms in the areas alert all residents of the building and University police, who have a direct line to the Amherst Fire Department. The alarms also alert physical plant personnel, who also have a direct line to the town fire department.

The fire study found all residence halls to be in compliance with the state fire safety codes at the time of construction, and notes any improvement in fire safety is an elective action by the University because the state code is not retroactive.

The state fire code, revised in 1975, requires every floor of buildings taller than seven stories to be protected by fire sprinklers. The three eight-story Sylvan dorms and the five high rises in Southwest, which would fall under the revised code, were built in the early seventies before the code was modified.

The fire study findings also recommend dorms in Central and Northeast residential areas receive high priority for fire safety renovations because the dorm structures are not as fire resistant as the buildings in the other three residential areas.

The study recommends installation of early warning fire detection and alarm systems, including one-way communication for the residence halls. Smoke detectors would be installed in hallways and other areas which are not being protected by smoke detectors this semester.

Heat detectors connected to a central building alarm system of the dormitories would be installed in the dorm rooms. The smoke detectors now in the dorm rooms only sound a warning audible to people near or in the room. The people then have to pull the hallway alarm to warn others. Robinson said the heat detectors would alarm all residents of the building in case the room on fire is unoccupied.

The planned renovations this summer in Baker, John Adams and Van Meter dorms include installation of smoke detectors in areas not protected now, the heat detectors in rooms, magnetic door holders which would shut fire doors when an alarm is

Five College community ready for fire hazards

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

While UMass student housing is being upgraded for fire safety, most other campus housing in the five college area is already protected by fire safety devices.

All 12 fraternity houses and five of the 14 dormitories at Amherst College are protected by water sprinklers in the basements and a combination of rate of rise heat detectors, fixed temperature detectors and smoke detectors in students' rooms, hallways, closets and stairwells, according to the college Physical Plant Director William A. Mueller.

Mueller said the warning devices are all tied into a central alarm in each of the buildings. The buildings' alarms are tied directly into the Amherst Fire Department, according to Mueller.

There are nine other dormitories on the campus not yet equipped with smoke or heat detectors because the dorms are newer and more fire resistant than the other housing units, Mueller said.

The nine dorms do have pull boxes and may eventually be equipped with additional devices as the college fire program continues, Mueller noted.

Heat detectors are in rooms of two of the five residential areas of Hampshire College, and college officials plan to install smoke detectors in at least one other residential area this spring, according to college spokesman Peter Gluckler.

Gluckler said the call boxes in all the housing units are connected to a central monitoring board on campus and then a supervisor there contacts the Amherst Fire Department.

Fire extinguishers and other fire devices on the campus are checked on a bi-weekly schedule, Gluckler said.

The 40 residence halls at Smith College are equipped with water sprinklers and call boxes tied directly into the Northampton Fire Department. Heat detectors are also in some buildings.

Northampton Fire Chief James C. Murray last week said Smith College officials have been "very fire conscious." He said the campus is well protected from fires."

The older buildings at Mount Holyoke College are equipped with water sprinklers and fire escapes, according to college spokeswoman Irma Rabbino. Fire drills and training sessions on fire prevention are also conducted.

Rabbino said the fire alarms alert the college operator, who then contacts the South Hadley Fire Department.

South Hadley Fire Chief John Cleary said the only problem he has with protecting Mount Holyoke College is the time delay in responding to an alarm because there are no full time fire fighters in his station; they are only on call.

There have been no fatal fires at Mount Holyoke but Cleary said he is "fearful it will take something to wake someone up" about full time fire fighters in his station.

He said he has been requesting full time personnel since 1971, without any luck. The other station in South Hadley has a staff and a back-up crew on call.

Snow budgets running low

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Amherst and two other area towns have already used up most or all of their snow removal funds for this winter.

Of Amherst's original snow removal budget of $56,285, $5,000 remains, said Stanley Ziomek, town superintendent of public works. Amherst has approximately 105 miles of roads to plow; translating into 210 because both sides of the roads must be plowed, said Ziomek.

Hadley, with 80 miles of roads, has $8,000 left of its original $37,000 snow removal budget, said Leonard Kostek, of the town highway department.

The Belchertown highway department, originally allotted $50,000 for snow removal, received another $10,000 at a special town meeting held late in December. This additional money is from a "free cash" surplus fund certified by the state, according to a secretary in the Belchertown selectman's office.

UMass and Sunderland officials said their departments are working within allotted snow removal funds.

If Amherst does run out of snow removal money, as Ziomek said he expects it will, the town's finance committee may transfer funds from its reserve account or the public works department may operate in deficit until the May Town Meeting appropriates more money.

Hadley's Town Accountant Mary Fitzgibbon said whether the snow removal budget is sufficient depends on how much snow falls during the rest of the winter. "We have more money available if we need it," she said.

Most area towns contract with residents or private firms during the winter months for some snow removal. Belchertown hires about 11 outside people with dump trucks and plows to clear side roads while four town vehicles plow and sand the main roads, said town truck driver Richard Plant.

UMass hires people to supplement its force of six plows, one road sander, three sidewalk plower-sanders and five front-end loaders.

Amherst hires five private trucks for plowing and owns 18. The outside people are paid $18-20 per hour. The job, allotted $5,000 in the original snow removal budget, is awarded by bid.

Neither Sunderland nor Hadley have used any outside contracting this winter. Sunderland has two sanders and three plows, said Charles Hepburn, town highway superintendent.

Hadley had seven trucks equipped with plows, said Kostek. Three can also serve as sanders.

Northampton is having a "serious ice problem" and is working on ruts in the road now, said Mary Ksieniewicz, head clerk at the highway department. City crews have been busy and were unavailable for further comment.

Most town officials said the winter has been severe. "It's now the worst in ten years," said Ziomek of Amherst, "it just seems like it." "Snow you can handle, but ice and sleet are more aggravation because of the chemicals and sand," said Ziomek.

Hepburn, of Sunderland, said it's been a "tough winter."

Albert Potter, head of grounds and transportation at UMass, said recent weather has been "terrible," but comparable to last year's intersession.

But Kostek of Hadley and Plant of Belchertown, said it's about the same as any winter.

Both Ziomek of Amherst and Potter of UMass said they were grateful school was not in session during these recent storms. "It makes our jobs easier because there are less cars and parties," said Ziomek.

"We have problems when people park overnight in areas they're not supposed to," said Potter. He said during intersession the staff concentrates on the "main arteries and core parking lots" when a snow storm occurs but when school is in session "everything must get done right away."

"We have to treat sidewalks here like main highways," said Potter.

Snow, rain cause leakage problems

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Unusual accumulations of snow and rain causing fears of roof collapse and cellar flooding created concern and problems for the five college area last week. Concern, stemming mainly from reports of roof collapses in the northeast region and actual roof leakage prompted personnel from area colleges and local apartment complexes to survey roof for damage and conduct extensive snow removal from rooftops.

Director of Building Operations for the Campus Center Dudley Bridges reported leakage problems in the Student Union and Campus Center, but no serious damages were reported.

The Student Union building was closed last Thursday when people working in the Recognized Student Organization office noticed water leaking through windows. Assistant Coordinator of Student Activities said staff members in the RSO and student senate were advised to leave their offices while a check was made of the roof.

The building reopened Friday after the building operations staff removed snow from the roof and cleared blocked drainpipes that were causing water and snow to build up.

"This was really just a precaution," Bridges said. "The building (Student Union) is sound and has a lot of roof support. The Campus Center has always had a leakage problem."

Director of Residential Resource Management, Robert Campbell said there appeared to be no major problems with residence halls. "The only thing we might be concerned about would be the roofs, leaking and such," Campbell said. "There has been some degree of (water) infiltration, but nothing major," he added.

Campbell also said his department conducted roof surveys on residence halls, checking snow and water build-up on roofs in Southwest, Orchard Hill and Central residential areas. He said there is no danger of roof collapses, referring to the recent collapses of the Hartford Civic Center Collisium roof.

"This is nothing like the Hartford Civic Center — we have load bearing walls that can take the weight — the buildings are build differently, ours have good support," he said.

Director of the UMass Physical Plant, George Norton, said leakage problems in the academic buildings paralled those described by Bridges and Campbell. "The problem is we have some bad roofs to start with and we don't have the money to replace them," Norton said. Norton said there were a number of "typical roof problems" that are to be expected in the winter. He said the accumulation was unusual and snow removal efforts from rooftops were successful in keeping ice and snow buildup under control.

Local apartment managers reported roof and basement leakages, especially in buildings with flat roofs. Brittany Manor management purchased two water pumps when water accumulation caused several roofs to leak. None of the local managements said they had any major problems; all said the weather was unusual and made snow removal from rooftops necessary.

Managers at two local hardware stores reported an unusual run on sump pumps. Managers at both stores said leakages usually occur in the spring when the snow melts and subsequently were stocked low on pumps. Both stores sold all pumps in stock and managers said they have been unable to order more.

Spokesmen for Amherst, Hampshire and Mt. Holyoke colleges said their colleges experienced roof and basement leakages in buildings and college personnel had taken precautionary measures, including snow removal from roofs.

A spokesman for Smith College could not be reached for comment. Slight basement flooding seemed to be more of a problem than leaking roofs, but spokesmen at the colleges reported "nothing dramatic", "nothing catastrophic", and "nothing serious."

LeDeaux files suit ; claims care inadequate

(HER SAY) — Former American Indian Movement Activist Joanna LeDeaux Meyer has filed a $50,000 (dollar) claim against the U.S. Department of Justice, saying that the federal government failed to provide her and her infant with adequate care while she was incarcerated for refusing to talk to a federal grand jury.

LeDeaux, who participated in the Wounded Knee occupation in 1973, was imprisoned at a Yankton, South Dakota, facility after she refused to testify before a grand jury investigating the Wounded Knee incident. Shortly thereafter, she discovered she was pregnant.

While at Yankton, LeDeaux claims her health worsened, and she asked to be released. Instead, Federal Judge Andrew Bogue, who had originally sentenced LeDeaux, ordered her transferred to Terminal Island Federal Prison in Los Angeles, 1500 miles away.

LeDeaux claims she arrived at the prison in "markedly deteriorated condition," and several months later gave birth to a son by Caesarian section. Following the birth of her son, federal authorities set her free, rather than risk a precedent-setting court decision to allow her to keep her son with her in prison.

LeDeaux contends that while the federal government may legally deny her her freedom in efforts to coerce her into testifying, she had not been convicted of any crime. Therefore, she claims, the government did not have a right to also punish or mistreat her.

She claims she suffered malnutrition and stress, and that she received inadequate medical care while in prison. LeDeaux says such mistreatment exceeded the Justice Department's right to imprison her in efforts to make her talk to the grand jury.

LeDeaux's attorney, John Doyle, says he has sent medical records to the Justice Department which back up the Native American woman's claims of being mistreated while imprisoned. He says the Department of Justice must indicate by April 11th of this year whether it accepts or rejects LeDeaux's claim.

If the government rejects it, Doyle says a suit will be filed on LeDeaux's behalf in federal court against the Justice Department.

Safe detection method found for breast cancer

(HER SAY) — The controversial mammography method of detecting breast cancer may soon give way to a safe and accurate test for early diagnosis of breast tumors.

Science News magazine reports that researchers at the Sloan-Kettering Memorial Cancer Center in New York have come up with a test that identifies benign and malignant tumors by small differences in heat. A miniature heat detector, says the magazine, is used to compare the temperature of the forehead to the temperatures of nine sections of each breast.

According to Science News, the new method was 80 per cent accurate for detecting benign tumors in recent tests on 282 patients.

The magazine says that malignant tissue remains at a high temperature while benign tissue cools, thus allowing doctors to find cancerous spots on the breast or elsewhere on the body.

Murder statute reviewed; constitutionality questioned

[HER SAY] — The Washington State Supreme Court will hear oral arguments on March 13th on whether the state felony murder statute Yvonne Wanrow is charged with is constitutional.

Wanrow, a Native American Resident of Washington, faces retrial under that statute for the second degree murder shooting of convicted rapist William Wesler, and first degree assault on David Kelley, Wesler's companion. Wanrow's previous conviction on these charges was overturned by the high court in 1976, and a new trial ordered.

Under the Washington Felony Murder Law, the prosecution does not have to prove a defendant was intending to kill in order to obtain a conviction. It only has to demonstrate that the accused intended to commit a t a felony, and that the felony led the high court in 1976, and a new trial ordered.

Under the Washington Felony Murder Law, the prosecution does not have to prove a defendant was intending to kill in order to obtain a conviction. It only has to demonstrate that the accused intended to commit a felony, and that the felony led to someone's death. Prosecutors contend that Wanrow intended to commit - a felonious assault because she shot at both Wesler and Kelley.

During her 1973 trial, Wanrow admitted that she shot both Wesler and Kelley, after Wesler broke into her house and tried to attack her and her children. Kelley, who followed Wesler into Wanrow's house, was also accidentally shot, Wanrow contends, while she was attempting to defend herself.

Abortion researchers say childbearing uneffected

[HER SAY] — Two researchers say that women who undergo abortions do not lose or have their ability to bear children changed by the abortion operation.

The two research scientists, Janet R. Daling and Irvin Emanuel, report in The New England Journal of Medicine that abortions "do not affect any measure of fetal or infant health, including low birth weight, premature delivery, still-birth, neonatal death, miscarriage or congenital malformations."

The investigators reached their conclusion after analyzing 4,896 pregnancies reported in Seattle between 1972 and 1976. Daling and Emanuel paired women with and without histories of abortion on the basis of age, number of pregnancies, previous fetal deaths and socio-economic status. They discovered no difference in the birth rates between the two groups.

Six women selected for space shuttle

[HER SAY] — Six women are among the 35 candidates selected by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to begin training for the nation's space shuttle program.

The six women were chosen from over 6800 applications received by NASA for mission specialist and over 1200 for the pilot categories.

The women — who did not qualify for the pilot categories, mainly because they had no military experience test flying jets — will serve as mission specialists, coordinating, as one of the candidates described, "The scientific objectives of the space flights."

Bill proposed to license lay midwives

[HER SAY] — Hearings were held on January 16th on a bill introduced in the California Assembly which would create a procedure for licensing lay midwives in that state.

The bill comes on the heels of a recent California decision that ruled that lay midwives who delivered babies were not guilty of practicing medicine without a license.

Medicine, the court reasoned, was used in treating sickness. Pregnancy, that court said, is not a sickness.

Under the proposed law, lay midwives and nurse midwives would both apply to the state certification board to get a license to deliver babies.

Student sues school for sexual discrimination

[HER SAY] — A Yale University undergraduate student has won the right to sue her school for sexual discrimination in U-S District Court.

Six persons had initially brought suit against the school, claiming they had suffered discrimination because instructors sought sexual favors.

U.S. Magistrate Arthur Latimer ruled, however, that of the six, only Pamela Price, a Yale senior, might continue with the suit in U-S District Court. Latimer said in his ruling: "It is perfectly reasonable to maintain that academic advancement conditioned upon submission to sexual demands constitutes sex discrimination in education."

This is the first time a university has been sued in federal court for sex discrimination under U.S. education laws. If found guilty, the university could lose all federal funding.

New Jersey ruling on wife-beating cases

[HER SAY] — Women can file suit against their husbands if they are victims of wife-beating, according to a recent ruling by the New Jersey State Appeals Court.

New Jersey Judge Sylvia Pressler, in a written opinion handed down last week, stated that the old common law doctrine that prevents one spouse from suing the other does not apply when a husband beats his wife.

Pressler added that "in a civilized society, wife beating is self-evidently neither a marital privilege nor an act of simple domestic negligence."

The judge stated that her decision was based on a 1974 state supreme court ruling that permitted a woman to sue her son-in-law for the wrongful death of her daughter.

Thomson denounced

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson's praise of the racist regime of South Africa was denounced Sunday from the pulpit in some of New Hampshire's churches.

A joint statement by 14 of the state's top religious leaders in the New Hampshire Council of Churches said Thomson's praise of the white supremacist nation which he visited for 11 days cannot go unchallenged.

Thomson returned to New Hampshire on Saturday, changing his itinerary to avoid demonstrators in Manchester and Concord.

The conservation Republican governor had said South Africa has a free press and free elections, the Soweto ghetto is "just wonderful," Soweto's houses are finer than those of some of his neighbors in Orford, the Voice of America misrepresents South Africa and that U.S. policy toward the apartheid country is meddlesome and "unanmerican."

Only the white minority is allowed to vote in South Africa.

Soweto is a segregated township for blacks where bloody riots occurred in 1976.

The joint statement was distributed to all churches, its signers urging that the message be shared with all congregations.

A member of state's religious community said the statement was not delivered soon enough to be read in all churches, but that it would be published or read from the pulpit in coming days.

The statement was read in some church however, including those of the Roman Catholic Diocese, where congregations also heard an earlier statement from the Catholic Bishops' Conference of South Africa.

The statement by the New Hampshire clergymen said, in part:

"Governor Thomson is quoted as having referred to a high level of freedom in that anguished land. Our Christian consciences will not allow this statement to go unanswered.

"....the situation is quite to the contrary...injustices and denials of freedom...continue unabated."

The pastoral statement called "upon the people of our several communions to become informed about the situation in South Africa in regards both to the churches and to the nation, to hold the people of South Africa warmly in our prayers, and to take whatever action each considers to be appropriate."

Thomson could not be reached for comment.

The South African Roman Catholic bishops statement dealt specifically with Soweto riots.

Demonstrators avoided

Gov. Thomson apparently decided to avoid an unwelcome reception Saturday and landed in Boston on his way back from South Africa.

About 40 demonstrators had congregated at the Manchester airport to protest Thomson's trip to the racially torn country, which the governor has characterized as "fascinating and inspiring."

Upon learning that Thomson would land in Boston and not Manchester, the group went to the governor's residence in Concord where it planned to hold a vigil, but Thomson went to his farm in Orford instead.

"If the governor chooses not be held accountable to the people of his state, that's his prerogative. But he is showing his cowardice by not landing here," said John Kavanaugh, leader of the demonstrators.

Thomson has received considerable criticism from political opponents for the South African trip, financed by a private group with close ties to the government of John Vorster.

Thomson told reporters before leaving Johannesburg that the news media has distorted conditions in South Africa. He said the country considers itself at war against communism, and therefore is justified in many of its policies.

He said he considers the segregated black township of Soweto a better community than some of America's decaying inner cities.

Two members of the state Executive Council have complained that Thomson's trip inhibited the normal flow of state business and they accused him of neglecting his duties.

The governor said he is "distressed to see the friendly relations that have long existed between the United States and South Africa destroyed by the inane, dangerous and meddlesome foreign policy of the Carter administration."

Thomson said blacks in South Africa enjoy "more political and economic freedom...than in many of the new nations of Africa."

Thomson, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, made the trip as part of the group's effort to call attention to various aspects of the Carter administration foreign policy which it opposes.

Drug control advised

HANOVER, N.H. [UPI] — A drug popularly used in place of aspirin to reduce pain should be more strictly controlled, according to an assistant professor of medicine at Dartmouth medical school.

Dr. Herbert Bonkowsky of Norwich, Vt., said Sunday the drug acetaminophen is present in 244 different preparations including several non-prescription drugs popularly used in place of aspirin.

Bonkowsky, in a paper submitted to the AMERICAN Federation of Clinical Research, said studies indicated the drug, if taken in large daily doses, might damage the liver. He added incidence of liver damage resulting from chronic use of the drug is still unknown, but new evidence calls for caution in its use.

He said there is a need for stricter controls and restraint in the use of the drug, pending further research.

We're back

It's that time of year again. The weather stinks, and won't get much better for another three months. It's the first month of 1978, and most of us are still trying to forget 1977. Our income tax forms have come in the mail, right on time, while Whitmore summons us back to school with our grade an course preregistration mailings three weeks late.

Lots of things have happened while we were gone. It snowed a bit. Provost Puryear asked for the resignations of six deans, and then Chancellor Bromery asked for Provost Puryear's resignation. They installed smoke detectors in every room (why don't you give them a test try?).

On the world and National scene, Charlie Chaplin died, Sadat and Begin stopped talking, and the roof of the Hartford Civic Center came crashing down. Let's talk about something else.

There are a few things coming up this semester that warrant attention. The governor is up for another term. Hmmm. The job of president of UMass is still up for grabs, as is the Provost's. And of course, there is always the annual slugfest some people like to call Student Government elections.

But excluding all that, welcome back to UMass. We hope you get involved in something and make your stay here worthwhile. Good luck.

The "Alphabet Soup Brigade"

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

Kent State update: The Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade, formerly the Revolutionary Student Brigade, formerly the Attica Brigade, (identity crisis?) has been thrown out of the May 4th Coalition, according to a recent edition of Yipster Times, the newspaper of the Youth International Party.

The RSB became the RCYB at their much publicized convention (remember "come to the founding of a young communist organization"), when they joined with another youth group of the Revolutionary Communist Party, Youth In Action, the RCP's urban organization.

According to UMass student from Andover, Mass, Russell Swan, the Youth International Party (Yippies) plans to hold a "Festival of Life" at Kent State May 4th, on the eighth anniversary of the Kent State Massacre, when four Kent State students were killed by Ohio National Guard.

The Revolutionary Student Communist Youth Alphabet Soup Brigade has lost favor with UMass students due to their attempts to force the students who traveled to Kent State with the then RSB to conform to their repressive intolerance of pot smoking. Their "vanguardist messiah complex leaders of the people" self image didn't help them a whole lot either.

With the R.blah blah blah B. out of the way, Swan says all he needs is an R.S.O. account to get money for his Yippie trip. He has suggested the New America Movement as one possibility, as the NAM account is currently inactive, he said.

Swan fucked up his last attempt at being a Yippie leader when his smoke-in miscarried because he made himself the whole show. The protest against the ridiculous marijuana laws would have involved a whole bunch of people getting high on the Amherst Common in open defiance of those ridiculous laws; an example of pot smoking as an act of civil disobedience — which it is regardless of space and time.

The reason the smoke-in never occurred was that Russell put his telephone number on the posters announcing the demonstration. This made him personally liable, so he heeded the advice of his lawyer and called it off, according to informed sources.

According to other sources, Swan's screw-up has earned him a prominent position on the Youth International Party's shit list, and now he is trying to re-ingratiate himself with them. However, he was furious when the Collegian asked him for details on the planned "Summer of Love" style "be-in" that is supposed to occur on May 4th. His reasons for refusing the Collegian? He wants to run the public relations campaign all by himself.

The Revolutionary Communist Party calls itself the true party of the American working class, but the truth is they aren't. They just think they are. They are a reactionary group. I learned that at their much hyped convention. They took positions against the Equal Rights Amendment, gay rights, marijuana, and busing.

I know those jerks very well. I had to put up with them during three round trips to Kent State.

They don't like to see people getting high because they don't like people being relaxed. But they don't mind drinking. If you've ever sat in on a session of district court, you have probably observed that people are constantly there for things they did while under the influence of alcohol, but rarely for things they did while under the influence of grass. But people do appear before the law for having the good stuff due to stupid laws that the R.C.Y.B. evidently supports.

They think that pot prevents "militancy." That's the same reason they didn't like Julius Lester's poem "The Kent State Massacre" that was printed on the front page of Below the Salt — it showed that after the four students were killed in 1970, a lot of people didn't feel very militant, but rather bummed out, and felt like taking off their marching shoes.

Listening to them vehemently denounce

jim paulin

gay people, you would have thought they were trying to recruit Anita Bryant.

Their position against the ERA aligns them with the John Birch Society, Ronald Reagan and the Sovietphile Communist Party U.S.A., whom they consider themselves so much better than.

The main difference between the two Marxist Leninist lovers is that R.C.P. hates Russia and loves China (or at least Maoist China, but Mao's dead and they're all confused over what to do — you know how hard it can be to accept the death of a loved one). There is a revolution occurring in China now; The Industrial Revolution, as I remember reading what the chairman, Hua Kuo Feng was quoted as saying somewhere.

On the other hand, C.P.U.S.A. detests China, but is absolutely crazy about Russia, regardless of how oppressive and totalitarian the U.S.S.R. is.

As far as I'm concerned, you can take the R.C.P. and all its marionettes and put them on a slow boat to China. Too bad for them, though, that they don't have China's permission to act as their representative here, as does the Marxist Leninist Party U.S.A., formerly the October League.

So when China tells them to fuck off and turn around and go back home, they can come back and have the same right in this ideally free society to say what the hell they want, even if it includes them sawing off the branch they're sitting on when they go around trying to deny freedom of speech to fascist groups like the American Nazi Party and the Ku Klux Klan and announcing their intentions to kick the shit out of them.

Another R.C.P. puppet, the National United Workers Organization, assembled by the R.C.P. at a convention in Chicago last Labor Day weekend, lionized the man who rose to prominence for drunkenly driving his car into a Klan demonstration in Plains, Georgia. This is the classic theory of exemplary violence — violence as a good example.

NUWO would come to the demonstrations wearing hardhats with stickers on the front of the helmets telling the Nazis and Klan to beware because NUWO planned to run them out of town.

What R.C.P. is trying to do is form a private army. Another one of their front groups, the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, would always show up at Kent State demonstrations wearing full battle gear, carrying everything but guns.

This is not the same VVAW that was active during the Vietnam War. R.C.P. gained control by establishing paper chapters to gain voting rights. The present version of the VVAW is a counterfeit copy. But this is typical of the R.C.P.: infiltration is one of their favorite tactics.

They tried to do the same thing with the May 4th Coalition, the opposition to the siting of the gym on the site of the 1970 travesty.

What happened at Kent State in 1970 was not really a class issue, but if you listened to the RCP speakers it was. After a while, you could tell it was the same collective front talking because they all said the same thing; basically ... that capitalism was the reason Troop G of the Ohio National Guard turned and fired and killed the four students. It seemed obvious that their R.C.P. public relations was running the show, since the then R.S.P. used the same lines in their newspaper Fightback, and in the press release from their national office, published in the Collegian by R.S.B. member Peter Kracht under the headline "Better than punk rock."

Eiffel's erection

our man in paris

He was a little man and on this side of unappealing. If God played dice with looks he was rolled a snake-eyes. Then again it's been mostly the small and ugly who've done great things for France. Charles Eiffel was no exception.

In 1886, at the age of fifty-five, he was the premier architect in France. His specialty was bridges, and he was the first man in history to build them entirely of steel. Drawing his inspiration from the viaduct shape of most of his bridge creations, he submitted his Tower design in September of 1886 to the Paris Council in charge of putting on the 1889 World Exposition. There were seven hundred other entries, including one in favor of a huge guillotine, and another proposing the erection of a revolving and completely naked Jeanne D'Arc. Fearful that the latter might give rise to other erections, the council chose Eiffel's project.

He was given a million and a half francs by the city of Paris and all financial rights to the Tower until 1909, at which time the city would assume its ownership. A million and a half francs not nearly sufficient for the Towers construction, Eiffel formed the "Eiffel Tower Society". He enlisted the help of hundreds of backers who put up the necessary capital. Keeping to the agreement, everyone of the stockholders turned over their shares to the city in 1909, everyone, that is, but one awkward sniffle of a man, who insisted on keeping his little part of the Tower. To continue to pay him dividends was out of the question so the city gave him a room on the second floor where he lived for the next forty years. This one loose financial end was finally wrapped up in 1949 when he moved onto a far greater room. His inheritors had no desire to live in the Eiffel tower.

Eiffel also needed another kind of help. As his was going to be the tallest edifice in the history of man he needed more than an ordinary mason to go about welding and hammering three hundred meters above the nearest hardware store. He made out a list of 250 men, all of whom had at least one of three backgrounds. Many of them had worked for Eiffel building bridges, a number were mountain climbers, and the rest were Navajo Indians from the States, as members of this tribe, for some unexplained reason, do not suffer dizzyness from tremendous heights.

Now deaths are a frequent occurence when it comes to the construction of a tall building or monument; so frequent in fact that it's not unusual for an architect to figure such expenses into the overall cost of his project. Eiffel went to many pains to insure that no such tragedy would mar his dream, and during the two years of building there was not a fatal accident.

Unfortunately, as is the destiny of any construction high enough above ground (or water, as in the case of the Golden Gate Bridge), the Tower has seen over three hundred suicides since its inauguration in 1889. It claimed its first victim two years after, in 1891. He was a mechanic who, ironically, didn't jump but rather hung himself in the East Pillar. They found him naked. He had willed his clothes to Eiffel. The most bizarre death had to be that of a mad tailor named Treichalt in 1911. He invited journalists and photographers from all over Paris to watch him demonstrate the aerodynamic capabilities of a macfarlane raincoat he insisted would billow out like a parachute. He had springs sewn into the coat in case something should go wrong. Something must have because it was the last suit he ever made for himself.

As for Eiffel, he died twelve years after the tailors jump at the age of 92, having given the world a monument whose history is as varied and intriguing as that of any line of French kings, a history I'm afraid it is impossible to do justice to in the matter of a few short paragraphs.

Horror and humor stories

bill sundstrom

Contrary to popular belief, the roof of the Student Union Building is not a one-piece "space frame" like the former roof of the Hartford Civic Center. However, it is quite true that the building was closed down last Thursday due to "water on the roof." Whether this means there was some fear of collapse, or just that things were getting rather damp on the fourth floor, is uncertain.

Students at UMass are used to leaky buildings by now. Polyethylene tarps hung to collect rain water with plastic barrels underneath have become a "permanent" fixture in the Campus Center concourse. That structure has failed rather miserably to serve the basic function of protecting its occupants from the elements.

The 79 dollars you pay every year to finance the Campus Center doesn't seem to be enough to finance the patching of the leaks that keep CC maintenance people busy every rain storm or spring thaw. It's estimated that a thorough repair job on the Campus Center roof would cost two million dollars, which would require the refinancing of the building and (of course) additional fees for students.

Then again, don't take any comfort in thinking that when the CC debt is finally paid off with your money it will be owned by the students, who essentially paid for the bulk of it. Rather, the state will be proud possessor, if indeed the entire building hasn't filled up with water and slid into the campus pond. And in the words of one student senator, we'll all be long dead by the time the debt service is finally "retired" anyway.

The history of the Campus Center complex is almost as full of holes as the building itself. Whether there are any major scandals involved or merely bureaucratic incompetence is of secondary importance to the fact that students are paying for a building they neither own nor effectively control.

At least the leaks may have some deterrent effect on potential fires in the building. The dorms on campus, which generally aren't as porous, are being equipped with smoke detectors for every room this semester. That move, which comes at a time when the tragic pre-Christmas fire at Providence College is still fresh in most people's minds, as well-intended, but a major case of over-reaction. Southwest tower residents may sleep more securely knowing they will be aroused when fire breaks out in a nearby room, but only for a couple of days. At that time it will be discovered by at least a few hundred bozos on campus that the detectors emit a delightfully obnoxious noise, one which may soon replace the loud stereo as the number one scourge of dorm-dwelling insomniacs.

Had the university officials in charge of the smoke detectors exhibited a little moderation and installed several on each corridor rather than one in each room, we'd all sleep much more soundly.

While the dorms will be a little safer (if noisier) this year, they will remain poorly maintained, crowded, and worst of all mandatory for most undergraduates. A number of students are attempting to establish a dormitory lease at UMass, which many other campuses have. With a lease, our university landlords would be contractually required to perform certain basic functions, and the presently ambiguous relationship between the administration, physical plant and students would be more clearly delineated.

There is also a move afoot to abolish the mandatory housing regulation, including a reactivated lawsuit to that effect. Administrators are worried that students would choose not to live on campus were they not forced to, which is a pretty legitimate fear. On-campus living is expensive to the point of absurdity if one looks at per-square foot costs and the kinds of living conditions dorm-dwellers often have to put up with. On the other hand, the tremendously increased demand for off-campus housing which would result from eliminating mandatory dorm living would push prices up enough to send many students back on campus again.

Ultimately, the administration would be wisest to let students live where they want, and spend residence hall funds on needed renovations rather than on unnecessary land purchases as has been the practice on occasion. Dorm life can and should be attractive to students — presently it is something to get away from as soon as possible.

Horror and humor stories about campus buildings abound — but somehow they lose their appeal when they cease to be just stories and begin to affect the ability of the institution to educate and accommodate students. People who express concern about student apathy and a-intellectualism need look only as far as the physical structures of the university to find one source of the problem.

Authorities investigate sewerage breakdown

SPRINGFIELD [UPI] — An investigation is underway about what caused a breakdown at the city's sewage treatment plant that resulted in millions of gallons of untreated sewage being dumped in the Connecticut River.

It's impossible to tell exactly how much sewage was dumped when the main facilities and the backup system failed at the $35 million Bondi's Island plant, project engineer John Godfrey said Monday.

He said about 50 million gallons of sewage is treated at the plant each day.

Godfrey said the system failed last Tuesday, the backup system broke down Wednesday and the plant was back in operation Saturday with emergency repairs. He said the culprit could be workmanship, materials or specifications.

"I don't want to point the finger at anyone until I know the cause," he said.

The plant, which was dedicated last month, is still under construction.

Godfrey said the city had to obtain a permit from the state Water Pollution Control Division before the sewage was dumped in the river, and said the city now may be fined for polluting.

Registry reinstates drivers' licenses

PITTSFIELD [AP] — The Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles has voluntarily reinstated the licenses of two drivers involved in fatal accidents pending court action on its right to suspend the licenses without hearings.

The action came Monday during a court session where two Berkshire County residents involved in separate accidents were fighting to win hearings before their driving privileges are suspended.

Alfred Barbalunga, an attorney for the registry, said the state will show it has authority to suspend licenses without hearings in fatal accident cases. Full-scale oral arguments in the dispute are set for next month at Berkshire Superior Court in Pittsfield.

Samuel Ditore, of Pittsfield, and Irene J. Cole, of Dalton, claim the registry has no constitutional authority to suspend licenses automatically. They had sought an injunction halting their license suspensions.

Berkshire Superior Court Judge Charles R. Alberti ordered both sides to submit briefs before a Feb. 27 hearing.

Leonard H. Cohen, lawyer for the two motorists, said he bases his case on a federal court ruling last year that it was unconstitutional for Massachusetts to impose 90-day automatic license suspensions on motorists arrested for drunken driving who refuse to take a breathalyzer test. The court said hearings must be held first.

"There's even a greater violation in this particular instance," Cohen said, because drivers involved in fatal accidents "are never afforded a chance to make any judgments," such as whether to submit to a breath test.

Both drivers currently are awaiting District Court trial on motor vehicle charges brought against them as a result of fatal accidents.

Health Board meets to discuss drowning

AGAWAM [UPI] — The Board of Health called a special meeting Monday night to discuss the weekend drowning of a young woman in a three-foot deep whirlpool bath at the Roman Health Spa.

Board chairperson Jane Nunn said the meeting was for informational purposes only and said there was no reason to suspect any safety violations at the spa. Police said they were reviewing safety standards for spas.

The victim — Deborah Ann O'Keefe, 25, of Agawam — was found Friday night in the whirlpool by another patron and was dead on arrival at Baystate Medical Center's Wesson Unit.

Medical Examiner William Mosig told O'Keefe's family she has been under water for at least 20 minutes, judging from the amount of water in her lungs. Mosig ruled the death was from accidental drowning.

O'Keefe was a registered nurse at the Springfield Unit of Baystate Medical Center. Her family said she suffered from multiple sclerosis.

Mt. Holyoke alumna elected president there

SOUTH HADLEY — Historian Elizabeth T. Kennan has been elected president of her alma mater, Mount Holyoke College, it was announced last night. She was elected during a special college trustee meeting Sunday.

The 39-year old Kennan is the first alumna of the 141 year old women's college to serve as its president in this century.

The college is the oldest continuing college for women in the country. There are 2,000 students enrolled in the college.

Kennan is also the third woman president in the Five College community. Jill Kerr Conway is president of Smith College and Adelle Smith Simmons is president at Hampshire. Simmons was appointed last year.

Kennan will replace David B. Truman, who retires July 1 after serving nine years as president.

Kennan, a medieval scholar, was graduated summa cum laude from Mount Holyoke in 1960. She is associate professor of history at the Catholic University of America in Washington and director of its Medieval and Byzantine Studies program in Early Christian Humanism.

A 13 member search committee appointed by the college trustees last March recommended Kennan a month before its deadline.

Report on North Amherst accepted by Selectmen

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen accepted the final report of the North Amherst Center Committee last night but postponed making any recommendations on the controversial report.

The report provides for some major changes in the North Amherst Center area. Among the changes are the moving of the North Amherst Library to enlarge storage space, realigning Sunderland Road to form a safer "T" intersection with Montague Road, and building a parking area.

The report does not provide for the destruction of the old North Amherst School, which currently houses the Amherst Youth Center and serves as a public meeting place for other public groups, although many area residents have called for its removal.

The meeting was attended by some 40 North Amherst residents who reflected the concern that the committee's work has stirred in the community.

Most residents voiced disapproval with the committee's report. James Mulchahy told the Board that the Youth Center was the "major impetus" for attendance at last night's meeting and past public hearings.

Mulchahy said the maintainance of the old school was too costly and he presented a plan to the Board to destroy the school and allow the Watroba store, which is currently located at the corner of Meadow St. and North Pleasant St., to build on that location.

Mulchahy said that removal of the store from that corner would widen a troublesome intersection and provide an area for parking.

North Amherst resident William Gurski called the maintainance of the school building "one of the town's greatest wastes" citing continued deterioration and vandalism.

The North Amherst Center committee was established a year ago to study a host of problems that had surfaced in the North Amherst area, including the expansion of the library and the traffic problems of the area.

No snags as school starts

By BERNARD T. DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

There were few problems yesterday as students filled University dormitories and straightened out their registration hassles — a sharp contrast to one semester ago when about 400 students showed up with no place to stay.

Administrators were keeping their fingers crossed as about 10,270 undergraduates moved into their dorm rooms. Housing office operations were running "super smooth," according to Gerald A. Quarles, housing assignment coordinator. "So smooth," he said, "it makes us nervous."

At the peak of the overcrowding last September, about 190 persons were living in the Campus Hotel, 150 in fraternities and sororities, and 65 in dorm lounges and private residences.

Quarles said there had been no major complaints from residential area directors or heads of residence about placing undergraduates into the about 11,250 spaces available.

Some students were angry between noon and 1 p.m. when they showed up at the Registrar's office and found it closed for lunch. The office is usually open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., with no break.

Registrar Ralph D. Jones said that because of the extra work on registration day, he thought it would be "much more effective" to shut down the office for one hour than have it operate with a skeleton crew for two as workers went to lunch in shifts.

Two students were stationed outside the office to hand out add-drop forms and refer students to departments.

Jones said the flow of students through the office was "moderate" throughout the day.

Petterson dies

Funeral services are being held this morning at 11 at St. Paul's Church in Hingham, Mass. for UMass student Chris E. Pettersson of 1702 John F. Kennedy Tower.

Hingham police said the 18-year-old Pettersson died Sunday morning after a car he was driving went off the road and hit a telephone pole. He died one hour later.

A 1977 graduate of Hingham High School, Pettersson leaves a father, Bengt A. Pettersson, mother, Jean A. Cashes Pettersson and two younger sisters, Julieann and Lynnann.

Yahiaou dies

HOOKSETT, N.H. [AP] — The body of a 24-year-old suicide victim who was found here two weeks ago was recently identified as a UMass sophomore who had withdrawn from the school for the spring semester.

Ahmed Yahiaiou, an engineering student of Bouira, Algeria was found hanging by the neck from a tree two weeks ago.

★ Fire safety studied

sounded and alarm horns equipped with a light to warn deaf persons.

Renovations and repairs to insure smoke control in the residence halls are also suggested in the study. Inspection of one Southwest high rise during the study found air space around pipes and utility wiring which ran through every floor, through which smoke can migrate.

Robinson said he received different opinions concering smoke migration between floors from consultants who inspected the high rises for fire safety.

The report also recommends installing standpipes on the fllors of dorms not yet equipped with them to aid fire fighters. Most of the dorms not equipped with standpipes, to which fire fighters attach hoses for water supply, are in the Northeast and Central residential areas. Another study should be conducted to determine the feasibility of installing sprinklers tied in to the standpipes in the high rises, the fire study recommends.

Sprinkler systems with expansion capabilities should also be installed in attics and sub-level floors, according to the study.

The fire study also suggested the University utilize the Fire Profile measurement system to analyze the fire risk of each housing unit for a better priority listing of structures during fire-safety renovations. Fire Profile would cost $3,750.

The fire study recommends renovations should be phased in according to available funding. According to the study, the priority order of renovations would be smoke detectors in all sleeping areas; central fire alarm monitoring of all dormitories; early warning fire detection and alarm systems; smoke migration control in high rises; installation of standpipe systems in all dormitories; proper fire stopping in attic areas; limited sprinkler systems incorporating existing standpipes in high rise structures and sprinkler systems in all structures.

The study concludes saying additional personnel should be hired to properly maintain the additional fire safety equipment as it is installed.

★ Spring conference

Boulding, who is a sociology professor at the University of Colorado and project director of the Institute of Behavioral Science there, "has led the way to the future in her cross-cultural study of such issues as the role of women in society, family life and peace education", according to Dean Mario Fantini of the UMass School of Education. Boulding is the author of four books, the most recent entitled "The Underside of History: A View of Women Through Time". She is also a member of the advisory board of the UMass Future Studies Program.

Henderson, a co-director of the Princeton Center for Alternative Futures "has challenged traditional economic theories while championing a redefinition of human interdependence," said Fantini. "Both women will bring exciting insights to our conference," he added.

Clark, a former president of the American Psychological Association, is best known for his prize-winning study, "Dark Ghetto." His research on the psychological effect of segregation on children was cited during the U.S. Supreme Court case of Brown vs. Board Education. He is presently a member of the New York Board of Regents and is professor Emeritus of psychology at the City College of New York.

Kozol is a major spokesman for the Free Schools Movement and is the author of "Death at an Early Age" and "The Night is Dark and I Am Far From Home."

Edelfelt is a professional associate in instruction and professional development of the National Education Association.

By having such a variety of speakers, Peakes hopes to set a different tone for the construction of American academic conferences. "The usual format is to have all white, middle age males from prestigious institutions on the podium," he said. "They're not the only ones who will be shaping the future," he added.

Peakes expects Ali in particular to say some "unique and unexpected things" about American education. Despite graduating least in his high school class, Ali is now the holder of a chair in poetry from Oxford.

"You can get information and insight from people who don't have expert credentials," said Peakes. "Ali and Fuller are two people who have taught us the most."

Fuller did not graduate from high school or college, but has gone on to receive 40 honorary degrees in 10 different areas.

All the speeches given at the conference will be published in the form of a book.

In the past, the Future Studies Program has had "marathon weeks" in which they discussed problems related to the future, and has held "Toward Tomorrow" fairs in June. The fair held this past June featured debates, workshops, exhibits and working demonstrations in wind, solar and wood energy, health, environmental protection, social action and human rights, shelter, education, agriculture and aquaculture.

Fuller who is now eighty-two, was also the keynote speaker for the fair this summer, and drew a overflowing crowd to the Fine Arts Center.

★ Wood's final days

Two areas of land, now owned by the federal government may soon be available to the University, one with some much-needed housing on it.

The town is concerned that, if no one else wants the land, it may be auctioned for private homes, Robinson said.

Meets with Garrity

Wood also had scheduled a coordinating committee meeting later in the afternoon, at which U.S. Judge W. Arthur Garrity would be present.

Wood said the Boston school system is improving — the court order recipitated a lot of new federal money and a lot of new construction.

At the meeting, Garrity, a soft-spoken, white-haired man, first apologized for being slightly late and then talked about the dissolution of the committee at the end of the spring term.

One of the assistant superindents reported to Wood that the school department was having some problems with shifting pupil assignments from school to school, a problem which could be resolved with increased computerization of records.

Moving out

On December 22, Wood had not yet started boxing his belongings. But downstairs, directly below his office, interim President Patterson sat amid boxes of papers, learning the details of the administration's day to day activities.

Wood had already accepted the invitation of the Harvard-MIT Joint Urban Studies Center to head that organization, a job which he hopes would allow him the freedom to finish the book he is currently working on.

While he is rather vague on the topic of his latest project, he did say it covers topics such as the schools, education and the courts.

"Its very good therapy," he said, and five chapters are already complete.

"I want to really have a chance to think about what I want to do," he said, mentioning that he will be thinking about a move back to Washington, where he was once undersecretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Wood said he would like to keep up with the Columbia Point redevelopment, something which he began with the building of UMass-Boston there several years back.

But, he said, "if I keep taking on assignments, I won't finish my book. The hardest thing to do is to sit down and write."

He pointed to a small ceramic sitting on the coffee table between the two couches in his office — three yellow birds in a nest, all posed as if they were chirping.

"Chancellor (Randolph W.) Bromery gave that to me at the last going away party," he said, "its supposed to represent the three campuses.

Wood said he had already been to five goodbye parties, and had two to go.

"The big one is on the 29th", he said, with the office staff and all the people he worked with.

"I'm not supposed to know about it," he said, "its supposed to be a surprise."

Judge may allow boy to be tried as an adult

SALEM [UPI] — Essex County authorities say they plan to ask a Salem District Court judge today to allow a 15-year-old boy to be tried as an adult in the shooting deaths of his parents and an older sister.

Essex County District Attorney John Burke said Sunday authorities also expect a court psychiatrist to ask today that the boy, identified by other sources as Alfred Brown, be admitted to MacLean Hospital in Belmont for psychiatric testing.

The youth entered a "not deliquent" plea Saturday in Salem District Court to charges he shot his father, insurance underwriter Wilfred Brown, 46; his mother, Yoshica Brown, 50, and his 20-year-old sister, Dorina Brown. The plea is the juvenile court equivalent of an innocent plea.

Topsfield Police Chief Harold G. Moore said the gun believed used for the killings, a bolt action Remington .22 caliber rifle, was a Christmas present from his parents.

Lt. Alfred Duemling, a state police detective assigned to the Essex County district attorney's office, said the gift box for the rifle was found by police on the suspect's bed. An empty box of cartridges was found on the living room floor, Duemling said.

Police discovered the three bodies in the family's rented Mansion Drive home in Topsfield Friday night, after they questioned Alfred about an automobile accident in nearby Boxford.

Medical examiner Dr. Stanley Jacobs said both women were found in the kitchen with gunshot wounds in the head. The father, who had been shot in the chest was found in a walkway leading to the garage.

Police charged the suspect, a sophomore at Masconomet Regional High School in Boxford, with three counts of first degree murder. He was held without bail at a state Division of the Youth Services facility in Danvers.

Alfred was first arrested by Boxford police after a car registered in his father's name struck a telephone pole in that town late Friday. He was charged with driving without a license and speeding.

Police later found another family car in a snowbank several blocks from the house. Two rifles and a box of cartridges were in the trunk of the second car, police said.

B.U. dorm 'bombed' by can of deodorant

BOSTON [UPI] — Police said yesterday they have no suspects in a weekend bomb scare at a Boston University high-rise dormitory.

Hundreds of students were evacuated from the dorm Sunday night, while police bomb squad experts worked with a device that appeared to be a bomb.

The device, found in a dormitory elevator, was actually a can of deodorant wrapped in black tape with a battery and wires attached to it, police said.

Bomb squad experts inspected the device for about 30 minutes before cutting the wires and unwrapping the object.

Shootout victim moves to hospital danger list

BOSTON [UPI] — A Roslindale teen-ager was placed on the danger list at Boston City Hospital yesterday following an early morning shootout with two city police officers.

A police spokesperson said the youth, James Yousinan, 17, was shot twice in the chest.

According to police, Yousinan was stopped by Patrolers Dennis Ross and Enrico Guevarra after they spotted him speeding away from a Dorchester traffic light.

As Ross approached Yousiman's car from the rear, he saw the youth pull out a gun and aim it at Guevarra, who fell to the ground and crawled back to the police cruiser, a police spokesperson said.

Yousinan then fired at both officers, who returned the fire, the spokesperson said.

The youth ran from the scene and was found later hiding under the porch of a nearby home with a .22-caliber derringer nearby, police said.

He has been charged with assault with intent to murder the two officers and unauthorized possession of a firearm.

The police investigation of the incident is continuing.

Oil-gas lease decision challenged

BOSTON [UPI] — The federal government and a number of oil companies said Monday a federal judge violated constitutional separation of powers in granting a preliminary injunction postponing the sale of oil and gas exploration leases off the New England coast.

The argument was lodged in an appeal to the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which was expected to decide by the end of the day whether to allow U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr.'s decision to stand.

In ruling Friday, Garrity labeled as "arbitrary and capricious" Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus' decision to go ahead with the sales before Congress acts on proposed amendments to the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act which would strengthen environmental protections.

The judge also said Andrus failed to fulfill his obligations under the OCS Act and the National Environmental Policy Act of 1976 because he had not imposed adequate environmental safeguards. Garrity also said the defendants would not suffer irreparable harm if the injunction was granted, while the plaintiffs and the public might if it was not granted.

The proposed lease sale of more than 800,000 acres, 155 tracts of land in the area of Georges Bank, one of the richest fishing grounds in the world, was to be held today. However, Garrity's injunction postponed it indefinitely. The appeal was filed to allow the sale to go ahead as planned.

The value of the fisheries in the Georges Bank area, which support an industry that grosses a half billion dollars a year, was one of the prime considerations in Garrity's ruling. The area produces 15 per cent of the world's fish protein, according to evidence submitted.

The injunction was sought by the state of Massachusetts and a group of environmental organizations who sought four specific safeguards:

— an oil industry fund to help pay for damage to fishing gear caused by drilling;

— an oil industry fund to help pay for oil spill cleanup;

— higher tanker standards;

— separate licensing procedures for exploration and production phases.

"In our view this determination rests in a misapprehension of the OCS act and results in an unpermissible intrusion of the judiciary in the legislative and executive processes," said the federal government in a brief submitted to the appeals court.

The federal government argued Andrus was not compelled by the OCS act to "prevent adverse impact on fishery resources," but only to consider the possible impact.

The oil companies, all of which will be involved in drilling once the Georges Bank project gets under way, argued in a separate brief that Garrity's ruling was inconsistent with five other court decisions and that delay would interfere with an "important national energy project."

The oil companies also contended the Georges Bank grounds were nc more important than other fishing areas where drilling activities are already under way.

The Alvin Ailey Dance Company will perform three consecutive nights at the Fine Arts Center, February 7, 8, 9.

Committee advises suspending employees

BOSTON [AP] — The Senate Ethics Committee yesterday recommended that two Senate employees be suspended without pay for two months for running their jointly-owned company during working hours.

In its first investigation since the Senate Ethics Code was adopted last October, the committee found that the Senate personnel director and maintenance superintendent conducted their private business on state time.

The new ethics code requires Senate employees to devote full time to their state jobs and bans "outside business activity" during regular office hours.

If the committee's recommendation is accepted, former state senator Robert Cawley, now personnel director, would lose a total of $5,333 of his $32,000 salary. Saul Walter, his business partner, would forfeit a total of $2,833 of his $17,000 salary.

Sen. President Kevin B. Harrington must decide whether to accept the committee's recommendation.

The committee reported that Cawley and Walter met with clients and an employee of their private security firm when they were supposed to be performing their state jobs.

The committee recommended Cawley and Walter be reinstated Feb. 11 after they "satisfy their supervisor that they can avoid interruption of their working hours," said James Vorenberg, the committee's special counsel.

Their firm, Bonded Security Company, provides security officers and guard dogs to protect business and public facilities.

The two were suspended without pay last December following an account of their business activities by The Boston Globe.

Dukakis swears in Committee members

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Monday swore in Ruth MacRobert of Newton as a member of the Civil Service Commission.

At a separate ceremony, Dukakis swore in Patricia McGovern of Lawrence as the director of the state's Committee on Criminal Justice.

McGovern will earn $27,390 annually as head of a group that administers federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration funds for state and local projects. In 1977, the committee distributed $11.3 million.

MacRobert will receive a salary of $14,623 a year as a member of an autonomous appeals and rule-making body that interprets civil service laws and regulations.

Mass inoculation favored for Russian flu

WASHINGTON [AP] — The risks from dying of influenza are 1,000 times greater than the risks of dying from vaccination, a government health official said yesterday.

Dr. William Foege, director of the Center for Disease Control, made the assertion to a panel of experts considering whether to recommend a mass innoculation campaign against the Russian flu. The new flu strain broke out in Cheyenne, Wyo., recently and is expected to spread later this winter or next winter.

Foege sought to calm fears raised by the problem-plagued swine flu inoculation campaign of 1976.

The swine flu inoculation campaign in 1976 came to a rapid halt after some persons who were inoculated contracted Guillain-Barre Syndrome, a paralyzing disease that can lead to death. The swine flu epidemic never occurred.

Although considered relatively mild, the Russian flu has spread rapidly among children in the Soviet Union and elsewhere in Europe and Asia. It struck more than 30 per cent of children 14 and younger in Leningrad in recent weeks, according to reports relayed by U.S. health researchers who visited Moscow last week.

Russian flu is an A-type flu strain similar to viruses that caused outbreaks of flu around the world from 1947 to 1950. Fifteen states currently report widespread outbreaks of the more familiar A-Victoria and A-Texas flu, which also occurred last winter.

Americans between ages 24 and 50 are considered to have some immunity to the Russian flu, while children and young adults are the prime targets. Federal health officials said persons over 50 also are in the high-risk group, particularly because the elderly run the highest risks of serious illness or death from flu.

Although one drug-maker is preparing to start production of a Russian flu vaccine, the vaccine won't be ready for at least two months, when the current flu season will be drawing to a close.

Federal health officials decided last year that the increased risk of Guillain-Barre was likely to occur with any influenza vaccination. The risk is up to 12 times greater for several weeks after the shot.

But the syndrome also occurs naturally among people who are not vaccinated. The CDC found that half the 1,100 cases of the syndrome reported nationwide from October 1976 through January 1977 involved persons who did not get swine flu shots. About 550 persons, half from each group, died.

Attorney advertising regulations claimed to be unconstitutional

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Connecticut's legal establishment Monday asked the state Supreme Court to approve regulations limiting attorney advertising, but reformers and the media claimed they were unconstitutionally restrictive.

The U.S. Supreme Court last year ruled lawyers may advertise, but the state's highest court must approve regulations governing such advertising.

The Connecticut Bar Association has proposed regulations limiting advertising to newspapers and periodicals only, requiring ads be placed in the classified section.

CBA President Peter Dorsey, asking the court to approve the regulations, said they were "intended to be somewhere in between no restrictions and total restrictions."

He said the proposals did not represent the thinking of all CBA members.

Jay Jackson, Gov. Ella T. Grasso's legal aide, said she saw the proposed rules as a "long overdue reform," and said non-lawyers were needed on a board the CBA wants created to supervise legal advertising.

But opponents brought in Richard Falcon, a University of Maryland Law School professor, who argued, "the only restrictions necessary are those that stop deception. Anything else is unconstitutional."

He called the CBA proposals "totally, incredibly unconstitutional." He said later in an interview that Conn. Supreme Court would be "foolish" if it approved the regulations, because a federal court would overrule them later.

He said proposals similar to the ones advanced by the CBA had been suggested by the bar associations in Ohio and Maryland but were rejected by the courts here.

Bar associations are "inherently conservative economically, and also they don't want things changed," Falcon said. He said Marsland regulations limiting only deceptive advertising were the ones that should be adopted.

He said the part of the proposed CBA rules limiting ads to the classified section was unconstitutional because the precedent-setting U.S. Supreme Court decision had upheld an advertisement not in that part of the paper.

Falcon, representing the American Legal Clinics Association, said the proposed prohibition on radio or television was also unconstitutional based on the U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Charles Mokriski, representing the 24 members of the Connecticut Daily Newspaper Association, and Dan Gold, vice president of WFSB-TV, also testified against the proposed regulations.

Diane Cadrain, speaking for the Connecticut Citizen Action Group, said "if the bar were really concerned that the legal needs of the public be met, it would allow advertising through all channels of the mass media, with fraud being the only limitation."

Robert L. Holzberg, speaking for the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union concerned "that the proposed rules governing lawyer advertising in Connecticut are unnecessarily restrictive."

Until the regulations are finalized no advertising is permitted. Some lawyers however, have already taken out ads. A grievance has been filed with the bar association against one of them, Douglas G. Kowal of Hartford said.

Burns charges lack of will in combatting in inflation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Arthur Burns, in his final speech as chairperson of the Federal Reserve Board, said yesterday Americans still lack the will to effectively combat an inflationary spiral which he said could destroy their political freedom.

Winding up 25 years of public service which started with his appointment as an economic adviser to President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Burns said the United States is pulling out of the recession that dogged his last four years as chairperson.

But, in a speech prepared for delivery to the National Press Club, he said the country has not even begun to cope with damaging long-term problems.

— Inflation, a huge trade deficit and unemployment that leaves many young and black people with little hope of finding work.

"The need to fight inflation is widely recognized in our country, but the will to do so is not yet strong enough," Burns said.

"I have no doubt that the will to get on energetically with the job of unwinding inflation will be forged someday," he said. "I only hope this will come through a growth of understanding, not from a demonstration that inflation is the moral enemy of economic progress and our political freedom."

Thus in his final speech as chairperson, he expressed the same concern that has dominated his thinking for years.

Burns, 73, will step down as soon as the Senate confirms President Carter's choice of businessperson G. William Miller as his successor.

Confirmation of Miller, 52, chairperson of the board of Textron Inc., is expected within a few days or weeks.

COMPLIT COURSE OPENINGS

Japanese/Comp.Lit. 244 The Japanese Literary TraditionII. Tu. Thu. 11:15-12:30

This course provides an opportunity to experience the immense richness and vitality of Japanese poetry, drama, and prose fiction from 1600 to present, including haiku and modern poetry, Kabuki and Bunraku theatres, and novelists Saikaku, Yasunari, and Mishima Yukio. The course is both for students with a special interest in Japan or East Asia as well as those with no prior experience in these fields. Readings are in English.

Japanese/Comp Lit 491 Seminar in the Modern Japanese Novel. Tu. 2:30 5:30

Japan was the first non-European nation to receive a vigorous, productive synthesis of native and European literary and cultural traditions, which has made it impossible to make a serious study of the modern novel without taking Japan into serious consideration. There is now a substantial body of translations and a small but useful body of English-language criticism available. Open to graduate and advanced undergraduate students specializing in any literature. Readings in English.

News in Brief

Sacco-Vanzetti papers on display

CAMBRIDGE [AP] — Fifty years after the commission he headed approved the legal proceedings by which Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti had been condemned, Harvard University is opening to public view today the Sacco-Vanzetti papers of A. Lawrence Lowell.

Lowell, at the time president of Harvard, served as chairperson of a three-member advisory commission appointed by Gov. Alvan T. Fuller.

It found that the legal proceedings against the two Italian-born anarchists had been fair, and Fuller then went ahead with the execution, on Aug. 23, 1927.

Sacco and Vanzetti were convicted in a 1920 payroll robbery in which two men were killed. Their case became a cause celebre among liberals, radicals and some immigrants, who felt the trial was characterized by prejudice and had not proved their guilt. The Lowell Commission found otherwise, but the controversy continued.

Even today, historians argue the question of whether or not they were guilty.

The 1,500 exhibits in the Sacco-Vanzetti papers are among Lowell's private papers given to the university after he died in 1943. The other Lowell papers have been open to public view for some time, but when they were donated, Harvard agreed to keep the Sacco-Vanzetti papers sealed until last December.

EMS recalls down vests, jackets

AUBURN, Maine [AP] — Eastern Mountain Sports is recalling some of its 1977 down jackets and vests because they contain too many feathers and not enough fluffy goose down.

Eastern Mountain Sports manager David Kinsman said five brands of down jackets and vests were found to have less than the 80 per cent down content that federal standards require.

EMS, which buys items from many different manufacturers and sells them under its own label, decided to test its down products after several manufacturers were indicted last year for failing to meet federal standards, Kinsman said.

He said EMS would extend the recall to its stores in New Hampshire and Massachusetts once the rush to return the garments is over in Maine.

However, Kinsman said most people aren't taking advantage of the recall. Less than a dozen persons have brought back their parkas and half of them decided to keep the items, he said.

Scientist says plan space colonies now

ANN ARBOR, Mich. [UPI] — It's about time government officials started planning for the colonization of space in the early 1990's, an astronomer said.

James Loudon of the University of Michigan planetarium envisions artificial worlds enclosed by glass "which would be many miles in size and have tens of thousands of people at first and then escalate into the millions."

The scientist said the colonies could be constructed by materials from the moon or asteroids.

The first space shuttle, scheduled for 1979, could set the stage for eventual space colonization, Loudon said.

Such self-sustaining colonies eventually could solve the energy crisis on earth by manufacturing solar power collectors, Loudon said. The units would orbit above the earth and convert solar energy into radio waves beamed to earth.

"It would be a very cheap, totally nonpolluting and utterly inexhaustible energy source. It would be an energy source which would not deplete the world of anything," he said.

Cities may soon use lotteries to raise money

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — The director of Maine's lottery said yesterday a new concept in lotteries is emerging in the country, and the nation's cities may soon hold their own lotteries to raise money.

"City lotteries are beginning to emerge as a new concept of raising money," said George Orestis, the director of Maine's Lottery Commission.

The revenues could be put to use in general funds or to support public education he said.

"Any city such as Portland, Boston or Manchester, N.H., could sell a million tickets with the specific purpose of raising revenue," he said. But under current Maine law the city would have to have a specific use for the money, and it would have to work with a state lottery commission.

"They are not authorized to hold their own lottery under law," Orestis said.

Industrial oil spilt; Coast Guard says "minor"

NEWINGTON, N.H. [UPI] — A barge containing more than a million gallons of heavy industrial oil split in half and sunk at a Piscataqua River pier last night, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

"As far as we know any spill so far has been minor, but it still has quite a bit of oil on board," a Coast Guard spokesperson in Boston said.

He said the barge, known as Bouchard 105, had "29,000 to 30,000 barrels of No. 6 oil."

The barge was still attached to the pier at the Atlantic Terminal, the spokesperson said. He added that the reason the barge had split in half had not been determined.

Carter aide denounced by Soviet press

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Soviet press today denounced Zbigniew Brzezinski's concern about Soviet interference in the Horn of Africa and said it was really the United States which meddles in other nations' affairs.

The official Soviet news agency Tass, in a commentary by senior news analyst Yuri Kornilov, asked, "What worries Mr. Brzezinski?

"It turns out that he fears lest the USSR and Cuba take advantage of the situation in order to establish unilaterally in one of the African countries a political regime more suited to their broad strategy," the commentary said, referring to the U.S. presidential adviser.

Committee approves Panama Canal treaties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved the two proposed Panama Canal treaties by identical 14-1 votes yesterday and sent them to the Senate floor with detailed recommendations for changes spelling out U.S. defense rights.

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., a member of the committee, predicted there now is a "better than even chance" for the required two-thirds Senate vote ratifying the accords that would dissolve the Panama Canal Zone and turn the waterway over to Panama in the year 2000.

Before acting, the committee accommodated the Panamanian government by altering its recommendations on U.S. defense rights.

Panama relayed its objections to a key amendment through the U.S. Embassy in the early morning hours, saying it would force a second plebiscite on the treaties.

The recommended amendment would have incorporated in the separate neutrality treaty a memorandum of understanding reached Oct. 14 between President Carter and Panamanian leader Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos.

The memorandum permits the United States to defend the canal beyond the year 2000, assures U.S. and Panamanian naval vessels may "go to the head of the line" in times of crisis and states the United States will not interfere in Panamanian internal affairs.

At the urgings of the State Department, the committee broke the memorandum into two proposed amendments — a maneuver Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., termed a "face-saving" device for Panama.

Sen. Robert Griffin, R-Mich., the only dissenter in the treaty votes, objected to the change, saying it was only a question of form.

The Senate panel also approved two "understandings" on important technical points that are not expected to cause difficulties for the Panamanians.

The committee succeeded in shunting aside a number of proposals by treaty foes, including one by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., to lengthen the transition period from 30 months to 12 years during which the Canal Zone will be dissolved.

The committee did not actually amend the treaties, but merely drew up a list of recommended changes, because Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd felt there would be a better chance of ratification if all amendments are made on the floor.

Byrd said yesterday he was becoming "increasingly optimistic" that the treaties, with amendments, will pass. Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker said, "I think the chances for ratification are improving daily."

Asked if Torrijos' pledge to a group of visiting senators that he would resign if the treaties were ratified would improve the chances, Baker said:

"I don't think that will make much difference one way or the other. Torrijos is a part of the equation but not a very important part. The real question is what are the rights of the United States for the next 22 years and beyond."

Egyptian - Israeli talks on Sinai resume tonight

JERUSALEM [AP] — Egyptian-Israeli military negotiations on the future of the occupied Sinai Peninsula will resume tonight in Cairo, spokespeople in Jerusalem and Cairo announced yesterday.

Israel said Defense Minister Ezer Weizman and his negotiating team will leave for Cairo earlier today.

Word of the resumption came as U.S. mediator Alfred Atherton hand-carried an Israeli proposal for a declaration on overall peace principles to Cairo after a final meeting yesterday morning with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan in Jerusalem.

The assistant secretary of state helped write the draft in a week of talks with Israeli leaders. Talking to reporters in Cairo, he said those negotiations "advanced matters a bit" but declined to go beyond that statement before meeting Egyptian officials.

Weizman and his Egyptian counterpart Mohamed Abdel Ghanv Gamassv recessed their military talks Jan. 13 in deadlock over the future of the 20 Jewish settlements established by Israel on the nothern and southern edges of the Sinai Peninsula.

Parallel political negotiations snagged the following week when Egyptian President Anwar Sadat recalled his foreign minister from Jerusalem. At the urging of President Carter, Sadat did not halt the military talks, but Israel delayed sending Weizman back to the Egyptian capital until Egypt tempered a series of anti-Israeli attacks in the Cairo press.

Officials in Jerusalem said the formula worked out between Israel and the United States on the critical Palestinian question may clear the way to complete Egyptian-Israeli peace principles.

Reaccreditation report is topic of debate

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Although reaccreditation for the University is a near certainty this year, reports generated for a "self-study" required by the reaccreditation association are being attacked by students involved in the study as "biased" and "incomplete."

Reaccreditation is required every 10 years by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges. This year, the association has asked UMass to conduct a self-study to assess current problems and to make projections into the near future.

Former Student Government Association co President Jay A. Martus, a member of the 20-member "self-study" committee, said the study "process was incorrect" and "the perspective was biased; it was purely a faculty perspective."

According to committee head Prof. Sara Sturm-Maddox of the French and Italian Department, the self study was headed by a coordinating committee of faculty, staff and students.

The committee asked each of the University's major divisions to submit task force reports answering four questions about the quality of the educational experience at UMass, present composition of the student body and future trends, implications of "no growth" since the University has reached a stable point in its enrollment and funding, and the value of five college cooperation.

But, Martus says, in most cases students were not involved.

Martus said there are "major areas of ommission in reportage" in the task force reports, and in the first draft of the final report being collated from the task force reports.

"There has been no discussion at all of fee-based budgets, versus state funding" for the different areas of the University, he said.

Most academic areas are funded by an allocation from the state's general fund with the exception of research work at the faculty or graduate level where corporate and federal grant monies are used.

Martus said most of the views expressed in the reports are "restatements" of faculty gripes.

Some examples from the report:

—"While the UMass faculty, graduate students, and campus facilities differ primarily in quantity when compared to, say, a Big Ten university, our undergraduates tend to be qualitatively different. First, the undergraduate student body appears unusually provincial in its background and its concerns. Second, even allowing for the current emphasis on career training, UMass undergraduates tend often to be a-intellectual (not to be confused with anti-intellectualism, this involves a fundamental disinterest in matters of the mind). Third, there can be seen a defeating and defeated quality about some undergraduate's perceptions of the university and themselves." — report by faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

—"As I look out over my classes I see a growth in the least desirable element of the student body. Ten to fifteen years ago there were always two people sitting in the back row. They were bored, uninspried, uninterested and inattentive. One of them did not want to be in a university at all. The other did not have the talent necessary to succeed but developed a belief that his failures were caused by the institution and his professor. Now these numbers have grown. I am convinced that nearly half of our student body has no interest in a college education. They are here because they must be. Substantial numbers of them do not have the background or development to do college level work. Unfortunately this condition is also true for a great many students who do want a college education." — report of the department chairman, General Business and Finance.

"At a time of limited resources, it seems to us that we should not be competing with community colleges, and that we should not be spreading our resources thinly into what some call 'fringe areas' of education. This task group represents one of the three central areas of traditional academics and also an area of enormous practical importance in today's society. It appears to many of us that the current pattern of University support has been to expand new 'fringe' areas thus draining resources from the core and depriving students of contact with the greatest academic strength the University can offer." — College of Natural Sciences and Mathmatics.

Most of the reports point to an increasing need to provide flexible academic programs for an increasing proportion of non-traditional students. Enrollment projections into the 1980's they said, seem to indicate a smaller pool of the traditional 18 to 22 year old student.

Most of the reports also say more money should be allocated to the library, to help update their holdings and expand their subscription list. Many also say there is a need for stipends for graduate teaching assistants if the graduate departments are going to be able to attract the better students.

More sulfer approved for oil

BOSTON [UPI] — New England Power Co., which supplies power to Massachusetts Electric Co., has received federal approval to burn less expensive, higher sulfur content oil at its Brayton Point generating station in Somerset, it was announced yesterday.

R. Leigh FitzGerald, president of New England Power, said the Environmental Protection Agency had approved company plans to burn 14.14 per cent sulfur content.

Use of the oil will save $15 million in fuel costs, which normally would have been passed on to customers, FitzGerald said.

He added customers should not expect dramatic decreases in fuel adjustment charges on their electric bills, because New England Power's annual fuel bill totals about $250 million.

Environmental analyses by the EPA and the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering indicated burning higher sulfur oil would not significantly effect the environment, he said.

The state Department of Energy also granted the company an oil import license, which allows New England Power to avoid a 63 cent per barrel tariff now imposed on foreign oil, FitzGerald said.

UM issues discussed at micro-college

By BILL SUNDSTROM
Collegian Staff

A broad range of issues concerning the past, present and future of UMass formed the topic of discussion at a two-day conference here last week.

"Know thyself: Taking advantage of the reaccreditation self-study" was the title of the third annual January "micro-college," which was attended by about 125 students, faculty, administrators and staff Monday and Tuesday. The conference was sponsored by four campus groups: the Resource Network, the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center, the Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement and the Educational Liaison Project.

While the micro-college was not itself connected to the reaccreditation process which began last year the sponsoring groups hoped to use reports generated by the self-study to stimulate discussion of the major issues facing the university. Several members of the reaccreditation coordinating committee participated in the conference.

After opening remarks by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and State Representative James Collins, reaccreditation committee members reported on the state of the self-study and some of the major issues it had identified. The conference then broke into a series of discussion sessions, both as "interest groups" and as a whole, and listened to comments by a panel of several administrative officers and other campus leaders.

Tuesday afternoon, participants attempted to draw together a list of important issues and suggest possible solutions and directions for further action. It was recognized that UMass has entered a "no-growth" phase in its history and must now consider how to allocate limited resources. The lack of student participation in decision-making, reorganization of higher education in the state, the implications of faculty collective bargaining, the present "conflict" between the professional schools and the arts and sciences and the mission of a land-grant college were other issues compiled.

Although the conference actually carried no decision-making power, the participants concluded with a list of proposals for change. Among them was a proposal drafted by a group of student participants which suggested that departmental committees allow and encourage more student participation. Other suggestions included the establishment of an academic "minor," educating or re-training faculty to new student needs and developing a committee to survey and review existing management and administrative structures.

Reactions to the micro-college from participants were generally positive regarding the level of communication attained in the two days, but less enthusiastic about the enormity of the tasks and problems which face UMass. Judy Davis, Coordinator of the co-sponsoring Resource Network, said that "of all programs we have attempted in the past, this was the most ambitious in terms of the number of issues addressed."

A fairly common criticism was the relative lack of faculty participation at the micro-college. William J. Mellen, Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, said it was "too bad" that more faculty weren't involved, considering how influential they are on campus.

Student leaders who participated were pleased with both the number of students at the conference and the recognition of the need for increased student input into decision-making. Student Government Association Co-president Marion (Pinky) Batiste stressed the need to "look at the positive side" after a discussion of problems that was "very depressing." She noted that several of the concrete suggestions might be implemented in some ongoing projects by various groups on campus.

Student senator Greg Tarpinian suggested that the conference was "essentially the first time the faculty has admitted that in order to have a quality education there must be student input into the process."

UMass Amherst Budget Director George Beatty, Jr., summarized the feelings of many in noting both the positive and negative aspects of such a broad discussion. While the conference seemed to lack focus, it was also an attempt to identify the major issues, "which is the first step toward solving the problems."

"What's often overlooked," said Beatty, "is that there are many good things going on on campus."

Carter to ask Soviets to stop nuke satellites

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter said yesterday he will ask the Soviet Union to stop launching nuclear-powered earth orbiting satellites unless "fail safe methods" can be found to insure no radioactive material from them reaches earth.

Carter, describing how the United States monitored a Soviet nuclear-powered spy satellite that crashed in northern Canada last week, said more rigid safety precautions are needed.

"We would be glad to forego the deployment of any such satellites altogether and will pursue that option along with the Soviet Union," he said.

Asked if he would try to dissuade the Kremlin from putting more nuclear reactors into space, Carter said, "Yes, certainly in earth orbit. I think this is something we should explore."

> "I would favor... an agreement with the Soviets to prohibit earth-orbiting satellites with atomic radiation material."
> - President Carter

He said attempts should be made to insure that no radioactive material from such satellites reaches earth and "if we cannot evolve those fail-safe methods, then I think there ought to be a total prohibition against earth-orbiting satellites.

"I would favor at this moment an agreement with the Soviets to prohibit earth-orbiting satellites with atomic radiation material."

Carter said America's last nuclear-powered satellite was launched in 1965.

In his second news conference this year, Carter also was asked several questions about Republican David Marston, the former U.S. attorney from Philadelphia who was ousted this month with the president's approval.

Although many people have criticized Carter's handling of the case, since Marston was reportedly investigating Democratic Reps. Joshua Eilberg and Daniel Flood when he was fired, Carter stood by his actions.

"I see nothing improper in the handling of the case," he said, adding that it did not conflict with his campaign promise to remove politics from appointments of judges and U.S. attorneys.

Carter said he has no regrets about taking a telephone call last November from Eilberg, who asked that Marston's removal be "expected." The president said he routinely gets requests on appointments, and if the situation occurred again, "I would do the same." But he also repeated that he did not know when he took the call that Eilberg was under investigation.

On the Middle East, Carter said he will decide later this week what weapons he will ask Congress to sell to Middle East nations, including Egypt. That means the decision will be made before Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's weekend visit.

Carter also said he does not think Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin authorized a new settlement at Shiloh on the West Bank of the Jordan, although administration officials said he sent Begin a letter asking him to make sure no settlement is established at the site, where archeological digging is ongoing.

On other subjects Carter said:

—If any element of his tax cut-tax reform program is modified "it can destroy the balance." He said his proposal to cut taxes by $25 billion means a reduction three times the size of Social Security tax increases this year.

—As an anti-inflation measure, he is asking business and labor to voluntarily hold wage and price hikes below the average increases they got for the last two years.

—He sees no need at this time to invoke Taft-Hartley in the nationwide coal strike. Under Taft-Hartley, the president may order workers back to their jobs for a cooling off period.

—While he deplores an American Nazi Party plan to march through the predominantly Jewish Chicago suburb of Skokie, courts have ruled the Nazi have a right to free speech and "I don't have any inclination to pursue it further."

Curbs on power use may be unavoidable in East and Midwest

[AP] — Coal inventories at utilities in many Eastern and Midwest states are at dangerously low levels and mandatory power curtailments might be unavoidable, federal and utility officials said yesterday.

"A lot of measures are being taken to stretch the coal supplies as far as possible, but there is only so far they can be stretched," said Alex Gakner, a coal expert for the U.S. Department of Energy. "A lot of people are beginning to get quite nervous."

The United Mine Workers strike, approaching its eighth week, combined with bitter cold and record-setting snowstorms have reduced fuel inventories at utilities serving millions of people in states dependent on coal from Eastern mines.

The hardest hit appeared to be utilities in Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. But utilities serving customers in parts of Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia also reported critically low stocks of coal.

Gakner said utilities in the West are using coal from nearby non-union mines and utilities in the Northeast are using larger amounts of more-expensive oil to offset coal.

When the strike began Dec. 6, many utilities reported coal stockpiles that would last 100 days or more under normal conditions. But the severe weather cut deeply into those reserves, officials said.

Gakner also pointed out that the coal being used by many utilities is of poor quality.

"They're getting deeper and deeper into stockpiles where dirt and slush have been gathering for years and years," he said. "That coal is very poor for producing electricity."

In Ohio, where nearly 95 percent of the state's electric power comes from coal-fired generators, Gov. James Rhodes said some utilities had less than a 40-day supply of coal.

"Unless there is a quick settlement of the national coal strike, Ohio and other states which use large amounts of coal for the generation of electricity could be facing a disaster," he said.

Lee Sheppeard, a spokesperson for the Tennessee Valley Authority, the nation's largest power company, said the TVA has a 47-day average supply of coal, omitting one plant with an abnormally high supply.

"That doesn't sound bad, except that five of our 12 plants have less than a 30-day supply," he said. The TVA serves two and a half million customers in Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia.

Gakner and utility officials said that even when an agreement is reached between the 170,000-member union and the coal industry — and contract talks collapsed Sunday — it would take at least four weeks for full deliveries to resume.

For utilities with 30-to-40 day supplies, that means serious trouble.

Sheppeard said the TVA, which already has requested voluntary curtailments of power, is preparing recommendations for mandatory curtailments that probably would begin with industrial customers.

"We would hope to avoid curtailments that create real hardships for anybody," he said. "I expect that within a few days, we will announce some kind of contingency plan."

The American Electric Power Corp., which serves about two million customers in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia and Virginia, said it has 58 days worth of coal.

"at 50 days, which is going to come up next week, we'll get into our emergency curtailment plan," said spokesperson J. Donlan Piedmont. He said that plan involves stopping power sales to other utilities.

When the supply reaches 40 days, mandatory curtailments to some industrial customers will be made, he said.

"We're getting a very clammy feeling," he said. "It's beginnging to look like real trouble."

Scientists analyze Soviet spy satellite

EDMONTON, Alberta [UPI] — A large chunk of a crashed Soviet spy satellite found in a nine-foot crater on a remote ice field in the Northwest Territories will be analyzed for clues to what happened to the rest of the device, scientists said yesterday.

A joint U.S.-Canadian scientific team reported they also have located two other crash sites of the nuclear-powered Cosmos 954 at the northeastern edge of Great Slave Lake.

Six members of a wildlife survey team Sunday spotted a large crater on an ice field near Thelon River, 240 miles of southwest of Baker Lake.

Two of the scientists were taken to a hospital for radiation tests. Officials said it appeared they received only a light dose of radiation and were not in any danger.

Four paratroopers were dropped at the site Monday to guard the debris.

"The object that was found is moderately radioactive," said Mahlon Gates of the U.S. Department of Energy and co-commander of the task force responsible for recovery.

"We have not yet analyzed the gamma ray spectrum from it in enough detail to say how close to the reactor core it may have been," he said. "The object is clearly not the reactor core itself."

Gates said the object, which resembles a blackened plate with two antenna-like extensions, might help scientists locate other parts of the satellite that fell from its 150-mile high orbit last Tuesday.

"We think if we can identify the object and determine the general shape and mass it will tell us a lot about how the satellite disintegrated during re-entry," Gates said.

"This in turn may help us to estimate whether other large objects impacted the earth and where the fragments and debris may be located."

Helicopters have pinpointed two other crash sites off the northeastern end of Great Slave Lake.

"Spectral analyses now allow us to say definitely that the two sources .... do consist of fission products from the reactor," Gates said. "The size or intensity of these sources cannot be determined because we do not know whether they are on the surface, under the snow or buried in the ice.

"A number of other hits have been rejected for the time being as probably due to variation in the natural radioactivity in the surface rocks.

"So far, then, there are only three locations where debris from the satellite has been definitely identified."

Talks for hostages' release break down over demands

NEW WESTMINSTER, British Columbia [UPI] — Negotiations for the release of ten hostages held by five armed convicts in a Canadian prison ran into unexpected problems yesterday over the gunner's demands for drugs and transfer to another jail.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police said the five prisoners were holding eight civilians and two prisoners hostage — all seized during an escape attempt Saturday in the visitors area of the British Columbia Penitentiary.

The convicts, all serving long sentences for violent crimes, released three other hostages on the weekend.

VACATIONING UMASS ATHLETES? — (clockwise from top left) Maura Supinski guards against the inbounds pass in an early January loss to St. John's. The Minutewomen are now 10-4. Stet Arnold raced away from Jon Flora and Ivan Solero to win the mile run in a tri-meet loss against Northeastern. Bill Morrison, who found his game in January, prepares to dish off for an assist; Mark Haymore is caught in the midst of a hang 'em on the rim, triple twisting slam-dunk from the pike position. The refs gave Mark a "T", but this writer gave him a 9.8.

The men's gym team beat Cornell on Sunday; Alex Eldridge lays one in after leaving Ron Perry in his tracks on a sweet spin move in the first half of the Colonial Classic final game. Eldridge and Derick Claiborne do some victory steppin' after Boob's full-court, "no-look" pass found Claiborne for a layup that resulted in a three point play in the UConn Classic. All-American Susan Cantwell performs on the women's beam as the women's gym team also dumped Cornell. MORE "VACATIONING" JOCKS — (clockwise, from top left) Stephanie Jones led the gymwomen to their easy dual meet triumph over Cornell; Alex Eldridge peers into the middle before beginning one of his patented drives into the faces of the giants waiting there; Jack Leaman's often scowling face is sharply offset by the just as ever-present plasticity of the "cheerleader smile." Both had ample opportunities to exchange roles in late December and early January; Ginny Peebles looks for an opening in the St. John's loss. C.J. Reitenbach sets up his Northeastern opponent prior to making a move that put him into the lead in the two mile relay. Steve MacDougall lost the advantage at the very end of his penultimate leg before Steve Lafler smoked by NU's anchor man to win the final event of the meet. Len Kohlhaas goes to the hoop with a strong move against Rutgers. Kohlhaas was a prime force in the Minutemen's late December wins and close losses in early January, as he was averaging eight rebounds a game early in the month.

Pickett new grid head

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Robert A. Pickett, a six year associate head football coach under Dick MacPherson, has been promoted to head coach of the UMass-Amherst football team, replacing MacPherson, who resigned to become linebacker coach of the NFL's Cleveland Browns.

MacPherson left UMass to take a position offered by Brown's head coach Sam Rutigliano, a long-time close friend of MacPherson.

Bob Pickett

Pickett was promoted to head football coach, effective January 19th, by Frank McInerney, head of the department of athletics and intramurals.

McInerney said that Pickett will initiate an affirmative action search immediately for an assistant coach to replace him.

MacPherson left the team during the first week in January, after compiling a seven year record of 45-27-1, guiding the Minutemen to four Yankee Conference Championships, and a post-season bowl victory, the Boardwalk Bowl, in 1972.

Just this past year, MacPherson compiled an 8-3 season and brought his team into the quarterfinals of the Division II playoffs. He was named New England College Football coach of the year in 1977 and prior to that in 1972.

MacPherson said it was one of the hardest decisions in his life to leave the university but cited the university's reluctance to increase the football program as the primary factor.

"I loved the Amherst area, its residents, and the students of the university, and the people in our program. I will miss them very much," he said.

Pickett, who signed a multi-year contract through 1980, has been defensive coordinator for the UMass team for several years.

A graduate of the University of Maine in 1959 — the 45 year old Pickett served as an assistant coach at the University of Maine for five years before coming to UMass in 1971. He also holds a masters of education degree from the University of Maine. He is a former UMaine quarterback and defensive back.

McInerney said, "A consistent strongpoint of the UMass football program in the past seven years has been the defense, which was the prime responsibility of Bob Pickett."

"He has proven that he is an outstanding coach, who has the respect and confidence of this players and fellow coaches. I am confident that he will do a superior job for the university," he said.

McInerney maintained that a decision had to be made whether the naming of a new coach meant a search program with affirmative action overtones, or whether it could be the promotion of the man listed as associate head coach, and then the filling of his position of assistant coach.

The decision was to do the latter, and now Pickett will begin the search to find an assistant coach to bring the staff back up to six assistant full-time coaches.

Pickett said he was most anxious to be head coach at UMass but says he has no big-time college or professional aspirations.

"I have no real ambitions to be a head coach in the professional ranks or at a big-time college. I just want to be a coach, to do it well," said Pickett.

"My family and I love it here. It has everything we want for living comfortable, and I really didn't want to leave," he said.

Pickett is satisfied with the football setup. He feels that the remainder of the coaching staff, which he intends to keep for the upcoming season, is a good one.

Dick MacPherson

Pickett says that he has been assured by McInerney and School of Physical Education Dean David Bischoff that there would be adequate support for the football program.

He did not speculate whether that meant an increase of football scholarships, which is fewer than 15 per year.

It's 'No go' again as Kuhn blocks sale of Blue

NEW YORK [UPI] — Commissioner Bowie Kuhn disapproved the sale of pitcher Vida Blue to the Cincinnati Reds for $1.7 million and minor league first baseman Dave Revering Monday, setting up the prospect of another round of court battles for baseball.

Kuhn's decision was made known by the Reds in Cincinnati, where a club spokesman said: "The Cincinnati Reds have been advised by the commissioner's office that the decision on the Vida Blue trade is negative."

The Reds said they have been informed that a 15-page decision from the commissioner is being transmitted to the Reds. The Reds added they will have no comment until they have a chance to study the decision.

Kuhn's decision was his second in 19 months blocking an attempted sale by Oakland owner Charles O. Finley of Blue, the former Cy Young Award winner and one of baseball's premier pitchers.

On June 18, 1976 the commissioner voided a deal sending Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 and a separate deal which sent reliever Rollie Fingers and outfielder Joe Rudi to the Boston Red Sox for $1 million each.

After losing a $3.5 million suit against Kuhn in federal court, Finley tried selling Blue again on Dec. 9 at the winter baseball meetings in Hawaii. He dealt the three-time 20-game winner to Cincinnati for $1.7 million and Revering.

But Finley and Reds president Bob Howsam were unsuccessful in realizing their hope that the inclusion of Revering, a 24-year-old power hitter who has spent seven years in the minors, would convince Kuhn the transaction was not just for cash. Revering has his best season last year when he batted .300 in 128 games, including 29 home runs and 110 runs batted in.

Most of the principals emerging last week from two days of hearings at Kuhn's office expressed optimism the deal would be approved. Finley's lawyer, Neil Papiano, said the testimony was overwhelmingly in favor of the trade.

Now the 30-year-old Blue, whose likeness already appears on the Reds' 1978 press guide, will be returned to Oakland.

Finley's appeal of Kuhn's action 19 months ago voiding the sale of Blue, Fingers and Rudi is scheduled to be heard in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the seventh circuit in Chicago the week of Feb. 21.

The decision to nullify that deal, the strongest and most controversial act Kuhn has made in nine years as commissioner, was upheld last March 17 in Chicago by U.S. District Court Judge Frank J. McGarr.

In Finley's suit against the commissioner, McGarr ruled that canceling player sales fell within the broad authority given Kuhn by the baseball owners to act "in the best interest" of the game.

Kuhn hailed the ruling as a landmark decision for the future of baseball. He rejected the sales primarily on the grounds they upset the "competitive balance" of the American League and because he was convinced they were made by Finley strictly for money.

Finley sold Blue, Fingers and Rudi, three players who helped lead Oakland to five straight American League West titles and three world series championships, on the June 15 trading deadline. Kuhn hurriedly called a hearing two days later in his New York office at which Finley testified without an attorney. The hearing lasted only 90 minutes and the next day Kuhn jolted the baseball world.

Finley then would up losing both Fingers and Rudi plus most of his other top players in the first free agent draft after the 1976 season. The A's, stocked with a large number of recently promoted minor league players, plummeted to last place with a 63-98 record last season. They often were referred to jokingly as the "triple A's."

The brash Finley and the staid Kuhn have been at odds for years. A few years ago Finley spearheaded a move to dump Kuhn as commissioner. When Kuhn voided Finley's three-player sale of June 1976, Finley said the commissioner sounded like "the village idiot".

Last February Kuhn temporarily blocked Finley's $400,000 sale of relief pitcher Paul Lindblad to the Texas Rangers before approving it.

In contrast to the 90-minute hearing attended by 18 persons after Finley's first million dollar sale, Kuhn presided over two days of discussions which lasted six hours each on Jan. 17 and 24. The sessions were attended by 26 and 19 persons, respectively, including American League President Lee MacPhail, National League President Chub Feeney, Howsam, Finley and Finley's lawyer, Papiano.

His health deteriorating because of a heart condition, Finley has been trying to sell the A's on orders from his doctors. Negotiations between Finley and Denver oilman Marvin Davis for a $12.5 million sale of the club recently collapsed last week, however, because of the A's failure to get out of the 10 years left on their lease for the Oakland Coliseum.

Kentucky holds tight to top hoop spot

NEW YORK [UPI] — Despite losing its first game of the season, Kentucky held on to the No. 1 spot by a comfortable margin yesterday in the weekly United Press International Board of Coaches College Basketball Ratings.

The Wildcats, upset by Alabama in their only outing of the week, benefitted from the fact that their closest competitors in the ratings — Marquette and North Carolina — also were beaten. As a result, Kentucky received 36 first place votes and 404 points to take a 116-point lead over Marquette.

North Carolina and Arkansas held onto the third and fourth positions respectively, but Michigan State continued its impressive climb to the top by moving up two places from last week to No. 5.

UCLA, fifth a week ago, dropped back one place to No. 6 with Notre Dame moving up one spot to No. 7 and New Mexico vaulting four places to No. 8. Kansas, beaten by Nebraska during the week, fell off three places to No. 9 and Louisville dropped one place to No. 10 despite winning its only game.

Among the second 10 Georgetown, Florida State and DePaul made the biggest gains. Georgetown moved up three places to No. 11, Florida State advanced four spots to No. 12 and DePaul climbed six places to No. 13.

San Francisco also moved up, advancing one place to No. 14 and Virginia made it back into the top 20 after a short absence in the No. 15 position.

Providence and Syracuse, on the other hand, dropped severely in the ratings after being beaten on Saturday. Providence, which lost to DePaul, tumbled six places to No. 16 while Syracuse, upset by Rutgers, fell eight spots to No. 19. Texas held on to the No. 17 position, Duke moved up two places to No. 18 and Nebraska rounded out the top 20.

Six coaches from each of the seven geographical areas of the nation comprise the UPI ratings board. Each week they vote on the top 10 teams and points are awarded on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis for votes from first through 10th.

Here, by sections, are the coaches who comprise the UPI ratings board:

East: Lou Carnesecca, St. John's; Tom Penders, Columbia; Tom Young, Rutgers; Jack Kraft, Rhode Island; Jack Powers, Manhattan, John Thompson, Georgetown.

Midwest: Johnny Orr, Michigan; Bob Nichols, Toledo; Digger Phelps, Notre Dame; Ray Meyer, DePaul; Tex Winter, Northwestern; Hank Raymonds, Marquette.

South: Frank McGuire, South Carolina; Dean Smith, North Carolina; Lefty Driesell, Maryland; C.M. Newton, Alabama; Hugh Durham, Florida State; Norman Sloan, North Carolina State.

Midlands: Joe Cipriano, Nebraska; Norm Stewart, Missouri; Joe Hall, Kentucky; Ted Owens, Kansas; Jack Hartman, Kansas State; Joe Stowell, Bradley.

Southwest: Guy Lewis, Houston; Ned Wulk, Arizona State; Eddie Sutton, Arkansas; Ron Ekker, West Texas State; Fred Snowden, Arizona; Roy Danforth, Tulane.

Mountains: Jim Williams, Colorado State; Jerry Tarkanian, Nevada-Las Vegas; Ken Hayes, New Mexico State; Norm Ellenberger, New Mexico; Dutch Belnap, Utah State; Jim Brandenburg, Montana.

Pacific: Bob Boyd, Southern California; Marv Harshman, Washington; Dick Harter, Oregon; Carroll Williams, Santa Clara; Gary Cunningham, UCLA; Bill O'Connor, Seattle.

Sox trade Dillard for two pitchers

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Red Sox Monday traded infielder Steve Dillard to the Detroit Tigers for minor league pitchers Mike Burns and Frank Harris plus an undisclosed amount of cash, it was announced.

Dillard, 26, batted .241 last season in 66 games.

Boston's second-round draft pick in 1972, Dillard came out of the University of Mississippi as a shortstop, but after undergoing two operations on his right shoulder, played mostly second base for Boston. The right-handed batter averaged .262 in two seasons with the Red Sox.

Both Burns and Harris will be assigned to Pawtucket of the International League.

Burns, 23, is a 6-foot, 185-pound resident of Jackson, Mich.

The Tigers' 10th pick in the June 1976 draft, Burns compiled an 11-5 record with a 3.08 earned run average for Montgomery in the double a Southern League.

Harris, 22, is a 6-foot-3, 190-pound resident of Anaheim, Calif., who was [illegible] at Montgomery with a 2.48 earned run average. He moved up to Evansville during the past season where he was 5-9 with a 5.93 earned run average.

Drafted out of Fullerton Junior College in January 1975, Harris was 15-6 in 1976 while splitting the season between Lakeland and Montgomery.

Colonial a classic disappointment for UMass

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

It had been built up all season as a classic confrontation but in the end, for UMass fans, it was a disappointment.

Following the Holy Cross victory over the Minutemen in the Colonial Classic, 76-63, the general consensus among the press, the players, and the coaches was that UMass proved it could play with the Crusaders, but didn't do enough things right to win.

"We stayed with them for most of the game, but we lost our poise, our patience, and most of all our rebounders," said a dejected UMass coach Jack Leaman.

"We were beaten on the boards, beaten on quickness, and intelligence," he said.

It wasn't that UMass didn't have the talent to match the Crusaders, it was a matter of foul-plagued forwards Len Kohlhaas, and Mark Haymore, several controversial referee decisions, and most serious of all, missed opportunities.

With Holy Cross leading 56-48 with 9:07 to go in the game, UMass guard Derick Claiborne stole a pass intended for Crusader guard Leo Kane, scampered down the floor on a two on one fast break, but Alex Eldridge missed the layup.

As Holy Cross brought up the ball, Eldridge, who had 5 steals during the game, stole the ball, and again UMass squandered a three on two fast break. The Crusaders rebounded and Crusader forward Chris Potter tossed in a 12 foot jumper and Holy Cross increased its lead to ten, 58-48.

"We blew our chances today," said team captain Claiborne.

"If we had scored then, we would have been back in the ballgame, but instead, Holy Cross got the momentum and we never could get back in. We let them have too many garbage points," he said.

From the outset, UMass was in foul trouble. By halftime, UMass forward Kohlhaas had three fouls while center Haymore had two. With 12 minutes to go in the game, Haymore and Kohlhaas had each collected their fourth personal and by game's end, each had fouled out.

"We couldn't be aggressive when we needed to be," said Haymore. If we can't go after rebounds and loose balls with the fear that the ref's are going to call the foul, then the game is practically lost there," he said.

Holy Cross outrebounded UMass 25-21 but the UMass total was fattened up in the final minutes.

For the Crusaders, the win was an extremely satisfactory one.

"At the start of the Classic, I was very apprehensive about facing UMass, especially after I saw what they did to Providence. When they led 9-4 with 15 minutes to go in the first half, I was even more worried," said Crusader head coach George Blaney.

"Our bench really came through. Leo Kane (10 points), John O'Connor (7) helped out in key situations, but I think our most important contributors were Chris Potter and Charlie Browne," he said.

Potter, 6' 8" senior was the Crusader's leading scorer with 16 points. But that's not all he contributed. He grabbed 9 rebounds, shot 7-11 from the floor and was the game's leading assist man with ten.

"I can't think of too many 6' 8" people who can have such a complete game like he did. He had more assists than any of our guards or even UMass's. And Eldridge is supposed to be the assist leader," said Blaney.

Browne, the sophomore, who collected 10 points, was a substitute before the Colonial Classic. He took junior O'Connor's place in the lineup and Blaney was happy.

"Charlie has really fit in well, and in this game took some pressure off Michael Vicens (14) and Potter. We will keep him in the lineup for some time to come," said Blaney.

CLASSIC CHATTER:

Holy Cross's famed guard Ronnie Perry was held to 11 points by the UMass defense as he shot 5-18 from the field. "He still hurt

THE IRON MAN RETIRES —"Jarring John" Havlicek will only be strutting his stuff for the Green for the rest of this season. He made the anticlimatic announcement the Celts went out and lost to the Golden State Warriors. He said he made the announcement now "so the people around the league will have one more chance to see me in action." If Havlicek sounds a bit coneited, he has a right to be, since he ranks in the top ten in several NBA all-time categories, including most games played in a career. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Hondo hangs 'em up

BOSTON [UPI-AP] — Tireless John Havlicek, who has played in more National Basketball Association games than any other man, announced Sunday he will retire at the end of this, his 16th, season with the Boston Celtics.

The 37-year-old swingman from Ohio State made the expected announcement prior to the Celtics' afternoon home game against the Golden State Warriors.

"Everything a player could accomplish, I've done," said the forward-guard, who will be 38 in April.

"I thought about this for a long time and knew that this was going to be my last year when I reported for training camp," said Havlicek, who suffered appendicitis in the middle of last summer.

"I even thought about announcing it at the beginning of the season that this would be my last year, but the World Series and football were both in full swing.

"We feel now it's the appropriate time because a lot of people throughout the league will know about it and will be able to see me one last time as we swing through the league," he said.

"The decision to retire was totally his," said Celtics president and general manager Red Auerbach at a mid-day news conference — the topic of which Auerbach called "the worst kept secret since World War II."

The Celtics had called Sunday's news conference two days earlier and word of Havlicek's retirement leaked out over the weekend.

The 6-foot-5 Havlicek, who earns in excess of $200,000 a year, came out of Ohio State as a first-round Celtics' draft choice in 1962. He played on eight Boston NBA championship teams.

Havlicek denied that the once-proud Celtics' woeful record, 14-30, pushed him into retirement.

Havlicek chose basketball over college football — and was once termed by Buckeye coach Woody Hayes, "the best quarterback in the Big Ten not playing football."

Havlicek said he is most proud of having played the most regular season and play-off games in NBA history.

"Scoring points doesn't enter in my mind," he said.

Despite his age, Havlicek has played in all 44 Celtics games this season, averaging 31 minutes and 14.7 points per game. In 15 previous seasons, he averaged 21.1 points during the regular schedule, and 22 points in the playoffs.

Havlicek played in 12 All-Star games — all consecutive from 1966-77 — but was left off the squad this season.

Auerbach said the man dubbed "Hondo" will be associated with the Celtics in a yet-to-be-determined parttime capacity.

Havlicek, who lives in Columbus, Ohio, in the off-season, said among his future plans is ownership of a fast-food hamburger franchise in West Chester, N.Y.

"I have no desire to coach," he said.

Going into the Golden State game, Havlicek had played in a 1,231 regular season games and in 172 playoff games, another record. With an abnormally low heartbeat of just 40 beats per minute, he has been able to play 45,015 minutes of the fastest, continual-action game in professional sports.

A native of Martins Ferry, Ohio, Havlicek got far less publicity at Ohio State than teammates Jerry Lucas and Larry Siegfried.

Still, Auerbach drafted him first in 1962, and groomed the loose-jointed, Havlicek to take over the important sixth-man role after Frank Ramsey retired in 1964.

When Bill Russell retired in 1969, Havlicek became the glue that kept the Celtics spirit alive during a major rebuilding effort that led to two more Boston titles in 1974 and 1976. Havlicek was named Most Valuable Player of the 1974 playoffs and was a vital part of the 1976 championship team.

Havlicek needed 369 points in the team's last 39 games, just over nine points a game, to score 1,000 points in all of his 16 pro seasons — which stands as another NBA record.

He ranks No. 2 in minutes played trailing only Wilt Chamberlain and No. 3 in scoring behind Chamberlain and Oscar Robertson. In addition Havlicek is second only to Chamberlain in field goals made and attempted, No. 8 in free throws attempted and No. 9 in free throws made and No. 6 in assists.

Despite his accomplishments as a professional, Havlicek said his biggest disappointment in sports was failing to make the 1960 U.S. Olympic basketball team.

He recalled his first NBA basket, a dunk against the New York Knicks in 1962, and said he is the only active NBA player to span the era of Jerry West an Oscar Robertson in the 1960s and that of Walt Frazier and Julius Erving in the 1970s.

"The career I've had has been one of happiness," Havlicek said. "I'm not going out with something sad."

"I'll sure miss him," said Celtics teammate Jo Jo White. "It was time to go, but I hate to see it. You have to listen to what your body tells you."

January proves stormy for men's basketball

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The month of January and the year 1978 have not been an especially endearing time for the UMass basketball team. Entering last weekend's Colonial Classic tournament at the Boston Garden, the Minutemen in the new year had managed to lose four straight ball games; have the roof of the Hartford Civic Center collapse just hours after a loss to UConn in that building; get stranded in New York City for four days during the great blizzard and generally spend a rather depressing month in deserted Amherst.

Thus it was felt there could be no greater elixer for the slumping team than to spend a weekend in Boston playing in the second annual Colonial Classic tournament before friends, family, and New England college basketball fans.

Things looked good for the Minutemen when on Friday night in the opening round of the tournament they methodically dispensed of Boston College, 88-64, thereby gaining their first victory in three weeks. The win, coupled with Holy Cross's victory over Connecticut set up the promoter's dream final between two highly respected teams who had fallen upon hard times of late.

However, the good fortune of Friday night's success escaped UMass in the second half of the championship game and Holy Cross, utilizing the strong inside game of its front line, captured its second straight Colonial title by defeating UMass 76-63, before 14,386 fans, the largest crowd to ever witness a New England college basketball game.

The Minutemen, who lost to Holy Cross in overtime in last year's opening round of the tournament, were looking for revenge and a chance to establish their ranking as a New England power. The Crusaders, however, had other plans. Holy Cross had suffered two humiliating defeats the previous week to Providence and Fairfield and had something to prove to their growing list of detractors who had become disenchanted with their less than top 20 form.

Leading by just one at the end of the first half, 35-34, the Crusaders hit for six straight points in the second stanza and established control of the game. With both Mark Haymore and Len Kohlhaas straddled with four fouls apiece, Holy Cross opened up its inside game and began to pull away.

With Chris Potter, the tournament's Most Valuable Player, and with statistics like 16 points, 15 rebounds and ten assists who can argue; Mike Vicens, 14 points and Charlie Browne, ten, controlling the boards at both ends Holy Cross opened up its largest lead of the night 70-54 with 3:34 remaining.

"I'm disappointed, but I think we got beat by a better team tonight," explained UMass coach Jack Leaman. "They were just too quick for us, once Mark and Len got in foul trouble."

Holy Cross coach George Blaney also thought the play of his front line, especially on the defensive boards, was the determining factor in the game. The Crusaders outrebounded the Minutemen 44-36.

"We won this one of the boards at both ends," said Blaney. We were more patient on offense than we had been in the last few games. We generally look inside, however, we had gotten away from that."

The fact that both Haymore and Kohlhaas had four fouls apiece with better than 12 minutes remaining in the game certainly helped the Crusaders inside maneuvering. Officials Charlie Diehl and Dick Lynch seemingly had little patience for any aggressiveness displayed by the two big men.

"I seriously felt one of those guys was looking for me," mumbled Kohlhaas afterwards. "I don't like to make excuses or blame the refs but they just didn't let us play."

In order to reach the finals UMass had to dispense of Boston College and the win, although not the most exciting game ever witnessed inside the esteemed walls of Boston Garden, was nonetheless, a win.

The 88-64 victory was engineered by Alex Eldridge who literally controlled the tempo of the game by contributing eight points, eight assists and six steals along with a brilliant floor game. Even the bombs of BC guard Ernie Cobb (24 points) could not detract from the Eldridge performance.

"Offensively we had the game under control," said an obviously relieved Leaman, who described the month to that date as just "awful." "Alex ran the game as well as he can run it. I wouldn't trade him for anybody."

Also contributing to the slump breaking victory were Mike Pyatt who scored 24 points (he added 16 against Holy Cross and was voted to the tournament's All-Star Team) and Mark Haymore (14 points in just 17 minutes). Derick Claiborne regained his shooting touch and chipped in 15 points.

The tournament may not have been a total success for UMass, but it must be labeled a triumph for New England college basketball. The almost 25,000 fans who turned out for both nights proved to skeptics that basketball interest is alive and well in New England.

"The turnout tonight thrills me to no end,"

Hockey team in good '78 start

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

While UMass students were busy opening Christmas presents, guzzling New Years Eve drinks and watching the Dallas Cowboys crunch the Orange Crush defense during intersession, the UMass Minutemen hockey team was busy preparing for its second half of the 1977-78 season that began last Friday and Saturday night at Orr rink.

The UMass six played like a team possessed this past weekend, as it grabbed 3 out of a possible 4 points against two solid hockey teams. The icemen dumped Babson College, 6-3 on Saturday night and battled St. Anselm's to a 3-3 overtime tie on Friday night.

Thanks to the successful weekend, the Minutemen upped their record to a respectable 4-6-1 and put themselves in good shape for tonight's encounter with the vastly improved Crusaders of Holy Cross at Worcester.

The Minutemen's strategy all year has been a "take the man off the puck," physical game, but never has it been so successful as this past weekend.

"These were two good physical games," said UMass coach Jack Canniff in reference to this past weekend.

Canniff's main concern after Friday night's exhausting 3-3 overtime tie with St. Anselm's College and the conditioning of his players heading into Saturday night's game against Babson College.

The Minutemen gave no indication of fatigue against Babson Saturday night, as they skated to a relatively easy 6-3 victory. The icemen gave a brilliant show of offensive consistency, as they scored two goals in every period.

The Minutemen broke onto the board first at 17:23 of the first period. Dean Liacos and John Peters came charging across the blue line on the right side before Liacos pushed the puck ahead to Peters, who blasted a 15 foot slap shot past the Beavers' goalie Hunter Judson.

The UMies upped its lead to 2-0 at 19:05 on a beautiful play by Bonelli. He rushed across the blue line and penetrated deep enough to leave a pretty drop pass to Valicenti, who drilled a shot from the right point wide of the net but onto the stick of Mark Ferragamo, who tapped in the rebound inside the post past Judson's right skate.

Nick Carney, who scored both Minutemen goals in the second period, scored his first goal at 2:20 with a vicious 30 foot slap shot that beat Judson to his stick side.

The UMass 3-0 lead only lasted 2:14, as Babson's Steve Parlato raced all the way down ice and slipped the puck under UMass goalie John Riley's pads at 4:34.

Carney added his second tally at 6:10, which hiked the UMies lead to 4-1. Carney took a pass from Brian Kittredge and fired a 20 foot wrist shot that slid along the ice and slipped by Judson's left skate inside the post.

The "never say die" Beavers cut the UMass lead to 4-2 at 16:16 on a weird goal. Tim DeMello took a pass from Shawn Galloway and fired an 87 degree, 12 foot wrist shot that snuck past Riley's left side.

Peters scored the first goal of the third period and his second goal of the game on a great individual effort. Peters stole the puck off the stick of defenseman Russ Colligan in the Beavers zone and drilled an 18 foot slap shot past Judson. The Minutemen now led 5-2.

The Milan brothers got into the act on the second goal of the period and sixth of the game for UMass. Barry Milan took a pass from brother Joey and flipped a backhander past Judson at 11:15.

George Salvitti narrowed the UMass lead to 6-3, as he scored on a 14 foot wrist shot that beat Riley to the glove side at 19:26, but that was as close as the Beavers were to come as UMass captured its fourth victory.

On Friday, Jan. 27, the 3-6 Minutemen encountered the 7-8 Hawks of St. Anselm's College at Orr rink. It was the Minutemen's debut in 1978 and the second half of the season. The game marked the return of lanky center Lincoln Flagg, who had been saddled with a knee injury in the first half of the season.

The icemen played with first game jitters, as they found themselves down by two goals in both the first (2-0) and second periods (3-1). Thanks to third period goals by defensemen Liacos and Valicenti, however, the Minutemen earned a hard fought 3-3 tie that couldn't be snapped by a 10 minute, sudden death overtime.

The tie spoiled a brilliant offensive show by St. Anselm's forward Bill Butler, who scored a three goal hat trick.

The Minutemen played as if the month long lay off hurt more than helped in the first period.

"We were standing around. We were tight. It was a case of nerves more than the lay off," said Canniff in reference to the sloppy first period.

The Hawks wasted little time at taking advantage of the UMies inactivity, as Butler swooped in from left wing to take a pass from Mike Mulrey and fired a 10 foot wrist shot past an amazed Riley. Butler accomplished this feat after only 20 seconds of play.

The Hawks' John Quinn and the Minutemen's Barry Milan tangled in a mini-wrestling match in the Hawks' end at 9:53. Both were assessed two minute minor penalties for roughing.

While Quinn and Milan sat in the sin bin for roughing, the Hawks and Minutemen played shorthanded. Playing 5 on 5 or 4 on 4 didn't matter to the Hawks' offense and they proved it at 11:08 when Butler pushed a 10 foot shot along the ice that eluded Riley's left skate.

The Minutemen had two excellent scoring chances that went by the board in the opening period. Bill White just couldn't find the handle on a loose puck in front of the Hawks' goalie John Parisi and Carney came bursting in all alone on Parisi, only to fire the puck wide to the left.

The Minutemen started to go to the body more in the second period and slowed down the faster Hawks, which enabled the UMies us with some key shots while we were behind," said Leaman.

Statistically, the game can be described in the shooting percentages. UMass — 1st half — 47 per cent, 2nd half — 34 per cent. For Holy Cross — 1st half — 47 per cent, 2nd half — 57 per cent.

From the foul line, UMass shot 56 percent while Holy Cross shot 53 percent.

Shooting from UMass personnel was dismal. Mike Pyatt, 7-16; Alex Eldridge, 5-16; Len Kohlhaas, 1-4, and Brad Johnson, 1-5.

UMass has four days to rest before its tackles the Crusaders again in Worcester on Thursday. "I'm a little scared that UMass has that much time to practice before they play us again," said the Crusader's Vicens.

Meanwhile, UMass's Haymore is a little apprehensive. "I don't look forward to that Holy Cross crowd and how they influence the ref's decisions," he said.

Celts in Springfield; to tangle with Pacers

David Bing (44) will be in action tonight when the Boston Celtics invade the Springfield Civic Center to face the Indiana Pacers, one of the highest scoring squads in the NBA. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

The Boston Celtics will play the Indiana Pacers tonight in the Springfield Civic Center in a game scheduled to tap off at 7:30 p.m.

The game was originally slated to be played in the Hartford Civic Center, until that facility's roof collapsed two weeks ago.

The Pacers with a 19-27 record, will bring one of the NBA's youngest starting lineups into the game, as they average only 24.2 years in age apiece.

Backcourt starters for the visitors will be 6'3" Ricky Sobers and 6'4" Earl Tatum, neither of whom was with the Pacers last season. Sobers arrived as part of the deal that sent Don Buse to Phoenix in the off-season, while Tatum was traded during the current campaign from Los Angeles.

Mike Bantom and Danny Roundfield, both 6'9", will start in the frontcourt. Roundfield is an impressive leaper, while Bantom is starting to fulfill his great potential this season.

Opening in the pivot will be 7'1" James Edwards, who came to Indiana in the Tatum deal from LA. Coach Bobby "Slick" Leonard can bring powerful Ron Behagan, Len Elmore and Mel Bennett off the bench.

The Celts, bearers of a 14-30 record after Sunday's loss to Golden State, have been getting consistently spectacular performances from Dave Cowens, with plus-20 point, 15 rebound nights almost becoming the norm for Big Red.

Persons holding tickets good for Hartford must exchange their tickets at the Springfield Civic Center today. Persons who bought tickets for the Hartford site may get refunds from Hartford.

Tickets are still available and can be purchased at the Springfield Civic Center until game time tonight.

Jo Jo wants vacation

BOSTON [UPI] — Jo Jo White said yesterday he will take 10 days off, but the Boston Celtics planned no such vacation for their sore-footed and unhappy guard.

Both White and the Celtics agree the nine-year veteran would accompany the team to the Springfield Civic Center for a tonight's game against the Indiana Pacers.

Asked at a practice yesterday if he would play, White said, "Nope. I'm going to take 10 days off." White cited contract difficulties as well as bone spurs in his foot as factors contributing to his decision.

But, Jeff Cohen, assistant general manger of the team said, "As far as we know, we expect him to be at the game, but we will not make a determination whether he will play until after consultation with the doctor team physician Thomas Silvan, Tom Sanders the coach and Jo Jo.

"I wouldn't be at all surprised to see the same situation as Sunday," when White unexpectedly entered the game in the third quarter after stating he did not plan to play. "I would assume Sanders would not use him if he could avoid it."

White has played in 488 straight games for Boston but is willing to break his streak, because he felt the Celtics "reneged on my contract; so why should I go out and run on the foot if I'm not guaranteed a contract. My career could be ended, and I would have nothing."

The seven-time all star has played the last two seasons with bone spurs on both feet after signing a three year contract prior to the 76-77 campaign.

The former Kansas All-American claimed General Manager Red Auerbach and Owner Irv Levin approached him before the current season, saying they wanted to renegotiate his three-year contract, beginning immediately, so that White would be a Celtic through 1982.

White claimed a dozen meetings the most recent coming Sunday morning with Auerbach, have produced no results. White said he has been told that Lloyd's of London will not insure a new five-year contract because of his balky heels.

"I'm supposed to go out and play hard all the time, and I'm unsigned," said the 31-year-old White. "My foot is sore, and they want me to play my best. But, they won't sign my contract. And they came to me, I didn't go to them.

"Money's not the problem," White emphasized. "It's the principle of the thing."

Auerbach said White's contract dealing "is something between club and Jo Jo. I don't want to talk about it."

But, White does want to talk about the situation.

He discussed his anger following the Celtics' 99-98 loss Sunday to Golden State and again yesterday after arriving but not suiting up for practice at Lexington Christian Academy."

"I'll let them all off the hook," said White Monday. "I'll tell them they can keep their contract offer. As far as I'm concerned, negotiations are over."

Icemen in action

The Minutemen will be back in action tonight when they travel to Worcester to do battle with the Crusaders of Holy Cross in a 7:30 contest at the Hart Center.

The Crusaders are coached by Bill Bellerose who took over for Mike Addesa who was forced to take the rest of the year off due to illness.

Holy Cross is having a fine season thus far, and will bring a respectable 10-5 record into tonight's game. The Crusaders lost seven one goal games last season and finished with a 15-12 record overall.

The Crusaders will be paced offensively by leading scorers Gerald Curley, James Murphy, Mike Pinho and Peter Annicelli. Juniors P.J. Costello and Jim Stewart will be handling the goaltending.

Grapplers win...finally

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

Can you recall the thrill of the New York Mets winning the World Series in 1969? How about that exciting Holy Cross-Boston College upset last Fall? Well, hold onto your hats ladies and gentlemen, as still another sports miracle hits the streets.

The UMass wrestling team has won a meet. In fact, they won three meets.

Dave Amato's band of Minutemen grapplers traveled to Coast Guard Saturday and had four meets with the likes of C.W. Post, Maine, Albany, State, and host team Coast Guard; coming away with a 3-1 record. The wins put UMass at 3-9 on the season.

When last semester ended, UMass had a 0-4 record, and then lost intersession meets against St. Lawrence, Binghampton, and Hofstra.

The Minutemen had a chance to pick up the elusive first victory last Wednesday against Springfield College, but the Chiefs manhandled UMass 30-11.

As usual, co-captain Larry Otsuka provided heroics at 134 pounds, and Charley Rigoglioso (142 pounds) and Bob Clark (190 pounds) also posted wins, but Springfield tallied three pins enroute to the lopsided victory.

Thus, when the team ventured to Coast Guard Saturday the squad was looking for the big number one, if nothing else.

Opening against C. W. Post, UMass won 21-18.

"I didn't think we'd win, to be honest," said Amato after the meet. "They had an 8-2 record going into the meet, and had wrestled some good schools."

Tony Perry started the UMass scoring with a tie at 126 pounds. Trailing 6-2, Perry roared back to gain a tie for two team points.

"That's when we took off," said Amato. "Perry put us back in the meet."

Otsuka, Rigoglioso, and Tim Fallon scored to put UMass in the lead, and Monty Payette lost a close 6-0 decision at 158 pounds.

"Payette was a real surprise," beamed Amato. "This was his first varsity match and he didn't let us down. He showed a lot of talent that we weren't aware of."

In the heavyweight class, John Allen posted a 9-1 triumph to put the meet away.

"i look at it this way," said Amato. "We lost the two meets against Binghampton and St. Lawrence and I thought we should have taken them both. As far as Springfield is concerned, we lost and looked bad in doing so. I'm glad to have that first win."

The high-spirited team proceeded to make mince-meat of a hapless Maine team with a 34-14 win. Dana Rasmussen opened the scoring with a pin at 118 pounds and Perry took an 11-3 superior decision at 126 pounds.

Mike Carroll, Fallon, and Fred Rheault also won their bouts; the latter's coming from a fast 32 second pin.

Bob Radiwitz and Mike Mitrowski posted their first varsity wins of the season, with wins at 177 and 158 pounds respectively.

The Minutemen lost a 21-18 match to Coast Guard. Coast Guard, ranked fouuth in New England, fell behind 13-3 in the opening matches before storming back for the eventual win.

"This was one of the toughest losses I've had," said Amato. "After we had the early lead, I thought we could take them, but we made a few mistakes here and there that got us into trouble."

Rasmussen, Perry, Otsuka, Rigoglioso, and Allen racked up wins in the ill-fated meet.

UMass came right back with a 27-15 pounding of Albany State. The familiar names of Rasmussen, Otsuka, Rigoglioso, and Allen provided the UMass scoring, along with Clark, who won at 190 pounds, and Rheault, who managed to shake his current "pin or be pinned" tag with a 4-1 win.

Wrestling Notes — The Minutemen will have their first home meet of the season Wednesday night, entertaining Union College and Southern Connecticut in a tri-match at 6:30 in Boyden's auxiliary gym.

"I'm looking for a split," said Amato. "Southern Conn. is a pretty good school. I think we'll give them a tough fight, though."

The status of UMass grappler Kevin Griffin is that the reigning New England champaat 150 pounds will not be returning to the team this season. Griffin has been replaced by Larry Otsuka as co-captain, along with Fallon.

"That's no reflection on Timmy Fallon," said Amato, "but we have so many freshmen on the team that I think we need the services of two captains."

Speaking of Fallon, the Lowell senior was used by Amato at 158 pounds against Springfield, rather than his customary 150 pounds.

Amato has been short of 158 pound wrestlers lately and elected to use Fallon in a heavier weight class, while using Mike Carroll at 150 pounds.

"He never complained about going at a heavier weight," said Amato. "He probably would have won easily in his normal weight."

Fallon won three of four matches at Coast Guard, and the one match he lost was in the heavier weight.

Bowlers win opener

The UMass women's bowling team opened its Spring schedule Saturday by taking first place in a tournament at Lowell University.

The road to victory began in the first match game when the UMass women bowled an outstanding 872 game, breaking their own previous Tri-State League record of high team game for the 1977-78 season.

Strong bowlers for the team were Amanda Garcia, who bowled a 552 set and Cyndy Adams with a 534. Combined with the solid bowling of Beth Schneider, Jackie Cashen, and Gina McEvoy, the UMass women racked up a team total of 2441. Southern Connecticut captured second place with 2302, while the University of Connecticut followed in third with 2182.

By winning 36.5 of 54 match points, the UMass women still maintain their first place standing in the Tri-State League. Another bowler for the women was Sue Iverson, a newcomer to the team who displayed promise in helping UMass stay in the lead in the future.

In the men's division, Bryant College placed first, followed by West Point, and the University of Lowell took third. The UMass men's team did not fair too well even though each of the six men had bowled at least one game over 200.

Strong performances were shown by Paul Stutzman who bowled a set of 628 (221,209,198), and Dave Tursky with a set of 596 (215,184,197). Other bowlers for UMass were Mike Berard, Kirk Peters, Chuck Bond, and Tim Welch.

Both the men's and women's bowling teams face the Region I tournament of the ACU-I's, this Saturday at Auburn.

Spikers join N.E. league

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Volleyball Club will begin its first season in the New England Collegiate Volleyball League this Saturday when the league opens its tournament schedule at Wentworth Institute in Boston.

The league, now in its second season, consists of 21 teams, grouped into North, South, East and West divisions. UMass joins Amherst, Williams Middlebury, UNH, Westfield St. and Lyndon St. in the Northern Division.

The teams will play a rugged 54 game schedule, with the two top teams in each division along with two wild-card teams advancing to the playoffs in April.

According to the club's coach Mike Gurk, the league will use regular NCAA rules, and will hopefully be a stepping stone to the Eastern Collegiate Volleyball League.

Over intersession members of the club gave a power volleyball demonstration-clinic for the Physical Education classes of South Hadley High School. In cooperation with UMass student teacher Rhoda Metzger, coach Gurk and hitters Al Morel and Rich Schoum displayed competitive volleyball skills and instructed the day's classes in fundamentals.

Hoopwomen v. Chiefs at Cage

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

When last we heard from the UMass women's basketball team, it was entering intersession with a 5-0 record.

As the Minutewomen prepare for tonight's Cage game against Springfield College (7:30 p.m. tap off), UMass is 10-4.

Usually, such a record would not be cause for concern. But such is not the case with UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski.

"We just didn't play good ball this intersession," she said. "We're still struggling to put our game together."

The intersession mini-season was marked by three personnel changes: the return of Lu-Ann Fletcher, the addition of Julie Ready, and the farewell of Sue Henry.

Fletcher, who had been the starting center for three years, injured a knee in September. She underwent surgery for removal of cartilage, and was finally able to get back in action a week ago Monday against Queens.

But Fletcher has only played about seven or eight minutes of the Minutewomen's last three games.

"The big thing with Lu is getting her timing back and running," Ozdarski said. "It's going to be up to her how quick she wants to get back."

Ready, meanwhile, joined the team right after New Year's. A 6-2 center, she practiced with the team for about two weeks, and saw action in a big win over Brown. Ready has slowly been working into the UMass system.

"She's coming," Ozdarski said of the freshman. "She's improved 200 per cent since she first came in."

And finally, Henry. The sophomore guard, who had been averaging 11.2 points about seven assists per game, was forced to leave the team recently due to academic problems.

"It'll affect the team," Ozdarski said of Henry's absence. "We'll just ask each kid to take up 20 per cent of what she gave us.

"It's a matter of adjustment," Ozdarski continued. "There's no reason they can't adjust. It's just going to take some time."

In Henry's place, Ozdarski plans on alternating Mary Halleran and Julie McHugh. Ozdarski indicated that Halleran will take the court for the opening tap tonight against the Chiefs.

The battle tonight against Springfield will mark the first time this season the Minutewomen have played in the Cage. Of their three 'home' games, two were played in the Springfield Civic Center and the other in NOPE gym.

"We've played 14 games to date," Ozdarski said, "and we're finally returning to the friendly confines of the Cage. Considering that we've played 11 games away, our record isn't bad."

UMass began its vacation schedule way back on Dec. 22, when it traveled to Southern Connecticut to participate in the school's invitational tournament.

The Minutewomen were matched up against St. Joseph's (Pa.) in the first round. Predictably, UMass fell to the number 12 team in the country, 88-68, although the Minutewomen were trailing by only three points, 39-36, at halftime.

In the consolation game the next day, UMass bombed Boston University, 91-64. Sue Peters scored 24 points in each game to lead the Minutewomen's scoring.

After a two week layoff, UMass returned to action against St. John's in the Civic Center. Although Henry is now gone, it was then that she provided one of the most memorable moments in UMass women's basketball history.

St. John's led by two points with only two seconds left after a desperation shot by St. John's with the 30 second clock running out swished through.

Maura Supinski took the ball out of bounds behind her own basket, heaved it to midcourt to Henry, who took it and in one motion turned around and flung the ball toward the basket.

The ball swished through, prompting the Minutewomen to practically suffocate Henry as they piled on top of her in front of their bench.

But the miracle shot was to no avail, as UMass went on to lose in overtime, 71-69. Peters, who topped UMass in scoring in every game over the break, had 20 points while Henry added 14.

The Minutewomen then journeyed South and put together a three-game winning streak by beating Brown, 73-44; Brooklyn College, 70-65; and Adelphi, 80-67. The Brooklyn game is noteworthy, since Brooklyn had beaten UMass the previous year and also because the Minutewomen had to scramble back from a 13 point deficit to win. They trailed at halftime, 30-25.

UMass was then lambasted by two

EAA games rescheduled

The rescheduling of University of Massachusetts' basketball games against Penn State and Duquesne were announced this week by Associate Director of Athletics, Robert O'Connell.

Postponements of games scheduled last weekend against the two Eastern Eight opponents were necessary when the Minuteman's flights from New York were cancelled by snow which closed the city's three airports.

The Duquesne game has been rescheduled for Monday evening February 20th at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena and the Penn State encounter will be played Tuesday evening February 21st at the Recreation Hall at University Park (Pa.) starting at 7:30 p.m.

said Leaman after Saturday's championship game. "This is the place to play a tournament like this. As long as I'm coach of UMass and this tournament's still going, I'm going to bring my team back."

Still Room on the Ground Floor for Computer Careers at Amdahl

Computer professionals are aware that today's most advanced large-system technology was developed by a company that, not too long ago, was virtually unknown. It was during late 1975—when Amdahl delivered its first multi-million-dollar 470V/6 system following a 5-year, $50,000,000 effort—that the company first attracted widespread industry attention. Now, Amdahl is the most talked about company in the industry: a compact group of highly talented high technologists producing the world's highest performing general purpose computers, the V/5, V/6 and V/7. Over a quarter billion dollars worth of Amdahl systems is now working worldwide in every industry sector using large-scale computers.

The original design team is still virtually intact and working on future systems. Although we are growing at an extremely rapid pace, we are committed to retaining the same creative environment that yielded the V/5, V/6 and V/7. We are still small by computer industry comparisons. We are still friendly. We still enjoy attacking tasks because we think it's fun. And we still reward personal efforts with personal recognition.

We think Amdahl is a great place to work. There's still room on the ground floor for you if you are about to receive a BS or advanced degree in electrical engineering or computer sciences, and consider yourself a cut above your classmates in competence, enthusiasm and potential.

Amdahl Corporation, 1250 East Arques Avenue, Sunnyvale, California 94086. We are an equal opportunity employer.

We are coming to campus to fill positions in hardware, firmware and hardware-related software. We are specifically interviewing for logic and firmware designers and hardware-related, software diagnostic engineers, design automation programmers, and control programmers for our mini-based console.

Japanese 244. THE JAPANESE LITERARY TRADITION

This course provides an opportunity to experience some of the immense richness and vitality of Japanese poetry, drama, and prose fiction from around 1600 to the present. Treatment will take up the role of women both as writers and as literary characters, the impact of European literary history, theory and practice as well as major currents of popular culture and humor during the past four centuries. The course is intended both for those students who have a special interest in Japan or East Asia as well as those with no prior experience in these fields. All assigned reading will be in English. C core.

Japanese 491A. SEMINAR IN THE MODERN JAPANESE NOVEL

There is now a substantial body of quality translations and a small but useful body of English-language criticism that now makes it possible for the serious student of literature who has no background in Japanese to obtain a firm grasp of the salient characteristics of the modern Japanese novel. The seminar is open to graduate and advanced undergraduate students specializing in any aspect of European, American, Asian, or other literature.

Chinese 254 CHINESE LITERARY TRADITION

This course is designed to familiarize the student with major works of Chinese fiction. Tales, short stories and novels form the earliest times to the modern period will be discussed. All works are read in English translation. There are no prerequisites and no knowledge of a language other than English is necessary. C core.

Asian Studies 150 THE DEVELOPMENT OF MODERN ASIA

This course aims to present the problems of China, Japan and the colonial areas from about 1580 to the present. Basic theme: impact of the West on these areas and their nature of their reactions to it. One-third of the course centers on the period covering 1850-1900; one third on 1900-1950; and one-third on contemporary issues. There will be two hour exams and one final. D core.

Asian Studies 297A CHINESE CALLIGRAPHY I

Lecture with discussion and demonstration. Chinese calligraphy has for centuries been a major part of intellectual activities in China, Japan, and Korea — a prestigious symbol of cultural refinement in those societies. Course meets once a week for 1¼ hours, consisting of lectures on history and theory of Chinese calligraphy and practice on basic skills. One credit course taken on a pass-fail basis.

Asian Studies 397A CHINESE CALLIGRAPHY II

A continuation of Chinese Calligraphy I, this course introduces students to different forms of Chinese calligraphy at a more advanced level. Included are styles such as regular, running, cursive and seal. This is a credit taken on a pass-fail level.

EVERYWOMEN'S CENTER — A Career and Life Planning workshop for women will be offered by Everywomen's Center beginning Thursday Feb. 9 at 7-9:30 p.m. and meeting each Thursday until March 30.

Women interested should pre-register by Friday Feb. 3. More information at 545-0883 from Peggy Cookson.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION — Alpine Skiing (downhill) G65 and Nordic Skiing (cross-country) G80 are not oversubscribed. Registration for these courses is in Boyden Room 223 from 9 a.m. - 3 p.m. Jan 31 - Feb 3.

IE 497A ENGINEERS WITHIN THE ORGANIZATIONAL ENVIRONMENT

This course focuses on the engineer who solves problems and makes decisions in conjunction with other people. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations — especially each individuals own behavior — as it relates to the processes of problem solving and decision making. Four types of knowledge will be stressed: 1) intellectual (theory and research) knowledge; 2) understanding of oneself as a person and an engineer; 3) behavioral skills in dealing with people; and 4) understanding and insight into the process of problem solving and decision making.

Com Lit 290C COMPARITIVE THEMES IN NORTH-SOUTH AMERICAN LITERATURE

This course traces the discovery and exploration of the Northern and Southern hemispheres and compares the similarities and differences of their subsequent development. Some of the topics examined in the course are the role of women in the colonial Americas, the concept of the Indian in North-South America and the quest for a non-European identity.

Com Lit 101C CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE OF THE AMERICAS

This course deals with the recent literary boom in Latin America and its counterpart in Chicano and Puerto Rican-Neorican literature. Students have the option of reading in Spanish or English.

Com Lit 493A CONTEMPORARY NOVEL and THE MASS MEDIA

This course examines both the contemporary growth of the media and its impact on the novels of France and Latin America.

The TI-57. The super slide-rule that'll get you into programming... fast and easy.
Even if you've never programmed before.

For the student who requires slide-rule functions, the TI-57 delivers an exceptional combination of advanced mathematical and statistical capabilities. From functions such as trig, logs, powers, roots and reciprocals... to mean, variance, standard deviation and much more.

And as long as you're in the market for a super slide-rule calculator, why not buy one that can also put the power, speed and convenience of programming at your disposal?

Programming a calculator simply means giving it a logical set of instructions for accomplishing what you want it to do. Programming enables you to solve lengthy and repetitive problems quickly by substituting new variables into the set of instructions which you have already entered into the machine.

The end result is more efficient use of your time in problem-solving.

All this and more is explained in our unique, illustrated, easy-to-follow guidebook, "Making Tracks Into Programming." This 200-page book comes with the TI-57. It contains simple, step-by-step instructions and examples to help you quickly learn to use programming functions to make your problem-solving faster, more accurate and fun.

Women gymnasts trample Cornell in Cage

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's gymnastics team earned a 134.57 to 123.95 victory by defeating its Cornell University counterparts in a double dual Cage encounter yesterday.

The gymwomen have been practicing since January 4 and this was their first test since December 10 as the intersession contest against Westchester was cancelled due to snow.

Coach Virginia Evans said the team performed well but "would have to sharpen up before we face Michigan State next week."

In the first event, vaulting, UMass swept the first three places. Karen Hemberger grabbed the top honors with a 9.1 followed by Stephanie Jones with a 9.0 and Susan Cantwell with an 8.8. Hemberger and Jones received their scores on what Evans termed, "well done Sukaharas."

On the uneven parallel bars, UMass again swept the first three places. Jones won the first slot with a 9.05 with a "good but not her usual excellent bar routine," according to Evans. Hemberger was second with a 9.0 mark after Coach Evans protested an 8.6 which was the original mark. Cantwell finished third with an 8.6 which Evans said was a rather conservative score. The fourth counting score in the event was turned in by Junior Debbie Law who is back on the team after a year and a half absence. Law's score of 8.15 illustrates she can be a contributing member of the team.

"The balance beam was a virtual disaster area for UMass with the exception of Cantwell's performance," said Evans. Cantwell and sophomore Laurie Knapp were the only gymwomen that managed to stay on the beam throughout their routines. Cantwell received a 9.05 to take first place in the event and Knapp tied for third with Cornell's Renee Hack with an 8.2 score. Cornell's Holly Gross finished second with an 8.5.

The gymwomen found the judges scoring to be low on the floor exercise. Cantwell won the top honors with an 8.6 followed by Cornell's Kathleen Cote and UMass's Hemberger with identical scores of 8.1. Jones scratched the event due to a rib injury and Colleen Thorton injured herself on her first tumbling pass and was pulled from the competition by Coach Evans.

Injuries seem to be incapacitating the gymwomen at this point in the season. In addition to Jones and Thorton, Cheryl Morrier, Diane Laurenson and Karen Clemente did not compete in yesterday's competition due to injuries.

Next action for the gymwomen comes next Saturday against Michigan State. The Spartans finished 14th at the nationals last year and Coach Evans expects the meet to be a tough one. Hopefully by then the injuries will be less of a problem as Evans expects Jones, Morrier and Thorton to be back in the line up.

UMass gymwoman Stephanie Jones, an All-American, performs on the balance beam during Sunday's home meet against Cornell which drew a large crowd to the Cage. Although Jones didn't do as well as usual on the beam, she took second in vaulting, and first on the uneven bars. UMass went on to win the meet, 134.57 - 123.95. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis) to close the gap to 2-1 at 14:21 on a power play goal.

St. Anselm's Jim Long was socked with a double minor — one for interference and one for slashing as 13:18. The Minutemen scored on the first end of the double minor, as Bob White lifted a rebound from Barry Milan over a prostrate Parisi. White's shot just snuck under the cross bar.

Just when it appeared that UMass had redeemed itself in the second period for its sluggishness in the first period, Butler scored his third goal of the game at 19:59 with Kittredge in the penalty box for tripping. Butler's linemate, Mulrey went into the left corner with only 5 seconds left in the period and fed Butler with a perfect pass that beat Riley to his glove side with only one second remaining in the period.

The first UMass goal came at 7:48 of the third period. Joey Milan led a 3 on 1 break into the Hawks' zone, but he skated in too deep on the left and had to carry the puck behind the net, where he fed Liacos in the right corner. Then Liacos fired the puck into the crease from a 90 degree angle that somehow slipped by Parisi. Liacos' goal cut the Hawks' lead to 3-2.

The second UMass goal came at 14:11 of the third period. Valicenti fired a blistering 60 foot slap shot from the right point that exploded past Parisi's right shoulder. The game was now deadlocked at 3.

Valicenti might not have had a chance to tie the score if it wasn't for UMass goalie Riley. He speared a 30 foot slap shot with his glove that was headed for the left corner at 12:25. Bill Penniman, who fired the shot, just skated to the bench in disbelief.

The overtime was continuous back and forth action, but no goals were scored, as Parisi and Riley guarded their creases magnificently. Parisi was bombarded with 43 shots in the game and Riley was shelled with 34.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31 — Born today, you have an explosive personality which you will learn to control. Until you can will your responses, or their outward manifestations, you should stay far away from volatile experiences. You are as critical of other people and their work as of yourself. You insist on a true account of labor and benefits whenever you are led to investigate progress, and you are fair-minded enough to realize that this includes extenuating circumstances which relieve one of blame.

Although you are exceptional at expressing your points of view and defending them against attack, you try to avoid argument. You like to think yourself peace-loving and willing to go out of your way to establish and maintain a smooth progression from one phase of work to another.

You have a good sense of humor and enjoy the lighter side of any situation. What you cannot enjoy are "sick" jokes, which make light of aspects of life and death which can have no funny side. You are quick to forgive when another has hurt you, even if it was intentional; however, you find it difficult to forget, though that is a trait you admire.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Compatibility with another, though he differ much from you, will save things at home.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – Unless you agree completely with another's efforts to change jobs, don't give advice.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – You should have good success today firming up relationships.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – Confidence in success is half the battle. Keep aware of opportunities for you and others.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Connect present with past to determine the pattern for success. Wisdom is necessary.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Responsibility proves too much early today. You can make up for failure at evening.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Consult a competent professional on a matter of health. Don't trust guesswork.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – Worry over trifles delays success. Big issues must be given attention.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – If you fall behind, consult an expert at once, or you will be unable to catch up.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – Restrictions frustrate ambition today. Persuade another to your way of thinking.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Dangerous moments lurk throughout the day. Be wary of taking on anything new.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Recognize the possibilities in another's failure. You may save the day for both of you.

'Short People' becomes promotional gimmick

NORWAY, Maine [UPI] — While some radio stations decided to ban Randy Newman's controversial hit song, "Short People," a Maine station found a way to deal with "some very obnoxious calls" it received.

WOXO-FM decided to take the complaints it received about the song in stride and turned the controversy into a promotional gimmick, said morning news director Kevin McCay.

Two weeks ago, the station began "my favorite short person contest" — asking listeners to send in photographs with the name, age and height of their favorite short person.

The winner will be picked at random on Ground Hog Day and given $100 worth of prizes and treated to dinner — including shrimp cocktail, short bread and strawberry shortcake, McCay said.

"My favorite short person contest" begins at WOXO.

Newman's song — a ridicule of prejudice — has disturbed a few smaller-than-average sized people who are taking personal offense at lines characterizing "short people" as having grubby little fingers and dirty little minds."

But the voices that Newman says go "peep, peep, peep" have joined together in such a howl of protest the song has been banned in Boston, New York and Pennsylvania.

WOXO started playing the song about five or six weeks ago. Shortly after that the phones started ringing.

"We got some very obnoxious calls. Some people threatened to boycott our sponsors," said night news director Steve Rogers.

Rogers, who at 5-foot-10 considers himself to be a short person, doesn't find the song objectionable. Neither apparently do other local radio personalities.

Mike Bushey, program manager at WBLM in Lewiston, said he thinks the whole controversy is "bogus, a testament to prejudice," which he said is exactly what Newman is really writing about.

WBLM got only one complaint about the song, and stations in Sanford, Rockland and Skowhegan said they have had none.

Ski teams 'dominate' at Dartmouth Skiway

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's and women's ski teams were "absolutely dominant" according to coach Bill McConnell as they each won their meets this past weekend at the Dartmouth Skiway.

The women finished first in a Women's Intercollege Ski Conference (WISC) meet against Connecticut, Smith, Boston College and Merrimac.

To demonstrate the women's dominance, McConnell said five women skiied in the competition, with the top three finishers counting in the team standings. In both Saturday's slalom and Sunday's giant slalom, the UMass women took the first three places.

In the slalom, Kathy Shinnick took first in 117.6 seconds for two runs down the quarter mile course of 50 gates. Teammates Nancy Heyden and Cathy Donovan grabbed the next two spots, with Minutewomen Connie Pratt and Valerie Hansen also finishing in the top ten.

In the next day's giant slalom, Donovan was first in 117.27 for her two runs down the half-mile, 30 gate course, just nipping Shinnick, who totaled 117.86. Rounding out the second UMass sweep of the weekend was Heyden in third with a total time of 118.88.

Once again providing depth were Pratt, Hansen and Diane Valenti, who all finished in the top ten.

The men's team skiied the same course as the women, and defeated five other schools in a New England Intercollege Ski Conference meet against BC, UConn, Northeastern, Plymouth State and Amherst.

For the men, eight skiiers compete, with the best five times counting. In the slalom, sophomore Bob Grout took second with a two run total of 102.93. Scott Prindle was sixth in 105.20, with Scott Broadhurst 10th, Chris Wakefield 13th and Ted Krobak 14th.

"Anytime you get five men in the top 15, you pretty much win automatically," said McConnell.

However, a stubborn Northeastern team was only 37 one hundreths back of UMass, as the two teams five-man totals were 544.20 for the Minutemen, to 544.57 for the Huskies.

The Minutemen were more dominant in the giant slalom, as Dale Maynard was second, Prindle was fifth, Hal Smart was sixth, Krobak was seventh and Kevin Nolan was eighth.

"Still, in all, we had a five man total of 535.25, and NU was tough again with a 537.08," said McConnell.

"We're a strong team," he said. "We've been on our skis five days a week since December 20, and the girls are out there practicing with us all day. We're very strong, but a team like Plymouth State, although it's a small college, is very close to a ski area, and I'm sure they'll be a lot stronger before the season's over."

The team will ski again at Roundtop this weekend, in Plymouth, Vermont, as hosts of the slalom and giant slalom competitions.

nationally ranked teams, Queens and Rutgers. The respective scores were 83-48 and 88-69.

"Those games give us a good idea of what we have to do to with our own program," Ozdarski said of the losses. "We learned a lot of things about the game."

Queens is undefeated and rated sixth in the nation while Rutgers is among the country's lower 20.

Most recently, the Minutewomen had an easy time with Rhode Island, winning 60-41. Peters again led everyone with 17 points, while Ready has her best showing to date with seven points and eight rebounds.

"Our biggest, toughest game was against St. John's," Ozdarski said. "It was a thrilling game.

"I really wasn't pleased with any of our games," she continued. "If we play basketball tonight though, we'll win."

By way of introduction, Springfield is a team apparently racked by dissension. Two players, Mary Regan and Cindy Lapointe, were thrown off the squad recently for disciplinary reasons. Regan was the team's leading scorer, while Lapointe was a backup center.

Revenge is primary in UMass's mind, since the Chiefs knocked off the Minutewomen in a major upset, 66-64, in the quarterfinals of last season's Easterns.

"There's no question about it, this is the game we've waited for," Ozdarski said. "The kids don't forget last year. We did it to ourselves, and now we want to prove we do have the better team."

Springfield, a struggling 3-5, counts among its chief weapons Laurie Clark, Lori Smith, and Cheryl Murtagh. In particular, Clark killed UMass in the Easterns last season with 24 points as she displayed a deadly baseline jumper.

In Pursuit of the Elusive "A"

You don't have to like—or believe in—the whole college grading system. But we don't have to tell you that you'd better get serious about grades anyhow. If you want to enter graduate or professional school, you know that a high G.P.A. is in order. And looking ahead to the tight job market that many college grads now face, it's easy enough to see that grades count there as well.

Tactics and Strategies: An Exam Planner isn't like any study guide you've ever seen. We don't pretend to offer you definitive advice on how to study or how to psyche out your professors or how to ace an exam. We've put in our years on campus, and we know better than to spout words of wisdom that you can never hope to follow—and wouldn't even if you could.

What Tactics and Strategies offers is a laid-back look at the testing scene that may help you better put together your grade game plan—or offer some helpful insights you haven't before considered—or at least give you some interesting reading for an afternoon.

The articles that follow cover everything from why study formulas don't work to a creative test-taking strategy to an unorthodox introduction to paper writing. We've thrown in a new look at an old phenomena—cramming—and a consoling view of six successes who weathered academic crises. And, given the intensity of the grade game for so many students, we give special attention to coping with text anxiety.

Insider: Ford's Continuing Series of College Newspaper Supplements is sponsored by Ford Division of Ford Motor Company and published by 13-30 Corporation (which also produces such familiar campus publications as Nutshell and The Graduate). Ford's sponsorship of this publication is an indication of their desire to provide services to college students. Thought, not memorization, is the soul of learning. Every professor says this. What teacher would claim not to be teaching students to think?

But just try and pass a test by thinking. Every student who has forgotten the year Thomas Aquinas died knows that thinking ability is not what gets tested. Memorization—dictaphone style—is the ability in question. Thinking won't derive the seven phyla or reveal the eighth wonder of the world. Only memorization counts in the crunch, and students who wish to survive had better master the skill. But how?

"Perhaps the most basic thing that can be said about human memory, after a century of research, is that unless detail is placed in a structural pattern it is rapidly forgotten," said Jerome Bruner in Process of Education in 1960. Bruner's concept, the importance of structure, lies in one form or another at the root of all how-to-study methods.

In the Beginning . . . Was SQ3R

The first and most famous of the foolproof, try-it-you-can't-fail study formulas was Frank Robinson's SQ3R method published in 1946. The acronym stands for "Survey, Question, Read, Recite, Review." The method, still taught today in a great many college how-to-study courses, works this way. First, survey the structure of the chapter, reading paragraph headings and summaries; this helps your mind get a firm grasp of the whole assignment before you read.

Next, turn those paragraph headings into questions which must be answered by the text. Then read (the first R) to find those answers. Robinson stresses that reading must be an active process; you should be searching for answers, not just passing your eyes over the type.

Every so often (every other page, in fact) you should stop, close the book and try to recite what you have just read. This is the step that is supposed to fix the information in your memory. Finally, after you have read and recited the complete assignment, take a few minutes to review what you've just learned before calling it a night.

The Confession

Robinson's sure-fire thoroughly-tested formula was preached passionately by academic counselors until the student population boom of the 1960's. That's when new how-to-study formulas began to pop into print at a rate second only to sex manuals—and volumes ahead of diet books. Most of these were variations on SQ3R.

OK4R by Walter Pauk—meaning Overview, Key ideas (find them he meant), Read, Recall, Reflect and Review—was published in 1962. Next came Space & Berg's 1966 PQRST (Preview, Question, Read, Summarize, Test), followed by OARWET in 1968 (Overview, Ask, Read, Write, Evaluate, Test). The champion entry was the 1973 PANORAMA which stands for "Purpose (think about why you are reading your text); Adaptability (adapt your reading speed to the difficulty of the material); Need to question (an obvious and painful stretch for the acronym); Overview; Read and relate (that is, relate the main ideas to personal experience); Annotate; Memorize; and (if you still care at this point) Assess."

Walter Pauk—the OK4R man—finally called for an end to this acronym olympics by daring to put into print what everybody had known all along: despite proof that these formulas work, no sane student ever bothers to use one. In an article knocking PANORAMA as silly ("you're reading your text because your professor told you to"), Pauk wrote, "There is no question about the value of converting a title into a question, but I can honestly say that I have never met a single student who has ever used the technique even though he knew about the textbook system incorporating this step."

A shocking confession from a man who has been teaching how-to-study courses most of his academic career.

Student indifference hardly stifled the acrolympics, however. REAP was published in 1976. REAP was different though. REAP looked as if it might have something to do with how people actually study.

Undaunted, Our Heroes Press On

How students actually study is something few researchers have bothered to study. How one should study, yes—advice abounds. But do study? No. In 1976 Robert Szabo published a sketchy survey (not study) of practices followed by successful students on his campus. Even that survey—incomplete as it was—showed how far from students the acrolympics have been.

For example, most of the top students preferred studying in cycles—working hard for three or four days, then goofing off entirely for the next three or four days. So much for the "study a little bit each day" platitudes vouchsafed by the formulas.

Students also preferred to work in four- and five-hour stretches, kayoing the formula emphasis on one-hour study sessions. All the formulas stress the importance of frequent rest breaks, but good students say the breaks interrupt concentration.

Like Pauk, Szabo found no student using a formula. He found this meant students rarely remembered the main ideas in a text, remembering instead trivial details and facts. Yet, noted the rueful Szabo, "They manage to obtain acceptable grades."

Did Szabo and colleagues consider this a hint that maybe they should abandon the quest for a perfect formula? Never. Szabo concluded his article with a ringing cry to press on to new acronyms. "We must find a method that reaches students where they are," he said.

R Is for Read

REAP might be the method Szabo was calling for. Published by two University of Missouri professors, it is, first, simpler than all the others. The R stands for read. That's it. No Survey, Question, Preview or Overview. Just sit down and read. That's what students do anyway, so for the first time in a generation the first step of a formula makes sense in human terms.

The next step, E—Encode, is equally simple. Using any method you want, simply close the book and try to phrase what you've read into your own words. Section by section? Chapter by chapter? Book by book? That's your choice. The only requirement of the method is that you actively rephrase the material immediately. The other two steps, Annotate and Ponder (upon which the authors elaborate at length) are just refinements of Encode: write down your encoding (for later review?) and then think (think?) about it, they say.

When one examines REAP, it's not so different from earlier formulas in that it calls for an active engagement with the material to be memorized. It is different in that it throws away the hoopla and rigid rulesiness of earlier formulas and states the meat of the matter: Successful study requires taking time to put things in your own words immediately. Repeat, immediately.

The Forgetting Curve

Why does study require an immediate Encoding (or Recalling or Reciting or Evaluation or Call It What You Will)? The answer to that is suggested in some classic early research on memorization, such as the 1913 nonsense syllables study by Ebbinghaus (ah yes, the one you had to memorize for Introductory Psych, remember?). In the Ebbinghaus study, subjects studied a list of nonsense syllables and then were tested repeatedly. After 20 minutes they had forgotten 47 percent—almost half. After a day, 62 percent were forgotten; two days, 69 percent; 31 days, 78 percent. The results were clear: the bulk of forgetting takes place within minutes after study and then tapers off.

A similar study by Spitzer in 1939 which used meaningful material came up with similar numbers—46 percent of the material was forgotten after a day; 79 percent after 14 days. Forgetting is an immediate thing. By tonight you will have forgotten almost 50 percent of this article—unless you try to encode it or put it in your own words the minute you finish.

Spitzer proved that encoding works to counter the brain's awesome and instant forgetting power. In another study he conducted, some subjects merely studied (i.e. read) materials while others recited the information in their own words immediately after reading it. Seven days afterwards, those who had recited remembered 83 percent of what they had read. The others only remembered 33 percent. This shows that encoding works, but for the why of that working you'll have to return to Bruner's concept about structural patterns. Encoding apparently makes you create memorable patterns. It works.

Note-taking, Like Love, Requires You Listen Dearly

Assigned readings are not the only material you must commit to memory. You will also be tested on lectures. Studying lecture notes is a lot like studying a text. First you read, then you encode. But before you can read or encode you must take notes, and that requires listening.

It is a subtle skill, perhaps because it's so human a skill. Professors are not textbooks; they're humans who do not organize themselves into easy-to-grasp chapters and headings and who often talk rapidly, slowly or monotonously.

But listeners are fallible, too. They listen in monotone, racing like a dictaphone to capture every word. Most students listen to a lecture as if every idea had equal weight. Not so. In an hour-long lecture, there will be at most only six or seven main points that you are expected to remember.

The rest of the information is detail, colorful anecdotes, relevant tangents or side dressings of opinion which the professor has included to clarify the main points for you. He hopes the extra information will tease you into greater awareness of those main points. He would be horrified to realize that most of his students miss those main points and remember the details instead.

You can pick out the main points by listening for cue phrases. Sometimes cues are very simple: "Our topic for today is . . ." the professor will say. But other times he will bury his cue in elaborate rhetoric, and you will have to figure out where the rhetoric ends and the main point begins: "Picture the day Lincoln arrived at Gettysburg in his dark top hat and cape, his shoulders stooped," the professor intones, and you wonder if this lecture is about Gettysburg, Civil War fashion, or curvature of the spine. Keep listening. He'll drop a cue eventually.

Cues for related subpoints can be very brief and are easily missed if you're not listening hard. Phrases like "on the other hand," "another way of looking at that," "next in importance," "turning now to," can signal a new point. Sometimes a single word—"however," "therefore," "but"—may introduce a point. You have to think as you listen, learning to differentiate the trivial from the important.

Encoding Follows Naturally

Once listening is mastered, note-taking becomes absurdly simple. All you have to do is write down the main points, adding just as much detail as you care to for your own entertainment or clarification. Studies have been made of different note-taking styles, and the studies are, frankly, inconclusive. One study comparing four note-taking styles—a formal outline method, a two-column format, the "Cornell three-column format" and "no special method"—revealed that none of the methods had any merit over the others. There were no differences in student grades attributable to note-taking methods.

But a study that compared students who did not take notes with those who did, revealed that note-takers always make better grades. It's not "how" but "whether" you take notes that counts. Why? None of the researchers ventured any answers, but it may be that note-taking is a form of encoding. Lectures make you select what's important (because you don't have time to get everything down), and they make you put the information down in your own words (because you don't have time to put it down in the professor's words). In lecture you become an encoder in spite of yourself. You're forced to do there what you should do for texts. No wonder so many students feel they learn more in lectures. A text ought to be more valuable than a lecture because it's better organized, more comprehensive and less likely to mumble. Yet a text can't force you to encode.

Ah, But What of It?

One autumn when students returned to campus, a professor named E. B. Greene gave them the same exams they had taken the spring before. Even "A" students had forgotten 50 percent of all they had successfully memorized the term before. Another professor, E. T. Layton, found that students lost two-thirds of their algebraic knowledge after a year.

What's the use? Even with the best study habits, you will eventually forget what you've learned. You will get through tests, but what of it if it's all gone by next term? Memorizing, dictaphone style, seems to all students a pointless exercise.

In a 1932 book called The Psychology of Study, Cecil Mace wrote, "If the student has any compensating merit, it lies in being something more than a mere recording machine." That something, he argued, was thinking ability. You are doomed to forget most of what you learn; the only merit in all this is that somehow because of it, or at worst in spite of it, you learn to think.

But what is thinking? The best Mace could do in 30-odd pages of essay was suggest that free association might be involved. Hundreds of other thinkers have struggled with the question, and among them the most honest might be Walter (OK4R) Pauk who has said that thinking, despite all the thinking done about it, remains largely a private matter.

So how is memorization related to this private skill? For an insight into that we can go all the way back to a letter the not-yet Saint Thomas Aquinas wrote to a Brother John: "Since you have asked me how one should set about to acquire the treasure of knowledge, this is my advice to you concerning it: namely, that you should choose to enter, not straightway into the ocean, but by way of the little streams; for difficult things ought to be reached by way of easy ones. . . . Do not heed by whom a thing is said, but rather what is said you should commit to your memory. . . ."

Victor White, commenting on this letter, has written: "Note how careful St. Thomas is. Brother John is to commit what is said to his memory; he is not straightway to commit his intellect to it. He is not at once to swallow everything that is said; let him remember it in order to test and examine it, but not at once to assent to it. Suspension of judgment is one of the first things a learner has to learn: we have to learn how to entertain ideas without promptly either affirming them or denying them. Here again it is a matter of that difficult business of restraining the mind's own native impetuosity, the natural desire of the reason to be unreasonable. We want to jump to conclusions before we have reached them; to take sides, make a stand, vehemently affirm or deny before we have considered, examined, tested, proved."

St. Thomas Died in 1274

Memorization may seem more worthwhile to you if you perceive it, like Victor White does, as a tool of dispassion. Memorization is not commitment. It's just a way to hold onto thoughts as you sift through sometimes frightening new ideas looking for the ones you will come to live by. Remember that—even if you can't remember when St. Thomas died. Meanwhile, you can be sure researchers will press on, looking for a memorizing formula you can live with. ■

Two Unlikely Learning Techniques

Teaching Others

It's true. Teachers learn more from a course than the students. If you try to teach material to someone else, you are forced to grasp it in new ways, to express it in terms the other person can understand. This helps you remember. Tests at one university had a group of students study material using the SQ3R method. Another group also used the SQ3R method but was required to teach the material to other students. The student teachers did significantly better on tests than the control group. The catch in this technique is finding a "student" who is willing to learn biology or psychology or economics from you. But if you can talk someone into being your student, you may learn more than you ever have before.

Mapping

Some people are just visually minded, so transforming a text or lecture into a picture or "map" might be the best way for these people to learn. To draw a map, put down the key idea first. This becomes the "buried treasure" on your map. Then draw in secondary or supporting ideas around the buried treasure. Lastly, draw in the critical details. Why this works is that you have to find the secondary and supporting ideas before you can draw them. In doing that you learn them. Mapping, as its author, M. Buckley Hanf, says, "is thinking." And the best way to learn maping is to do it.

To Each His Own Study Method: Four Scholars Describe Theirs

No Time for Calculation

Chemical engineering senior Devon Clausing does everything she can to save time when studying for her classes at University of Cincinnati.

The president of one engineering club and active in two others, Clausing is forced to use what little study time she has very efficiently in order to maintain her 3.7 grade average.

"My freshman year I did all my homework every night," she said. "As I got more involved in activities, I didn't have time to do all of it. That's when I started finding shortcuts."

Most of an engineer's study time is spent working problems, she said. To save time, Clausing sets up the equations to solve the problems and makes sure she understands them, but she stops short of doing the actual calculations.

For non-engineering courses, Clausing will read assigned material before a class only if she expects the teacher to call on her for an answer. Otherwise, she prefers to read the material as time permits after the professor has lectured on it.

Clausing keeps books for non-engineering classes in the bathroom "by the john," and is "able to keep up pretty well that way."

Ready, Set, Write

For most students, writing papers at the last minute is a final act of desperation. For Katherine Donnelly, University of Chicago sophomore, it's just good strategy—one that produces "A" work.

When Donnelly has a paper to write, she reads over the relevant material two or three times and thinks deeply about her topic. Then she waits.

The night before the paper is due, Donnelly arranges her notes and books on an isolated library desk and sits down to write. The words pour out quickly and steadily, racing against the clock. When the frenzy subsides, Donnelly proofreads the paper she's created and tosses it into a folder, to be turned in the next day.

The California native says the best papers she's written have been produced in a last-minute flurry of activity.

One epic effort—a comparison of the themes of freedom and authority in King Lear, Kant, Paradise Lost, The Federalist Papers and Plato—was written in a fast four hours.

The last-minute papers almost always earn "A's," says Donnelly. Papers she writes over a long time period come out sounding stilted and usually receive "B's." "When I'm under pressure to do it and I'm tired, I just say exactly what I want to say and get it over with," she says. "You don't have time to overthink."

Although her last-minute method has proven itself over and over again, Donnelly—a very conscientious student—has reservations about using it:

"I don't always trust it. Something inside me says, 'Don't leave it until the last minute.' "

Booking It

Roberta Rusch, a senior at St. John's College, won't have any tests this year, but she often spends six hours a day studying in the library—for the fun of it.

This self-motivation is typical of students at the small school in Annapolis, Maryland. The demanding St. John's curriculum emphasizes traditional liberal arts, such as grammar, logic and rhetoric. The reading list includes most of the "great books" of Western tradition.

There are no tests at St. John's, but grades based on papers, homework and class participation are recorded on each student's transcript. More important than grades, however, is the "don rag"—an annual oral evaluation of each student's progress.

Without the threat of impending exams, St. John's students must discipline themselves to study regularly, says Rusch.

"You've got to form habits. Once you're into the habit of regular study, it becomes a part of you." She adds, "I think basically people here like to study. We're interested in the books."

In the Swim

Yale University senior Dan Ortiz finds that swimming every day helps him study better.

"Keeping in shape and having that mental relaxation is good," he said. "It gives my mind an hour or so to rest.

"If I don't swim I start feeling heavy and fatigued. I begin fading out around 10 o'clock."

Ortiz, an English major whose grades earned him entry into Phi Beta Kappa honorary society, tries to break his study time into two- or three-hour blocks. He says he can't concentrate much longer than that. He also enjoys changes of scenery when he studies.

For writing, which he finds difficult, Ortiz holes up in "a rather sterile engineering library." He doesn't know many engineers, so he's not distracted by friends interrupting.

INTRODUCING EUROPE'S MOST SUCCESSFUL* NEW CAR IN HISTORY.

The new Ford Fiesta. It's outsold every new car nameplate ever introduced in Europe, based on a comparison of sales in the first six months. It's assembled by Ford in Germany, now available in America for the first time. Fiesta was engineered to give an exciting level of automotive performance. With front-wheel drive for traction. With rack and pinion steering and Michelin radials for precise control. And a 1.6 litre engine for quickness: 0-50 MPH in an average of 8.8 seconds in Ford tests (9.1 seconds for California emissions equipped models). Yet for all its performance, Fiesta was engineered to be simple and easy to service. With room and comfort for four adults. The new Fiesta is available from more than 5,000 Ford Dealers. One test drive can show you why it's Europe's most successful new car in history.

A Compendium of Study Aids & Advice

by VICKI DENNIS

Grades are not necessarily synonymous with intelligence. Often the best students are the ones who have learned the tricks of the trade. Here are six study tips that could make the difference for you.

Use the Necessary Tools

Any tradesman needs special tools, and the college student is no different. The first tool is a good dictionary, such as Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language (Cleveland: William Collins + World Publishing Company, Inc., 1977), $10.95. A thesaurus is another handy aid when the right word won't come. The standard version is The New American Roget's College Thesaurus (New York: New American Library, 1962), 95 cents. A new revised edition will be coming out in 1978. To help your writing, buy a copy of The Elements of Style by William Strunk, Jr. and E. B. White (New York: Macmillan Company, 1977), $1.65. This little book is packed with information on word usage and composition, as well as matter-of-fact tips on writing style.

Get Acquainted with the Library

Don't wait till you have a big project to learn how to use the library. For starters, find out how the card catalog works. It consists of small wooden drawers full of alphabetical listings of all the library's holdings—arranged by author, title and subject headings. In the upper left-hand corner of each card, you'll find the "call number," which tells you the location of the book in the library. You should also become familiar with the reference room where encyclopedias and other general reference materials are located, including The Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature, a multivolumed listing of magazine articles grouped by year of publication; indexes of newspaper articles; and specialized indexes on subjects such as art, education and psychology.

Budget Time Effectively

Do you always need just a little more time to study for tests? Do you find yourself pulling all-nighters to finish term papers? Your problem isn't really lack of time; it's making good use of the time you do have.

Time management experts, such as Alan Lakein, author of How To Get Control of Your Time and Your Life, maintain that the key to budgeting your time is a daily plan. Each morning list all the things you must do for that day. With nonroutine things like studying, be specific. Make notes about what you will study, such as "Chemistry, Chapter 12. Read and take notes." Schedule your time realistically. Don't set aside a block of 10 hours to study for your English test when you know that you'll never find that many hours together during your day. Instead, plan ahead: schedule two hours each day for five days to study for the test.

One caution: most experts say that people tend to spend too much time on unimportant routine tasks and never get to the important ones. To avoid this time trap, evaluate each item on your list according to its priority and constantly review those priorities during the day.

Determine Your Best Study Time

Are you a day person, ready to tackle studying as soon as you spring from bed? Or do you find the middle of the night the best time for intense learning? Keep a daily chart of your reactions to events for a week or so. Record when you wake up and how you feel (grumpy, full of pep?). During the day, write down the times when you feel tense and when you feel happy; when you are running at peak energy and when you start to slump. Soon you'll see a pattern developing. You can then plan your day around your ups and downs (known as biorhythms). For example, plan study times for when you are most alert and don't count on doing any heavy mental activity during your very low periods.

Learn from Your Midterms

If you're alert, what you learn from a midterm can help you through the rest of the term and the final. For instance, the midterm lets you know what kinds of questions—and answers—the instructor prefers. Armed with this information, you can more easily isolate what you should learn for the final. In addition, a midterm lets you double-check your own study habits and note-taking skills. If you missed important points or found your notes impossible to comprehend, you can fine-tune your study technique or note-taking for the rest of the course. Finally, the midterm can tell you a lot about your test-taking skills. Did you run out of time? Were you calm or frantic? Were you able to organize your thoughts? Analyze your strong and weak points and work to improve your test performance before the final.

How To Play the Test Game—and Win

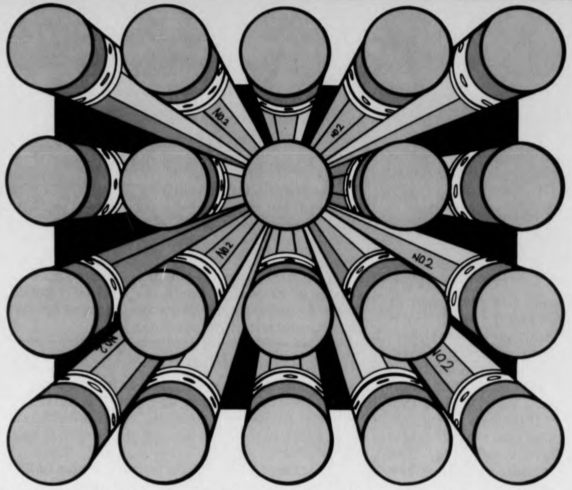
by DON EASTMAN



In his keynote address to the delegates at the annual meeting of the American Council of Education last summer, Ernest Boyer, the U.S. Commissioner of Education, related how his five-year-old son had become testwise.

The boy had been attending kindergarten less than a week when, instead of saying his nightly prayers, he launched into a recitation of the alphabet. "I realized the educational implications of this recitation," said Boyer, "and was filled with fatherly pride at my son's accomplishment."

Embarrassed by his father's praise for learning the alphabet in less than a week in kindergarten, the boy confessed, "I actually learned it on Sesame Street, but my teacher thinks she taught it to me."

"Ah, then I was doubly proud," said Boyer, "for he had not only learned the alphabet, but he had learned the system as well."

Like most educators, Boyer understands that American education consists of two distinct parts: there is learning, and there is the game of learning.

No one is quite sure whether testing and grading, which occupy a remarkable portion of time and energy in the American educational system, measure learning—or simply the ability of students to make grades and pass tests. It is clear, however, that students who know how to play the game of education—that is, who know how to take tests and make good grades—quickly achieve a favored status in our society. The testwise student knows and uses the rules of the game; whether he is actually learned or not, he is the declared winner in the educational sweepstakes.

The first matter to consider, and to come to terms with, is the quite obvious fact that formal education is not a monolithic, unified, univocal experience, but a series of courses taught by individuals. The act of taking a course is quite similar, for good historical and psychological reasons, to a brief apprenticeship. What one is asked to do in taking a course is to see the particular subject matter through the eyes of the instructor. You may have, or may develop, additional perspectives as well, but what the course is about, and what you will be graded on, is your ability to see the subject matter from the instructor's perspective.

American education consists of two distinct parts: there is learning, and there is the game of learning.

Once this notion is understood, we can forget all those silly arguments about how five different English teachers will grade the same theme in five different ways, which is supposed to be an argument against the validity of testing and grading. Of course they are all different: nobody knows what the truth is. All anyone, including English teachers (especially English teachers), has to go on is a truth, that is, a single, limited, individual version of what the truth might be. Truths, like grades and tests, are a thoroughly individual matter.

Obviously, the educational system, particularly higher education, depends upon the student having a goodly number of these brief apprenticeships. Each apprenticeship provides a different perspective—a view from a different angle. The result, if the student is lucky and reasonably industrious, is what Matthew Arnold called the ability to "see life steady, and see it whole."

The first rule of the test game, then, is: Identify the perspective of the instructor. What are the key issues and the key approaches to the subject according to Professor X? Do everything you can to discover that perspective: look up old tests at the fraternity house; consult test files in the University Center; look up students who have taken the course before and grill them for clues; ask the instructor for copies of old tests—"just for practice"; badger the instructor repeatedly to be as precise as possible about what kind of tests will be given and what issues or problems will be covered. You may even want to attend class from time to time to pick up organizational hints.

Having determined as definitively as possible the kind of test that will be given, you are ready to apply Rule Number Two: Make up all the answers in advance. When the test is to be short answer, multiple choice, fill-in-the-blanks, true-false or "machine graded," concentrate on developing thematically arranged lists of the bits and pieces of the subject on which such tests depend. If the test will consist of problem-solving questions, devise representative hypothetical problems and prepare model solutions. If the test is an essay in form, prepare sample essays on an appropriate variety of the topics to be tested and drill yourself on the important points and illustrations for each.

What you will be graded on is your ability to see the subject matter from the instructor's perspective.

The key to these exercises is practice, practice, practice. You want to take aim on a test the way the football team prepares for a game: run the plays you think will work until they become almost automatic. Then, when the time comes, use what you've practiced if at all possible. Particularly in the case of essay tests, it is frequently possible to revise or redirect the question to fit the answer you came prepared to write. If you have prepared an adequate sample of answers to a reasonable guess about what the questions will be, it is more than likely that many of those answers, with their finely tuned arguments, comparisons, illustrations, observations and conclusions, can be employed to advantage.

While you're at it, try a team approach. Though some amount of individual reading and study is unavoidable, frequently the most productive way to prepare is to form a team with one or two other students in the class. The team approach not only provides a division of labor for writing sample essays or making lists of key facts, dates or formulae, it also prevents you from becoming locked inside your own head and requires the kind of objective expression and discussion that the test will require later. Frequently, students who study alone develop a deceptive kind of inner monologue: they hear the material in their head, think they know it, but come test time they are unable to verbalize it.

The team study approach can offer a way out of the box of solipsism (particularly when employed during the entire course) and is perhaps the surest way to respond to Rule Number Three of the test game: Don't fool yourself about what you do and don't know. The opportunity to discuss and criticize the sample answers is an excellent way to assess your grasp of the subject matter.

Rule Number Four is a corollary to Number Three: Know what you can and cannot say about a subject in a given period of time. (Obviously, this rule applies primarily to essay and discussion tests.) How many paragraphs can you write in 10 minutes, 30 minutes, and 60 minutes? Essay answers consist of an opening paragraph to state the problem (as you think it ought to be stated), a concluding paragraph to display how you have dealt with the problem in a significant way, and a variable number of intermediate paragraphs depending on the time allotted and your own particular writing speed. Again, a little practice with sample essays will tell you a lot.

Once the test itself has begun, most of the rules of the test game are common sense:

Rule Five: Read the directions and test questions very carefully. Make sure you understand the kinds of answers expected, and how they will be scored. Ask the examiner for help when you do not understand the directions.

Rule Six: Budget your time. Always take a watch to the test so you can periodically check to make sure you are working rapidly enough to answer all the questions. Try to save a few minutes to review your answers at the end of the test—so you can make corrections and add details. Remember that most tests attempt to evaluate not only your knowledge of the subject matter, but also your ability to organize that knowledge quickly and efficiently.

Rule Seven: Answer the "easy" questions first. If you go through the entire test answering those questions for which you are best prepared, you may be able to budget more time for the questions which will require more reflection and labor.

Rule Eight: Answer every question. You should attempt at least a partial answer even to those questions which draw a blank (except in the case of some machine-scored tests which penalize "guesses").

Many students give up too soon on questions which do not elicit an immediate response. Reread the question with care, and wait (briefly) for something to come. Visualize the place where you studied for this test: frequently you can find a clue stuck on the wall above your desk, or recall an irrelevant image that will provoke a more useful thought or impression.

Rule Nine: There is a difference between a correct answer and a best answer. It is on this difference that many multiple choice questions depend (e.g., D. H. Lawrence was (a) a poet (b) a novelist (c) a sex fiend (d) the British author of Sons and Lovers, Women in Love and Lady Chatterley's Lover), but essay tests also exploit this distinction to discriminate between varying levels of comprehension (e.g., "What were Monet's primary contributions to Impressionism?").

Take care to select the best answer from those which are available.

Rule 10: Write legibly and clearly. There is no truth to the widespread rumor that graders give the student the benefit of the doubt on answers they cannot read. Answers should be double-spaced, with wide margins, and should employ the most concise, straightforward syntax possible.

The last two rules are less obvious than the others, but no less important:

Rule 11: The proper response to a test is not a mechanical reissuing of information, but a performance. Many students regard tests as cruel and unusual punishment to be endured as stoically and passively as possible, or as a kind of machine-like exercise in which they are required to regurgitate (the image illustrates the attitude) in a routine fashion the same material the teacher recited to them.

It is almost impossible to perform well on tests with such an attitude. A negative or, at best, neutral approach is inherently self-defeating.

The test must be viewed as a performance in which knowledge (the subject matter) is shaped according to demand (the test questions) and necessity (the time limits).

View yourself as a performer who is ready and willing to display your wares, to argue vehemently and passionately, to match wits with the test, and to take on all comers. This is essential for three reasons: it will sustain your efforts to prepare adequately; it will provide you with persistence and energy to assemble an answer to a difficult test question that you didn't anticipate; and it will kindle the alertness and determination needed to do your best.

Take a lesson from the football team: practice the plays you think will work until they become automatic.

A dramatic combination of styling and technology for 1978...and beyond.

Here is a car for the automotive future. With dynamic styling inside and out. Comfort for five passengers, yet fuel and cost efficiency for the years ahead. A car realistically priced for today. The new Futura. Before you consider any other car available today, read on...

Scheduled Maintenance
50,000 miles about $150.

A startling fact: Futura has been engineered to hold down the costs of maintenance in the years ahead. Ford estimates that with automatic transmission and standard engine, 50,000 miles of scheduled maintenance will cost only about $150. (*Based on Ford labor time standards, a $14.50/hr. labor rate and Ford's suggested parts prices in effect Aug., 1977.)

33 MPG (hwy) 23 MPG (city)

Futura's EPA mileage estimates—with 2.3 litre engine and manual 4-speed—are the highest of any car in its class. Of course, your actual mileage may vary depending on how you drive, your car's condition and optional equipment. Calif. ratings are lower. Futura is also available with 3.3 litre 6-cylinder and 5.0 litre V-8 engines.

The logic and psychology of this rule are simple: students who view tests as punishment, and those who view tests as performances, each get what they are looking for.

Rule 12 is a relatively new one: When shafted, appeal. Unfortunately, many professors are like St. Augustine, who prayed, "For so it is, O Lord my God, I measure it; but what it is I measure, I do not know." There is an extraordinary amount of inept testing: a recent book published by Change magazine entitled The Teaching and Grading of Students delivers a wholesale indictment of testing practices in higher education.

The bad news is that most professors are enormously unsophisticated about constructing tests; the good news is that many of them admit this openly. When presented with a convincing argument that a particular test question is ambiguous, misleading, inaccurately worded or simply unfair, many professors will attempt to make some kind of adjustment. Most professors do not consider themselves experts in testing and cognitive measurement. Professors are (or consider themselves to be) primarily experts in a particular academic discipline—physics, or history, or accounting, or whatever—and are only secondarily (and for many, begrudgingly) responsible for measuring student performance. If you believe you have been tested or graded unfairly, you should not hesitate to discuss the complaint with the course instructor. Frequently, such conversations will be productive: the instructor will alter the grade or discount the question, or you will learn your error.

For students who remain unsatisfied following their initial conversation, many institutions have developed in recent years a grievance procedure for handling formal grade appeals. These appeal routes are usually available to any student who lodges a charge of unfair, arbitrary, capricious or discriminatory treatment. Many institutions also employ an "ombudsman" to help students resolve both personal and academic problems and complaints.

College students have traditionally retained a healthy skepticism about the ultimate value of testing and grading. Like most educators, they realize (perhaps unconsciously) that no one really knows what the exact relationship between tests, measurement and learning is or ought to be. Observing the 12 rules of test-taking described above will not make the poor student a superior one. They are, however, a set of practical guidelines which will assist most students in performing on tests according to their true abilities.

Finally, while testing is indisputably a game, don't discount the fact that it is a challenging and endlessly fascinating game played for reasonably high stakes, and quite capable of teaching you at least as much about solving life's problems as the most rigorous course in Transactional Analysis or Sino-Soviet Relations. The kind of thinking required for rapid organization and performing well under stress may, in the long run, be of greater importance than the particular details of any course of study. Such thinking may be, in fact, what a college education is all about.

Don Eastman, an experienced test-taker, claims he enthusiastically applied every rule in this article with much success.

A Concise Guide to 12 Kinds of Tests

Demonstration. In lab courses, you may be expected to show the instructor that you can perform certain basic operations, such as preparing a microscope slide. The only way to study for this is to practice the operation regularly in class until you're certain you are doing it correctly.

Essay. The first thing to do on an essay exam is to read each question carefully—watching for words like explain, compare, describe, analyze, contrast—and be sure you understand what you're being asked to do. If the question says to compare two items, it won't do to simply describe them. Then work your way from the easiest questions to the hardest questions, being careful to think through each answer before you write it. An effective technique is to use as many specific names and references as you can. If the professor gives your answer only a surface reading, these buzz words may make your answers seem that much more credible. If you run out of time, write outline answers.

Fill-in-the-Blank. Sometimes called "completion" exams, such tests require you to provide the correct word or phrase that completes the statement. One way to study for this type of test is to organize the material into definitive statements as you go.

Identification. You usually find such tests in the lab sections of science courses. You're shown a collection of specimens which you have to identify and provide information about. The way to prepare is to memorize several distinguishing characteristics for each item. Another type of identification test provides the name of a person or place and asks you to supply as many facts about that person or place as you can.

Matching. The task here is to associate an item on one list with its complement on another list—for instance, matching people's names with their accomplishments, words with definitions and the like. Obviously, you should first match the items you are most sure of and then, unless there's a penalty for guessing, match the remaining items through the process of elimination. Check the instructions before you start: can any of the "answers" be used more than once?

Multiple Choice. Theoretically such tests should be easy because the answer is one of the alternatives and through elimination you should be able to figure out which one. A common mistake people make is to choose the first statement that seems right without reading the rest—the object of many such tests is to choose the best answer from more than one correct statement.

Open Book. Most open book exams are constructed in such a way that you cannot readily find the answer in the textbook. For example, you may be told to analyze the facts or interpret them in some way. Nonetheless, the book can help you recall buzz words and phrases.

Oral Exams. These are probably the hardest of all exams because most people are better at padding their writing than their speech. Do not attempt to bluff your way through a question you're not prepared to answer. Instead, when a question is asked, consider for a moment what you can talk about with some assurance and then proceed with such enthusiasm that the professor is reluctant to redirect you.

Problem Solving. The best way to study for such exams is to work practice problems until you are confident that you understand how to work the formula in all cases. When you finish each problem on the test, recheck each step of the answer to be sure you haven't made a mistake. Then label your answer to help the grader find it.

Short Answer. This kind of test requires you to answer each question in several sentences rather than the longer answer required on an essay exam. You study for it much as you do for an essay exam.

Take Home. This type of exam is really a series of short themes which you prepare outside of class, using whatever resources you want. Profs usually set a limit on the amount of time you are to spend writing the exam, but students who score high often exceed this time limit considerably. The professor expects you to produce well-crafted answers when you're working with both books and time in the quiet of your own room.

True-False. You read a statement and pronounce it true or false. It's as simple as that. Don't try to interpret a statement too closely—most true-false questions are clearly stated—but do look out for words like always, never or only which usually indicate that the statement is false.

Ins and Outs of Cramming

The more you learn, the more you forget.

The more you forget, the less you know.

So why study?

by DON AKCHIN

Europe's first universities appeared in the 12th century. The final examination originated at about the same time, and no doubt, the first students to take finals were also the first students to cram for them.

Both the final exam and cramming retain some of the flavor of their medieval origins: the final bears obvious resemblances to the Inquisition and the torture rack; the all-night vigil evokes images of burning the midnight oil, and candles at both ends.

Though the preponderance of professorial opinion and scientific study through the centuries has been anti-cramming—and occasionally scholars express wonder at the persistence of the custom—the purpose of cramming is quite obvious. Without it, student life as we know it today could not exist. Cramming separates the diligent from the casual student and enables the latter to have fulfilling and amusing college careers, while the studious consistently make the grades.

Even conscientious scholars cram occasionally—or at least, they claim to be cramming, even though everyone knows they have been reading two chapters a night since the first day of class and typing their lecture notes onto 3 x 5 cards. "Cramming" means different things to different folks.

Let's define the terms. Cramming refers to any last-minute, last-ditch effort to master an abundance of new material. The word "new" is key. For the purpose of this treatise, cramming is different from final reviewing, any last-minute, last-ditch effort to organize and brush up on previously learned material. An all-nighter is any last-minute, last-ditch effort of studying or term-paper writing, as a result of which the effortee sleeps less than four hours. (For our purposes, you need not actually see the rosy-fingered dawn to qualify; it's the thought, or lack of it, that counts.)

Now with a firm grasp on the definitions, let us state unequivocally the facts of the matter:

1. Cramming, despite its usefulness as a social institution, is useless as a means of passing final exams.

2. Final reviewing, on the other hand, is an extremely useful study tool that works with moderate to high success.

3. All-nighters are a common and harmless tool for writing term papers, but all-nighters and exams go together like oil and water.

If you insist upon cramming, as defined, we offer you no encouragement, only a sincere "good luck" and a prayer that your departure from the university will be as painless and trauma-free as possible, under the circumstances. Sorry, kid, it just doesn't cut the mustard. Here's why.

The Mechanics of Memory

The brain seems to have two memory systems, short-term memory and long-term memory. Information in short-term memory has this nasty habit of dissolving into nothingness in 24 hours or less. Also, short-term memory has a space shortage. When some new information comes in and there's no room, some of the old information gets bumped out, never to be seen or heard from again.

Cramming information into short-term memory obviously won't do. The more you learn, the more you forget. The more you forget, the less you know. So why study?

Your only hope is to arrange a fast transfer from short-term memory to long-term memory, a permanent storage vault with unlimited space capacity. The way to do that, apparently, is to rehearse the information several times. This labels it as something you intend to keep. But if you're pushed for time, the transfer may not reach long-term memory in time. The scientific evidence indicates it takes awhile for long-term memory to consolidate new input. Some of the evidence suggests that sleep helps the consolidation (a point which has a bearing on the wisdom of all-nighters). Some scientists theorize that dreams are the transfer itself—instant replays of the day's short-term memory holdings, broken down in smaller bits and on their way to cold storage in long-term memory.

Most crammers never get the material past short-term memory; it may or may not hang around there long enough to do any good on the test.

Several other facts about learning work against cramming. One is the problem of interference—when you learn something new, it may cause you to forget something old. If you study all night and then stop to talk to a friend on your way to class, the conversation is new input that may interfere with what you just memorized—expecially if it's still bouncing precariously in short-term memory. Another fact is that it's far easier to relearn something you already knew once than to start from the beginning.

For many students the difference between a cram and a review is a good set of lecture notes. Even if you don't look at your notes until just before tests, the concentration and effort you exerted to listen and then write down what you heard—in your own words—means you learned it. Every word may not be in long-term memory, but a large chunk of it probably is, just waiting for you to pluck it out.

The most "scientific" way to study, then, would be to review your notes and books the very last thing at night. Then go directly to bed (no interference) and "sleep on it." That should consolidate the new information into long-term memory. In the morning recite once or twice to be sure it's all there.

The professorial wisdom on cramming is summed up by this advice from a campus psychologist: "I'm for cramming at the beginning. If you really want to learn well, read the material three or four times at the start of the quarter. If you learn it well then, you'll only have to review it."

In the best of all possible worlds, every student would follow this sage advice. But then, in the best of all possible worlds, every college student would study for the pure joy of seeking knowledge and final exams would be unnecessary. ■

Fear and Trembling at Exam Time

Do you worry about exams weeks in advance? Have trouble concentrating when you study? Before, during and after exam week, do you show such signs of stress as rapid heartbeat, nausea or dizziness? If so, you just might have a condition known as "test anxiety."

College psychologists studying this phenomenon over the past few years estimate that 20 percent of all college students have moderate cases of test anxiety--enough to lower their grade point averages by one full point. As many as half of these students may have anxiety serious enough to require treatment in the form of behavior modification.

One psychologist who pioneered in the diagnosis and treatment of test anxiety is Dr. Richard M. Suinn, head of the Department of Psychology at Colorado State University in Fort Collins and psychologist for the U.S. Olympic Ski Team.

Suinn is quick to emphasize that some degree of anxiety is good. "Moderate anxiety can facilitate maximum performance by leading to increased motivation, heightened alertness and greater concentration," he says.

Dr. Carol Schneider of Colorado University's Student Health Center puts it this way, "If you don't have enough anxiety, you don't study. If too much, you perform badly despite good preparation."

What causes test anxiety? As with many stress-related conditions, the causes are varied: your teachers and parents may expect too much, you may be an over-achiever, you may have an excessive need to please people or too much fear of failure.

Lower-than-expected grades and occasional panic are not necessarily indicators of test anxiety. For example, suppose you came from a small high school where the academic demands were relaxed, where you were number one without having to try very hard. Suddenly, you find yourself in a college environment where your classmates are the pick of big-city high schools, where the courses are tough and faculty demands high, where competition is great and grading is hard. You find yourself struggling to get "C's" instead of the "A's" you were used to. Your lower grades may or may not be attributable to test anxiety.

However, you might be among the test-anxious if you display some of the following symptoms:

- Midway through a test, you find yourself looking around, wondering how other people are doing, worrying about failing the test and wondering what will happen if you do.
- When you read test questions, the words are meaningless. You have to re-read the questions two and three times to comprehend them.
- During tests you are plotting ways to escape—sneaking out, turning in a blank test, fainting.
- You often wish you were out of school and working—especially just before tests.
- You panic as time runs out during a test.
- You postpone studying for exams until the last possible moment, because studying only reminds you how much you have yet to learn.

If you are having problems studying or taking tests, you should seek help from your campus counseling center. Don't waste valuable time trying to study harder; if test anxiety is your problem, more studying won't help.

Putting Your Anxiety To Rest

The most popular technique for easing test anxiety is called "systematic desensitization." This is a form of behavior modification originally developed by Dr. Joseph Wolpe, a psychiatrist at Temple University, to treat phobias.

Desensitization helps students unlearn a destructive behavior pattern and replace it with a constructive and beneficial one—or in this case to replace their anxiety reactions with relaxation and calm.

The program consists of three steps: the first step is learning to relax deeply and completely; next, through "hierarchy construction" and desensitization itself, students are taught to reproduce deep relaxation in situations that normally arouse anxiety.

The first step, muscle relaxation, is effective for the simple reason that a person cannot have incompatible responses occurring simultaneously. You cannot be tense and relaxed at the same time.

This step involves isometric-like tensing of muscle groups (biceps, shoulders, chest) followed by relaxation of these same groups. Another part of the relaxation training is rhythmic breathing; taking slow, deep breaths helps replace tension with feelings of calm and control. All of these exercises demonstrate the contrast between tension and relaxation, making students more aware of physical tensions and better able to defuse tension before it builds up.

Once the student can successfully relax his muscles at will, he is ready for the next step: learning to deal with conditions which trigger feelings of anxiety.

The student is instructed to use his relaxation skills while a threatening image or cue is presented, such as: "You're taking your exam. As you're looking over the questions, you can feel the tension in the pit of your stomach. Your eyes are wandering around the room and your thoughts are jumping from place to place."

The group leader presents from 12 to 20 of these scenes, arranged in order from least tension-provoking to most tension-provoking. The first scene may be hearing about someone else who must take a test. The scenes progress to announcement of a test in your class in two weeks, studying for it, walking to the test site, seeing a question you don't know how to answer, seeing other people finish while you are still working, and finally talking it over with classmates afterwards.

In the final step of the program, students are exposed to the entire range of images, all the time exercising new-found powers of relaxation.

Those Nagging Doubts

Desensitization basically works by controlling the physical response to anxiety—muscle tension. Anxiety has mental and emotional responses as well, and some new treatment programs are appearing on college campuses which focus on the "worry" component of anxiety. (Most of these programs incorporate desensitization into their sessions, too.)

One example is a "cognitive modification" program developed by Dr. Michael Weissberg, director of the counseling center at Grand Valley State College in Allendale, Michigan. Weissberg combines desensitization with "cognitive restructuring," a therapy which confronts and disarms irrational thoughts that feed anxiety.

Weissberg's program makes students aware of the thoughts and worries they are experiencing while taking tests and studying for them. Anxious students tend to worry about everything. They are quick to blame themselves when things go wrong. They often feel a strong need for others' approval, and link their performance with winning or losing that approval. They also tend to see grades and test scores as measures of their personal worth; doing badly means to them that they are worthless as persons. They fear that failure will bring dire consequences.

In Weissberg's program, students focus on their thoughts. The truth is separated from gross exaggeration, the rational from the irrational, the useful from the self-defeating. Then students are given "coping thoughts" they can use to counter irrational thoughts when they reappear.

"I think everybody has these kinds of irrational thoughts," says Weissberg, "but a majority of people are able to cope with them. People without coping thoughts—thoughts that build up their self-esteem—continue to be anxious and get more upset and more down on themselves."

Both desensitization and cognitive restructuring have proved very effective in reducing anxiety. Interestingly, though, such programs by themselves do not improve the grades and test scores of students who complete test-anxiety sessions. For unknown reasons, most test-anxious students also have poor study habits. A test-anxiety program combined with counseling to improve study habits, however, has consistently improved student grades.

For everyone facing exam week, and especially for those with a bit of test anxiety, Dr. Suinn has some suggestions on how you can help yourself to do better:

1. Learn to be comfortable with your reasonable anxiety. If you have a fearful attitude, you can precipitate harmful anxiety in yourself.
2. Do not schedule stressful situations just before exams. Stay away from people who irritate you.
3. Get to the examination place a few minutes early: relax, clear your head and think calm, relaxing thoughts.
4. Talk to someone who settles you down, makes you feel good about yourself. ■

The Power of Positive Dreaming

Just when everything is going well, you have that dream again. The one where someone hands you a test paper. Biology 202 Final Exam. Biology 202? You've never been to that class before!

You pull out your dog-eared class schedule and there it is—Biology 202, 12 p.m. to 1 p.m., Monday through Friday. How could you have forgotten to go to the class for a whole term?

But you have, and now you're staring at 50 true-false questions. The people around you are hunched over their papers, furiously scratching out answers. They've finished the first page already.

The questions swim in front of you. You check your brain's file folder on biology. It's empty. Boy, this is going to look great on your grade report—two "A's," three "B's" and an "F." Your eyes dart about, frantically searching for the nearest exit. You've got to get out of this nightmare!

"Don't leave!" says psychologist and dream expert Patricia Garfield. Stay in that dream classroom and cope with the test. If you run away; the nightmare will only sneak back to haunt you again.

According to Garfield, test-related nightmares strike many people—nonstudents as well as students. Even Freud relived biology and chemistry finals in his sleep.

These nightmares can leave you aching and anxious the next morning, she says. But with a little bit of effort, you can create a positive ending for the nightmare that will make you more confident and capable in waking life.

Garfield, author of the book Creative Dreaming, says the most important element in controlling bad dreams is to "confront and conquer" the frightening situation presented in the dream.

"Before you go to sleep," she advises, "repeat to yourself, 'I will not wake up or try to get out of my bad dream. I will stay there and face it.' "

Successful behavior in a dream carries over to waking life, Garfield claims. If you cope with a tough exam in your sleep, you will wake up sure you can do it with both eyes open.

"Our dreams are behavior practice," according to Garfield. "And when we are practicing behavior of 'confront and conquer,' we are practicing coping with a real-life situation."

If, in your dream, you feel guilty about skipping Biology 202, perhaps you're neglecting something equally important in waking life. If getting an "F" in a dream bothers you, ask yourself what you're worried about failing in real life.

The next time you have an exam nightmare, don't panic and run for the nearest exit. Face the test. Cope with it. Perhaps in your dream you can arrange with the teacher to take the test later. Or have someone breeze through the door to tell you it was all a terrible mistake, and you don't have to take the test after all. If you put your mind to it, your dream can have a happy ending.

And when you wake up, think about what the dream was trying to tell you. The late, late show in your mind may give you an interesting perspective on your daily life. ■

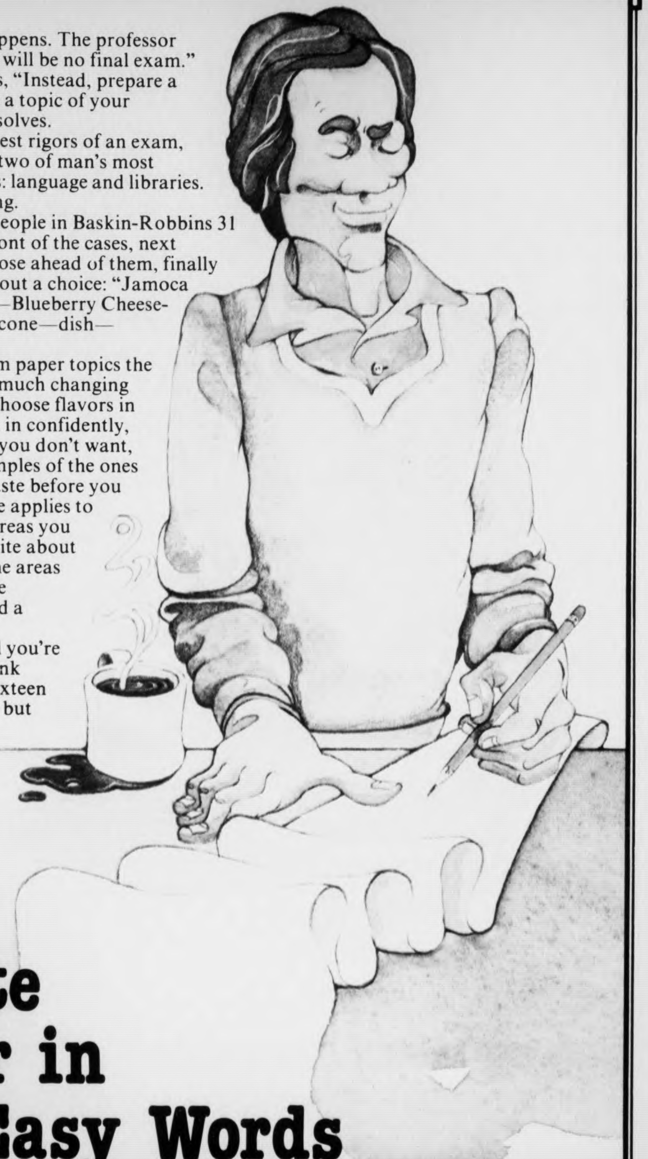
How To Write a Paper in 1,000 Easy Words



Sooner or later it happens. The professor announces, "There will be no final exam." You smile. He adds, "Instead, prepare a 16-page paper—on a topic of your choosing." Your smile dissolves.

You sit, denied the modest rigors of an exam, asked instead to confront two of man's most intimidating achievements: language and libraries. On a topic of your choosing.

Choosing. Ever watch people in Baskin-Robbins 31 Flavors? First pacing in front of the cases, next urging their friends to choose ahead of them, finally in almost a panic blurting out a choice: "Jamoca Almond Fudge with—uh—Blueberry Cheesecake—no—Pistachio in a cone—dish—cone."

Most people choose term paper topics the same way, in a panic with much changing of mind. The best way to choose flavors in Baskin-Robbins is to walk in confidently, rule out firmly the flavors you don't want, and then demand taste samples of the ones you think you do want. Taste before you choose. The same principle applies to term papers: rule out the areas you definitely don't want to write about and then read around in the areas you are interested in before choosing. Take time to find a topic you will like.

Limiting. When you feel you're getting close to a topic, think narrow—really narrow. Sixteen pages may sound like a lot but it's less than most Sports

Illustrated articles. Last summer the article "Make Way for the Sultan of Swipes" (August 22, pp. 24-30) had about 3,900 words in it. This is nearly as long as your 16-page paper, yet the topic of the Sports Illustrated article was very narrow: one man, Lou Brock; one achievement, base-stealing.

Most students tend to write on topics too broad for the length assigned. Writing your paper will be easier if, before you begin, you zero in on one tiny aspect of a subject and stick to exploring that. Write about the history of one slang expression, not the history of slang. Explore the development of one rock musician, not the evolution of rock. Consider the consequences of one biology experiment, not the whole DNA issue. Then ask yourself if you've limited the topic enough.

Limiting is probably the most important thinking task facing you. Writers can never say all there is to say about a topic and must force themselves to leave out some good material. Take this topic. There's no room for the story about the legendary dangling modifier or for a discussion of stylistic devices. In fact, there's not even room for the topic. Although the assigned topic was "how to write a paper," the assigned length was only 1,000 words. The library had 13 shelves of books on writing. The six books selected as sources for the article had 2,192 pages total—not counting indexes. The word "limiting" hardly describes what was done to squeeze 2,192 pages into 1,000 words.

Research. At this point in how-to-write-a-paper articles, it is customary to advise students to approach reference librarians and ask for their willing help. It's time someone warned you about the ego-thrashing you can get from otherwise well-meaning reference librarians whose every gesture, every smile seems to be saying, "You dummy, you mean you don't know about Bacon's Publicity Checker, the ERIC Clearinghouse, the Miscellany of Popular Antiquities, Topicator or the National Union Catalog?"

Your Term Paper Mission

Term papers are written for an audience of one—the professor. As you sit down to write, think of your audience and take pity. Your teacher would probably rather spend his nights doing something more creative. Instead, this sentinel of academe must sift through reams of white bond paper, hundreds of thousands of black typewritten characters in double-spaced lines blurring together. Your assignment: to write a paper that stands out from the rest and says, "The rest may be incoherent drivel, but I'm different. I'm going to at least make your evening bearable."

Reference librarians don't mean to make you feel stupid, but they can. So swallow your ego and throw yourself at their mercy. Or look it up yourself: basic books like Shore's Basic Reference Sources; Bates' Guide to Use of Books and Libraries; Murphy's How and Where to Look It Up; and Winchell's Guide to Reference Books are all helpful reference book references.

Organizing. Another custom of how-to-write-papers articles is to stress the importance of the outline in preparing a paper. This is true. Outlines are important, but they're useless unless you understand why you're doing one. The why of outlines has to do with William Randolph Hearst's formula for writing.

His formula (roughly) was as follows: "First you tells folks what you're gonna tell 'em; then you tells 'em; then you tells 'em what you told 'em." In writing, the easiest approach is to announce your topic, present details which flesh out your point of view (or thesis), then wrap it all up by reminding people what the topic has been. An outline helps you remember to do this. A paper must have a beginning, middle and end to be understood by readers.

A short paper—say 1,000 to 2,000 words—may not need an ending as much as a longer one simply because there's less time for a reader to get confused. But with a longer paper, a reader needs help from the writer to get through. A beginning where you tells folks, a middle where you tells 'em again, and an ending where you tells 'em yet again, is only fair.

Language. The trouble with following the Hearst formula too literally is that the paper will begin with the phrase "This paper is about," and end with an identical sentence, tenses amended. This is dull. And this is why writing is scary. Approaching a library and choosing a topic are fearsome enough. But wrestling with language often squashes any zest people might bring to writing. Anybody can jabber happily on a phone for an hour (speaking maybe 3,000 words in the process). But when asked to write the same number of words, the witty, jaunty telephonist becomes the perpetrator of "This paper is about" sentences—in a word, dull. Why? Because written language means Rules and Rules kill all the fun. Rules make you Self-Conscious.

Try not to be hamstrung by Rules. Your ear knows more than you think. Remember the old high school bugaboo about sentence fragments? Look again at the third paragraph of this article. Every sentence in it is a fragment, but your ear probably accepted that. Fragments are not an ironclad taboo, and any good grammar book will say so (in small print). Fragments that offend the ear are wrong, but musical fragments for stress or color are acceptable even in formal writing.

Let your ear do the writing and fragments, dangling clauses, tenses, most of your rhetorical pitfalls will probably cure themselves. Read your paper aloud, listen to yourself as you write. Thinking of language as sound will not only improve your grammar, but also make your writing less dull. If you feel you need a greater understanding of language, read a grammar text sometime leisurely when you are not writing a paper. But when you are writing, set aside self-consciousness and simply tell people what you have to say. On a topic of your choosing, of course. ■

Six Convincing Examples That Grades Aren't Everything

by LISA GREENBERG

Education is replete with examples of people who failed academically in one way or another but who achieved excellence and recognition nonetheless. So when your next paper is returned pulsating with four different colors of ink and you fail miserably on a midterm, console yourself with these anecdotes.

Comic Relief

Woody Allen claims he never did a lick of homework. He spent all his spare time writing jokes. This artistic dedication went unappreciated by his teachers, who called his parents to school so often his former classmates still recognize them on the street.

The homely comic attended both New York University and City College of New York, but was quickly kicked out of both schools.

"I never actually failed a college course," Allen has said. "It was always a very indefinite 'D.' "

Thrown Out With Style

Buckminster Fuller would have been a fifth-generation Harvard man had he graduated. But he soon grew to loathe the closed social systems of the ivy-covered institution.

Fuller wanted to leave the university, but with style. Merely flunking out or withdrawing would have been too mundane.

While his classmates sweated over midyear exams, Fuller left for New York with his tuition money. He attracted the attention of several Ziegfeld showgirls by sending champagne and flowers to their dressing room, and treated the ladies to a lavish dinner that far exceeded the price of tuition. When word of his exploits and unpaid bills reached Harvard, Fuller was promptly expelled for "irresponsible conduct."

Easy Essays

Essay exams may have gotten Washington Post reporter Carl Bernstein through high school. He was a terrible student in everything but English.

"The only thing I could do was write," he once said. "I'd pass the essay exams and flunk the true-false."

Bernstein, who broke the Watergate story along with Post reporter Bob Woodward, rated homework low in priority. At 16 he spent all his free time working as a copyboy in the Washington Star newsroom, waiting eagerly for even the smallest writing assignment to come his way.

Remedial English

Sir Winston Churchill, famous for his eloquent oratory, did not always have an impressive command of the English language. The late British prime minister flunked grammar in primary school. He credited his later mastery of the tongue to the help of an excellent remedial English teacher.

Churchill also had trouble passing his army entrance exam. Aided by a mathematics "crammer" (tutor), the late statesman passed the test on his third try.

Rebellious Attitude

Albert Einstein hated high school and was asked to leave because his "rebellious attitude" had a negative effect on other students.

The independent thinker found it meaningless to memorize facts and grammar rules, so he lagged behind his classmates in most subjects. But he was light-years ahead of them in math.

After dropping out of high school, Einstein applied to a technical university. But he flunked the entrance exam, doing badly in everything but math. University officials suggested he attend a less confining high school where he could brush up on other subjects. Upon graduation from this school, Einstein was automatically admitted to the university.

A Late Bloomer

Some great thinkers get off to an early start. Others, such as business philosopher Peter Drucker, are more subtle about revealing their mental talents.

Drucker was a painfully slow learner in primary school. His third grade teacher found him especially frustrating and announced to the class one day: "Peter Drucker is both stupid and lazy."

Today, Drucker is a popular lecturer and consultant, as well as the author of 10 highly respected books on business, management and economics.

He once said he is glad his frustrated third grade teacher had to keep him in class. "Today the same teacher could move the child to a slow track," he said. "Once you are in that slow track you don't get out."

Talks breaking down; faculty pickets today

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A spokesperson for the faculty union yesterday said collective bargaining negotiations with the administration are not progressing well.

Faculty members and University librarians are expected to demonstrate today outside the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall about their not receiving salary increases which they say were approved by the state legislature but have not been granted by the trustees.

The Collegian yesterday obtained details of the administration's initial contract proposal. The faculty union's initial proposal was leaked to the press late last year.

Faculty union treasurer and spokesperson Herman Stelzner said the faculty union doesn't "sense any serious effort" on the part of the administration to negotiate a contract.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is also UMass vice president in charge of facutly union-administration relations, said the administration is "very serious" about negotiating a contract.

"We have a great responsibility," he said. "Seriousness has to come on both sides of the table."

Stelzner said that since contract negotiations began last July, "very little has been accomplished."

"The expecation is," he said, "that we'd be a little further along by now."

Bromery said since the present negotiations are the first ever, great care must be taken. He said time is important as is proceeding carefully.

"If you look at other institutions where contracts have been negotiated for the first time, you'll find the typical time to negotiate a contract has been from 18 months to three years."

Bromery said trying to negotiate a contract to cover the "complexities of two fairly different campuses" makes for longer negotiations. The contract will cover faculty at both the Amherst and Boston campuses.

Stelzner said some 200-300 people may attend today's demonstration, with perhaps some faculty and librarians from the UMass-Boston campus participating.

Faculty plan to picket outside Memorial Hall from 12:30-2:00 p.m. to express "widespread dissatisfaction" over not receiving the salary increases.

Meanwhile, the Collegian yesterday obtained what one source called key parts of the administrations initial contract proposal.

Tenure would be eliminated and replaced with a "rolling appointments" plan, and faculty personnel committees would also be eliminated under the terms of the administration's contract proposal. Faculty personnel committees review faculty members for appointments and other purposes.

The rolling appointments plan would call for faculty members to work for five years, then be subject to reappoint every three years. Tenure as it now exists would be eliminated.

Sources told the Collegian elimination of the faculty personnel committees could mean the faculty members would not be able to evaluate themselves. According to sources, the faculty review is also subject to the chairpeople of the departments and deans, but whether those positions are included in the union or come under management is presently pending with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Committee in Boston.

"If that position (the administration's contract position) were to become operational, things would be set backward," Stelzner said. "As we look at it, we don't think signs are good for the University and the students of the University.

Bromery declined to comment on the administration's proposals. He said the faculty union must have broken the "housekeeping agreement" it made with the administration in light of the fact the Collegian obtained details of the administration's proposal.

Under the terms of the "housekeeping agreement" made last year, both sides agreed not to make media releases without mutual agreement.

"We're going to live up to our part of the agreement," Bromery said.

Bromery said it would be "interesting" to see what happens now that the union has broken the agreement. However, when the union proposal was leaked last year, union personnel claimed the administration broke the agreement by releasing the faculty proposal.

Allen chooses Noland for acting humanities dean

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen yesterday named Richard W. Noland to the position of acting dean of the faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts.

Allen appointed Noland to the position Allen himself vacated after serving as both dean and acting provost since Paul L. Puryear was fired as provost by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery early last month.

Allen will recommend to Bromery that Noland be considered for the deanship. However, Allen said he has already discussed Noland's appointment with the chancellor and foresees no problems.

Noland last night said he was surprised. "I was aware my name was being considered," he said, "but I never expected anything like this."

Allen said he was looking for someone proven as an administrator, with the support of the faculty; someone he felt could do the job.

"He (Noland) is a very able person," Allen said. "I think he has all the qualifications.

Noland said he will "largely be carrying on the policies of the regular dean," and learning what the job involves for the present. He also said there will soon be an English department meeting to consider a new chairperson for the department. Noland was chairperson of the English department before being named acting dean.

Noland also has a medical degree and is a certified psychiatrist.

"I suspect the skills of a psychiatrist may be useful as a dean," Allen said.

Legislative hearing set for UMass-Boston scandal

BOSTON [UPI] — A Feb. 7 hearing has been scheduled by the legislative subcommittee investigating the state Bureau of Building Construction's role in paying contractors for construction work done at the UMass-Boston campus on Columbia Point.

Rep. Gerald M. Cohen, D-Andover, who heads the special subcommittee of the Legislature's Committee on Post Audit and Oversight, yesterday said members of the panel will question representatives of the state auditor's office and the attorney general's office.

Both offices are conducting probes of alleged overpayments of several million dollars to McKee-Berger-Mansueto Inc., which did construction management consulting work for the UMass-Boston project.

The Post Audit and Oversight Committee held a meeting yesterday which focused on a review of the progress of its probe of the payment approval process in the BBC. Cohen said plans for a staff audit of the process were also made at the meeting.

Puryear questions Bromery's action

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Former Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Paul L. Puryear, fired earlier this month by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery during a dispute between Puryear and nine academic deans said he believes Bromery's action was politically motivated because the chancellor is seeking the UMass presidency.

Bromery has declined to comment on Puryear's charge, saying his hopes for a higher position in the University have no effect on his actions as a chancellor.

Puryear refused to resign as requested by the nine deans and later Bromery and was instead fired following a deterioration in relations between himself, the deans and Bromery. The breakdown became public in the fall when Puryear did not receive total support from Bromery or the deans on a proposal to make the dean of the graduate school an associate provost.

Puryear wrote a letter to the UMass Board of Trustees requesting a meeting with its members to discuss Bromery's decision. The letter did not receive a reply, according to trustee chairman Joseph P. Healey, because the letter was written on the assumption that the trustees were involved in the decision to fire Puryear, but Healey said they were not.

The decision, Healey said recently, was a campus matter requiring action by the chancellor. Healey said if Puryear believes he was "improperly treated", he could request the trustees to review the decision. Healey said he has not received such a request from Puryear.

Puryear said he plans to teach some courses in the W.E.B. Dubois Afro-American department this semester while he considers other job options he said are available to him. The Afro-American faculty offered Puryear the chairmanship of the department after Puryear was fired.

When Bromery went on a vacation leaving Puryear in charge of the campus in late December, nine deans requested in writing that Puryear resign because of a breakdown in "mutual trust" and communication between Puryear and them.

Puryear then requested six of the nine deans to resign because he said they did not share a kind of "cohesiveness" essential for an "effective academic organization".

Bromery returned to campus during a trustee meeting and announced tha Puryear had been fired. Bromery had met separately with the deans and Puryear before first requesting Puryear's resignation and then firing him.

Associate Provost and Dean of the School of Physical Education David C. Bischoff said he did not participate in the dispute between the other deans and Puryear because of his two jobs. He said he thought it best to remain neutral.

Puryear in a Collegian interview last week said he was ready to submit his resignation to Bromery until he heard that a newspaper story quoted Bromery saying Puryear did not have the authority to request the deans to resign.

According to Puryear, Bromery told him during their conversation the night before that news story was printed that as acting chancellor Puryear did have the authority.

The deans Puryear requested to resign were William Darity of health sciences, Mario Fantini of education, Russel C. Jones of engineering, Eugene Piedmont of the graduate school, Seymour Shapiro of mathematics and natural science and T.O. Wilkinson of social sciences.

The deans not requested to resign but sought Puryear's resignation were Jeremiah M. Allen of the humanities and fine arts, Ross Whaley of food and natural resources and Jack Wolf of business administration.

Allen also wrote Puryear a memo saying he would join the other six deans if they were forced to resign.

Puryear said in the interview that the road to his dismissal by Bromery began when Bromery decided to seek the UMass presidency.

Bromery is reportedly one of 25 candidates now being considered for that office by a trustee search committee. The committee last fall had set this spring as a goal for naming a successor to Robert C. Wood, who resigned the end of December.

Puryear said he had Bromery's support for his administrative decisions "reconfirmed as late as Christmas day."

Puryear said that during their conversation the night before he was fired Bromery told him some of the trustees were pressuing him to fire Puryear.

Puryear said Brombery apparently felt he would have the support for his campaign for president from different groups on the campus if he fired Puryear.

Puryear said a compromise between the deans and himself arranged by Bromery "abstractly" would have been a better decision by Bromery when he returned from the vacation. "But," Puryear added, "given the fact that many people believed that he (Bromery) wanted my hide, he assumed that he wanted me out of the job."

Bromery last weekend said when deciding what to do in that situation he couldn't "sit back and second guess what people on both sides of the issue would say."

Puryear was appointed provost in 1976 after a search committee containing four deans spent more than a year conducting a nationwide search.

Puryear last week said the committee and others responsible for his appointment had "misled" him when they said his administrative style was what the campus needed. Puryear said Bromery at the time said while their styles of administration were different, the styles would be "compatible."

Puryear said he recently spoke with one member of the search committee who admitted the committee chose Puryear believing his administrative style was what the university needed.

The committee member, Puryear said, told him "We thought we wanted that (style), but we evidently don't."

Puryear said he didn't believe the deans should have authority for approval over his decisions because there must be "accountability" when setting policies.

He said the deans should be able to offer their opinions while a policy is being formulated, but Puryear said the final decision should be left up to one person.

In the "corporate mode of decision making" the deans desired, Puryear said, no one can be pinpointed when a bad decision is made.

He also said he believes the deans did not like the idea of the provost's office staff having more participation in policy formulation than they.

Puryear, who is black, last week also dismissed the notion some people hold that no racism could be involved in his dismissal just because Bromery and one of the deans involved in the dispute, William Darity, are black.

"Just because blacks are involved in a bad situation," Puryear said, "doesn't make the situation good."

He said people should be careful when evaluating the role of racism in any issue because racism takes different forms. He said he received reports from various faculty about overt racist acts on the part of some other faculty.

Puryear said he believes subtle racist attitudes existed among some of those who opposed him on various administrative policies because many of the policies had been proposed and often implemented by his predecessor, Robert L. Gluckstern, without similar opposition.

Puryear noted that a Gluckstern-appointed committee proposed the position of the dean of the graduate school also become an associate provost. The proposal was implemented, according to Puryear. Puryear's

Trustees today elect committee members

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees today will elect members to its committees in the annual reorganization. Changes are first proposed by a nominating committee and then voted on by the board.

The board will also vote on renovation proposals for the University's central administration offices at 100 Arlington Street, and offices on the Boston and Amherst campuses.

According to Student Trustee Marion L. Batiste, a member of the nominating committee, the board will not be undergoing a total reorganization at this time but will be assigning and reassigning trustees to different committees. Batiste said the board might completely reorganize after a new president is inaugurated. A new president is expected to be named this spring.

The nominating committee, Batiste said, is proposing that the Health Affairs Committee be abolished. This committee is primarily concerned with the establishment of the medical school now at the Worcester campus.

Batiste said the Budget and Finance Committee and the Student Affairs Committee can handle the other duties of the Health Affairs.

The nominating committee also will propose that Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey be re-elected. Healey has been a member of the board since 1959 and chairman for several years.

The board will also vote on a $1,280,000 proposal which would improve the parking lots and roads at the UMass-Amherst campus.

The proposed improvements include constructing curbs at University bus stops, improving lighting to make the campus safer at night and restoring necessary storm drains and landscape.

The proposal would bring about repairs on the infirmary road and parking lots 40 and 65, among others.

The funding for the improvements will come from a state grant.

The board will also vote on more explicit proposals dealing with the renovation of 100 Arlington St. in Boston, which is where University administration is housed. The board has already approved the restoration proposal in general.

In other matters, the board will vote on the acquisition of property and two apartment houses on Nantucket Island. UMass-Boston has a field station in this area and courses are offered there. The property would be used for further studies and the apartments would be used to house students. The University will apply to receive the property free of charge from the federal government, which owns it.

The Budget and Finance Committee will discuss policy concerning administrators who leave their posts and then take faculty positions at the University. These administrators usually receive their administration salary for a period after they leave. Later, the Commonwealth votes professorships for them which enable the new professors to receive an inflated faculty salary.

The Commonwealth professorship was originally initiated so the University could recruit prominent faculty to the staff.

Revision of the fiscal year '79 budget will be voted on in an attempt to increase it. The budget has not yet been brought to the board for final approval.

The board will meet in a closed executive meeting in the morning to discuss personnel matters including the salary to be offered to the new president. The board will also discuss collective bargaining in this session.

Senate Committee adopts State Department advice

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A State Department spokesperson said yesterday the department will accept changes the Senate Foreign Relations Committee recommended on the Panama Canal treaties.

"We believe that the process worked out by the committee successfully meets the needs of the Senate, of the administration and of Panama," spokesperson Hodding Carter said.

Before approving the treaties Monday, the foreign relations committee recommended two articles of the pacts be altered to include an agreement that President Carter and Panama leader Omar Torrijos worked out last October.

That agreement gave the United States power to defend the canal beyond the year 2000, when Panama would take control of it, and it provided American and Panamanian naval vessels first rights on the waterway during crises.

Hodding Carter said that while the administration accepts those changes in the treaties, "We continue to believe ... that further amendments on the floor are not required, are not necessary and would not be useful."

Senate leaders are expected to bring the treaties up on the Senate floor Feb. 6, and President Carter plans to seek public support for the pacts in a speech from the White House library at 9 p.m. EST today.

Carter spokesperson Rex Granum said the president was encouraged by the foreign relations committee's 14-1 vote of approval on the treaties and called the action "a very good prelude" to the speech.

Granum said Carter would bring up the most frequently raised questions on the treaties "and will respond directly."

On Capitol Hill, yesterday, opponents of the treaties continued efforts to defeat them.

Former defense secretary William Clements said Carter had accepted weaker language on the pacts than Gerald Ford sought, and he said the pacts need to be redone to remove ambiguities.

Clements, a Republican candidate for governor of Texas, told the Senate Armed Services Committee Panama had accepted Ford's version of the treaties, but an administration official at the hearing said Clements was wrong on that point.

The key passage of the Ford proposal was that in case of hostilities, Panama and the United States would consult on peaceful means for solving the crisis and if that failed, each party was free to take measures — including military action — it found necessary.

The equivalent language in the current Panama canal treaties is weaker, saying only that "each party shall act in accordance with its constitutional processes to meet the danger resulting from an armed attack or other actions which threaten the security of the Panama Canal or of ships transiting it."

Guzzi won't challenge

BOSTON [AP] — State Secretary Paul H. Guzzi has blasted the record of fellow Democrat Michael Dukakis but says he has decided against challenging the governor for his job.

Guzzi, 35, completing his first term as the commonwealth's chief record keeper, yesterday said "I intend to complete the work I have begun as state secretary and will not actively pursue the governorship at this time."

He said he wants to concentrate on such matters as his office's ongoing probe of the commodity options business, recodification of election laws and implementation of public campaign finance laws.

However, Guzzi criticized Dukakis' record on human services, tax reform, economic development, cooperation with the legislature and state administration.

"I am frustrated and disillusioned that the governor has yet to effectively deal with these issues," Guzzi said, reserving his right to "speak out for more efficient, more accessible, and more compassionate state government." He did not rule out the possibility of a draft.

In recent weeks Guzzi has been urged by a number of Democratic liberals to consider a primary fight against Dukakis.

By removing himself as an active candidate, Guzzi narrowed the Democratic gubernatorial field to Dukakis and Edward J. King, former director of the New England Council, who is regarded as somewhat to the right of Dukakis. State Rep. Charles F. Flaherty, former Democratic state chairman, is expected to announce a formal bid later.

Republicans bidding for the nomination are House Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch of Beverly and Edward F. King, head of Citizens for Limited Taxation. Middlesex County Sheriff John J. Buckley also has expressed interest in the GOP nod but has not yet declared a formal candidacy.

Bus budget feud

Student government officials have proposed that the students' share of the funding for the UMass buses be lowered by 15 per cent but University officials want the funding ratio to remain the same.

The UMass share of the transit budget is derived from both student fees and revenues from registration fees of the UMass parking office. Student fees comprise 85 per cent of the UMass allocation and University, through the parking office budget, contributes another 15. The transit system also receives a subsidy comprised of state and federal funds.

Student government treasurer Priscilla West yesterday said students not only pay for 85 per cent of the transit budget through student fees, but also through monies they pay to register their cars for University parking lots.

West said parking fees paid by students comprise 66 per cent of the registration monies collected by the parking office, and therefore the students' contribution to the transit service is more than 85 per cent.

A compromise proposal in which the student government would pay 70 per cent of the University allocation to the transit system was rejected by the University, according to West.

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance James L. McBee last night said the present 85-15 per cent ration must be kept because there is no other source of money available. He said the parking office has enough trouble operating under its current budget without contributing more money to the transit service.

A letter, McBee said, should be received by student government leaders today explaining the administration's decision.

Murder trial continues

NORTHAMPTON — A lawyer for a man accused of murdering his mother, sister and an elderly boarder in their Easthampton home last March yesterday sought to suppress evidence gathered by police.

Arguments on the pre-trial motion made in behalf of Herman Harris by attorney Elio Bellucci will continue today in Hampshire County Superior Court. Bellucci said consideration of the motion could extend to tomorrow.

The 49-year-old Harris is charged with shooting his mother, Velma Kulis, 69, his sister, Mozelle Evans, 47, and George Healey, 77, a boarder in the two-story home. Harris' niece, Deborah Evans, 20, survived a gunshot wound to the head.

The trial has been scheduled for April 3 in Worcester County Superior Court after Bellucci won a motion to relocate the trial outside the Northampton area because of pre-trial publicity.

Duke seeks snow money

BOSTON — The January 20 snowstorm which dumped almost two feet of snow on Massachusetts and crippled many cities and towns in the state, has also left the state's snow removal and ice control budget handicapped, and a request for $4.5 million in additional funds has been filed by Gov. Michael Dukakis.

The additional funds would provide for plowing, sanding and salting the state and MDC roads for the rest of this winter, according to Dukakis.

He is also requesting another $3.1 million to take care of other deficiencies in the current fiscal year.

Thieves get toilet training

BROCKTON — Police detectives are still trying to figure out who would want to steal a truck containing 4½ tons of fire hydrants and two tons of a booklet called "Toilet Training for Children."

Police believe the thieves had planned to steal another truck, parked nearby, which contained drugs, razor blades and tools, but accidentally stole the wrong one.

Punk rock gouged

Punk rock record albums are being vandalized at WMUA, the UMass student-run radio station.

"They were gouged with sharp implements across every cut so none of the songs could be played," a station jockey said. "It's obviously a reactionary move. People feel threatened by punk rock."

"It's definitely deliberate," said station manager Glenn Gardner. "Personally, I don't play punk rock, but not one has the right to destroy any kind of music."

"You can never tell who did it," he added. He said the records are not kept locked in the station located in Marston Hall.

Gardner said the station would probably buy replacement records as soon as possible.

The station spends roughly $2,000 each year to replace records that wear out due to normal wear and tear, as well as those that are stolen or destroyed.

Punk rockers save couple

INVERNESS, Scotland, [AP] — A couple buried in their car beneath a 20-foot snowdrift said they would die, until a "punk rock" group rescued them.

It was Scotland's worst blizzard in 30 years, and the second to hit the region in three days.

Bernard Foulstone, 53, told reporters in London that he and his wife Marian were trapped while returning to England on Monday from a visit to their daughter.

The Foustones wrote wills and signed notes to their children. Then they heard a scraping noise.

"Suddenly we saw a lad carrying a shepherd's crook at the car window," Foulstone said after the 28-hour ordeal.

The rescuers, all members of the British punk rock group "The Subs," were themselves stranded by the storm and spent Monday helping search for survivors under the huge snowdrifts.

Marian Foulstone called the musicians her "angels of mercy."

Olver to chair Ways & Means?

State Senator and Vice Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee John W. Olver, D-Amherst, is seen as the probable successor to Ways and Means Chairman James Kelley, D-Oxford, who will not seek re-election this year. Olver is a tenured chemistry professor here at UMass.

But some state house political observers say Sen. B. Joseph Tull, D-Dracut, may get the position instead because his politics are more closely aligned to Majority Leader William Bulger, D-Boston.

Kelley, who has called Olver the "best vice chairman in the history of the legislator," and Bulger are not considered by state house observers as political allies.

The observers also say Bulger would be wise to chose Olver, though, because of his expertise in budgeting. Tully is the chairman of the committee on counties.

Smith gets grant

NORTHAMPTON — Smith College has received $350,000 grant from the Andrew Mellon Foundation to begin a multidisciplinary research project on "Women and Social Change."

Expressions of Gratitude

The staff of Black Affairs would like to extend welcome back greetings to all. We are also very grateful to the following individuals for their contributions to the paper this past fall semester.

These people took the time and effort to write articles, commentaries, viewpoints, poetry, theatre and film reviews.

We were touched by the spirit of unity and oneness so clearly demonstrated by those who contributed to Black Affairs. Their help was and is appreciated very much.

Survival tips

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

The nature of UMass requires that you remember certain things in order to maintain what some describe as sanity. Remember to:

1. Consider yourself in transient, the summer is coming.
2. Eat light, the food has left something to be desired.
3. Before going to Whitmore take two aspirin and get plenty of sleep the night before.
4. Buy plenty of "professor exasperation" and "I hate the professor" drugs. They are not sold over the counter.
5. Set your sights on Amherst's beautiful spring and go through the cold winter in a state of hypnosis.
6. Make A's on all of your exams during the winter months. It gets considerably more difficult, when spring fever hits.
7. For your safety remember that "Mother Wind" loves the library and Grad Research.
8. Munchies closes at 7 p.m., the library at 12 p.m.
9. Take everything you need with you when you leave the hill. If you don't you will be sorry.
10. The library was not made for jumping.
11. The lake is not a swimming hole.
12. The swans and ducks that are in the lake during spring are not for the sport of hunting, or making Down jackets.
13. You can find your book in the library if you take your four leaf clover.
14. Watch out for the trees when skiing down the hill.

Arab nations oppose talks

ALGIERS, Algeria [UPI] — The PLO and four hardline Arab nations opened a summit Tuesday to map their opposition to Egypt's peace talks with Israel. But Iraq boycotted the meeting.

The foreign ministers of Syria, Libya, South Yemen and Algeria and a Palestine Liberation Organization official met to set the agenda for Thursday's meeting of the presidents of the four nations and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

In his opening address, Algerian Foreign Minister Abdelaziz Bouteflika said Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's peace contacts with Israel are a direct threat to the Arabs' "revolutionary heritage" and violated Arab "solidarity."

The agenda for the presidential summit was not disclosed but an Algerian official said it will seek ways to implement sanctions on Egypt agreed upon by the same five nations and factions in Tripoli last month.

Alvin Ailey opens semester at FAC

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater performing the dance routine "Road of Phoebe Snow".

The ALVIN AILEY AMERICAN DANCE THEATER, a company of exciting young dancers which has electrified audiences and stunned critics into superlatives since its birth in New York City in 1958 will present three performances at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, University of Massachusetts, on February 7, 8, 9 at 8 p.m.

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater was officially launched in 1958. Since then the company has grown from 7 to 25 dancers, and won national and international fame on the stage and on television.

On tours in America, Europe, Africa and the Far East the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater has presented a unique form of dance-combining modern and classical — reflecting the American heritage, both black and white.

The music is symphonic, blues and spirituals. The dancing by the multiracial company is ecstatic, dramatic and vital, the whole experience is total "dance theater."

The Ailey company has left cities, world capitals and whole countries cheering their performances. In Hamburg, the people refused to go home — the company received an unprecedented 61 curtain calls.

The company has appeared consistently before packed houses throughout the world and has triumphed in the U.S. State Department tours, including Russia, which marked the first American contemporary dance company to appear in the U.S.S.R.

The Ailey Dance Theater will present different programs during their three performances at the Fine Arts Center.

Gazelle, The Time Before The Time After, Suite Otis and Revelations are featured on Tuesday, February 7.

Hidden Rites, Choral Dances, and Suite Otis are scheduled for the Wednesday, February 8 performance.

Night Creatures, Cry, Revelations and Rainbow' Round My Shoulder will be presented during their final performance on Thursday, February 9.

The presentation of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater is part of the Dance Series at the Fine Arts Center and is part of the National Endowment of the Arts Dance Residency Touring Program.

Ticket prices for the performances are: General public, $7, 6, 5. UMass students are $3.50, 3, 2.50.

High Notes...

Welcome back to Amherst ladies and gentlemen. I hope your holidays were nice and allowed you to achieve a cosmically wonderful frame of mind. It's time for the second half of the academic year or as some folks call it; "Bonzo Goes To College" Pt. II.

With classes just starting and registration wrapped up (hopefully) you might have some free time. As a service to you, my faithful readers, I'm going to make a few suggestions on how to spend that time with some very worthwhile and entertaining activity.

Movie people should try to check out "Which Way Is Up?" featuring Richard Pryor as three times the actor he's ever been. In this one, Pryor plays not one, not two, but three roles. The movie has him playing three characters that you will immediately recognize from his LPs. Try not to miss it!

If you really feel like doing something nice for yourself, pick up a copy of Dexter Gordon's "Sophisticated Giant". Dexter's a genius and this one shows it. He's got some pretty impressive folks with him too.

There are a lot of other nice things out there too, like Blue Magic and The Dells with new LPs

There are a lot of other nice things out there too, like Blue Magic and The Dells with new LPs and the solo debut of Prince Phillip Mitchell. Musically aware people know that Mitchell was the main force behind Norman Connors' latest hit, "Once I've Been There". His debut is very interesting, to say the least.

I'll be coming to you with the word on these and other things as they happen. When something big is happening, check out High Notes and you'll be the first to know. Have a good semester.

Viewpoint and future visions

By JULIANNE ROBERTSON

Malcolm X Center

Brothers and Sisters, we're at the start of a new term. During intersession, all of us probably made our various New Year's resolutions and personal promises to ourselves that stated our wishes that we become better people. At this point, the staff at the Malcolm X Center would like to express some viewpoints and future visions for the Third-World community to reflect and act upon.

1. On a college campus with as small a Black population as UMass, the unity of the actions that we take depends upon every person. The gains that we make in combatting racism cannot be made by a few of us. Get Involved.

2. Our personal problems may seem to have the most importance in our development as people, but those things that appear to be greatly removed from us may have a bearing on our development as a people. Analyze your positions.

3. Keeping ourselves prepared as students will help us in later life as well as at UMass; keeping our priorities in order is an admirable goal. Get on top of things.

4. Don't shut yourself off from the world. Seek out other members of the Third-World community. If there's something that you would like to see get done, there are many resources available to you.

Let's get the semester off to a good start... and we'll have a good finish too!

An interracial love story

NEW YORK [UPI] — A 21-year-old white nurse and an Asian salesman, 34, who were forbidden to date in their native South Africa and were forced to sit in separate seats when they flew into exile, were married Tuesday in a New York church.

Salim Osman, eldest of five brothers and four sisters, and Therese Rabie exchanged tiny, gold wedding rings in a five-minute ceremony in the small, red-brick Community Church off Park Avenue.

"You may kiss her now, Salim," said state Supreme Court Justice William Booth.

The couple, who had dodged white authorities during a two-year secret courtship in Pretoria, smiled and kissed repeatedly.

The apartheid laws in South Africa prohibit marriages between whites and non-whites.

Therese, who was ostracized by her two sisters when she persisted in dating Salim, an Indian, said there would be no honeymoon as such. "Our honeymoon was on the plane to the United States," she said.

But even then, the two had to sit apart in their South African Airways seats — as the laws of the white-ruled regime demand — until the aircraft left South African airspace.

Therese, raven-haired and pale-skinned, wore a gray cape suit and a matching white silk scarf for the wedding, which was attended by about 100 people, including City Clerk David Dinkens sent by Mayor Edward Koch.

Ahead of the couple now is a fight to remain in the United States. To stay, they must prove to immigration authorities that their marriage, a crime in South Africa, would be annulled if they returned home.

The flight to freedom took place two weeks ago when they left Johannesburg and arrived at Kennedy Airport after a stopover in Bermuda because of a snowstorm in New York.

Salim said he initiated the courtship. "I was buying cigarettes at a tobaconist shop and Therese walked past and I simply grabbed the cigarettes and went up and said hello. I asked her if I could come up for coffee.

"Was that a bit forward? I guess so."

A week later they were clandestinely engaged. Therese bought a small diamond ring with $300 Salim gave her because they could not go to the jewelers together.

Does he still fear the authorities?

"I still look over my shoulder," said Salim.

News in Brief

Feminists launch local writers' guild

A meeting to launch the Valley chapter of the New England Regional Chapter of the Feminist Writers' Guild will take place Sunday, Feb. 12 at 8 p.m. in the Patterson Hall lounge at Hampshire College.

All women writers (published or unpublished) are invited to attend this informational and organizational meeting. Supporting memberships for nonwriters are also available.

The Feminist Writers' Guild was started in the Bay area of California this summer. The organization aims to benefit women writers and promote the publication of feminist literature. Its first action was to negotiate an end of the feminist boycott of Mother Jones and bring about changes in their editorial and hiring policies.

The Guild is concerned with getting fair reviews of women's books. It plans to put out a handbook on how to read contracts, find an agent, figure percentages and deal with the basic economics of being a writer.

Women file suit in civil rights case

[HER SAY NEWS SERVICE] — In what could become a precedent-setting case, ten Los Angeles women will go to court on Jan. 31, charging that the federal government and the University of Southern California-Los Angeles County Medical Center have violated their civil rights.

The ten women — all Chicanos — have filed a class action suit asking unspecified damages from the medical center and the government. The suit said doctors at the center violated the women's rights to procreate by forcing them to have sterilizations without their informed consent.

One of the plaintiffs, Jovita Rivera, in documents filed in court, said she entered the USC Medical Center in September 1973 for a Caesarian section. Rivera said after she was given general anesthesia, the doctor told her she should have to have her "tubes tied," because her children were a burden to the government. Rivera said when she signed the forms, she was still not fully conscious because of the anesthesia. She said she learned only after the operation that she could never have more children.

Nine other women have charged that they were similarly abused and sterilized by the medical center's doctors. The suit charges that the federal government has failed to provide sufficient sterilization guidelines to prevent unwanted sterilizations. It asks that unspecified damages be awarded to all women who have undergone sterilization operations at the clinic without their consent.

The court trial comes on the heels of reports that death rates for infants born at the L.A. County-USC Medical Center have shown a sharp rise during the last two years — contrary to the general trend nationwide.

The neonatal death rate, down to eight deaths per 1000 births in 1975, rose to 12 deaths per 1000 births in 1976, and still hovers around that level, according to hospital statistics.

Women's advocate ousted from position

[HER SAY NEWS SERVICE] — Houston's official women's rights advocate, Nicki Van Hightower, has once again been ousted from her job.

Houston was the only large city in the country to have an official champion for women's rights in its city government. That figured largely in the choice of the city for the International Women's Year Conference last November.

At a Rotary Club meeting, however, Houston's new mayor, Jim McConn, said Van Hightower's position would be eliminated, and the women's rights advocate subsequently learned she had been dismissed.

Last March, in a controversial move, the Houston City Council voted to drop Van Hightower's salary from an annual $18,000 to a mere $1. The former mayor, Fred Hoffheinz, however, who opposed the Council's move, put her on his personal staff to continue with the same duties.

Mayor McConn admitted that announcing Van Hightower's dismissal to the Rotary Club instead of to her in person might have been a "tactical error." He said doing away with her position was one of his campaign promises, and that he was only doing his duty.

Oldest restaurant to reopen

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — The 17th-century White Horse Tavern, believed to be the oldest in the country, will reopen next month, the new operator said yesterday.

"We're shooting for the middle to the end of March," said Mark Kaywood, the 26-year old restaurateur who will rent the tavern from the Newport Preservation Society.

Kaywood plans an English and American menu with pheasant, quail, rabbit and venison. The price range hasn't been determined yet.

The gambrel-roofed building with exposed timbers was built in 1673. Licensed as a tavern in the 1680's, it was said to be one of Newport's main eateries when the city was the colonial capital.

Daniel R. Porter, executive director of the Preservation Society, said "No one else can come close to it" in terms of age.

The former operator, David Ray, closed the restaurant Nov. 26, 1977. Ray claimed he lost $130,000 on the restaurant since 1975.

Porter said the losses may have been caused by "divided loyalties." He said Ray "has a very good restaurant of his own" also in Newport.

Kaywood said he believes the White Horse will be more successful under his leadership, because he only has one restaurant to manage and because it will be a "family-run operation."

Man lives six days under snow

MANSFIELD, Ohio [UPI] — For six straight days, trucker James Truly sat submerged in a snowdrift in the cab of his big 18-wheel, tractor-trailer rig eating snow from a hat.

Yesterday he was finally rescued. Doctors said he was in amazingly good health.

"I didn't know what day today was, but I feel great," declared Truly, 42, of Cleveland, who has a wife and two children.

Truly had been hauling a load of steel from Cleveland to Mansfield when he was caught in last Thursday's blizzard on Ohio 13 near the northern Ohio city of Mansfield.

"The engine stopped," said Truly, recalling the ordeal. "I turned on the CB, but couldn't reach nobody. There was no use of me getting out 'cause it was 5 a.m. and the snow was blowing so bad you couldn't see nothing. If I walked around, I'd just get blown away. I knew I'd be protected from the wind inside.

"I climbed up in the bunk, put my feet in an old curtain up there and had one blanket to get under."

Truly fell asleep awhile and, when he woke up, discovered a snowdrift had covered his truck.

"I couldn't see nothing," he said. "It was all dark."

Truly prepared for a long stay.

"I had a hardhat with me and I could get the window down some and scoop up some snow in the hat. I'd just sit there and eat snow for awhile till my mouth wasn't dry anymore. Then I'd go to sleep, but get cold and wake up and do it again: eat more snow and sleep.

"I prayed and I hoped I would come out of it. All I could do was wait and wait."

Finally, late yesterday morning, Truly's brother, Don, led a rescue team that spotted a radio antenna sticking up from the snow and started digging.

"They came beating on the top of the roof and I beat back," said Truly. "I thought, 'Thank God.' "

Truly was checked over at Mansfield General Hospital, where officials said he was in amazingly good health, considering his ordeal.

"He's kind of weak and we want to get some fluids into him, but other than that, he seems to have survived it fine," said a hospital official.

Said Truly's brother, Don, 45, who had been searching for James since last Thursday, "I have to admit I was surprised we found him alive. I was prepared to identify a body."

Truly, asked what he did for six days in the snowcovered cab, said, "I did a lot of thinking."

Some of that "thinking," related brother Don, concerned some unheeded advice.

"I'd always told him to drive Interstate 71 on that run, not Route 13," said Don. "I told him if you ever got in snow trouble it'd be a lot better to be on 71 than 13.

Papers on Sacco-Vanzetti opened at Harvard University yesterday

CAMBRIDGE [UPI] — The personal papers of Lawrence Lowell, who chaired the committee which reviewed the Sacco-Vanzetti murder case in the 1920's, were opened to the public for the first time yesterday.

The papers, sealed in a Harvard University vault for 50 years, include personal correspondence, court records, transcripts of interviews and newspaper clippings. But their impact on one of the most celebrated legal cases in American history was not immediately known.

The actual papers were not made available, but reporters were given the first look at copies on microfilm. Harvard officials said no historians had seen the papers as of yesterday so no expert opinions were available.

The papers, contained in a wax-sealed package about a foot on each side were ceremonially opened Dec. 9. Microfilming of the documents began immediately after that, according to university officials.

Lowell, president of Harvard University in 1927, was appointed by then Gov. Alvan T. Fuller to review the controversial murder convictions of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, immigrants who espoused Communist philosophy at a time when the nation was swept with anti-Communist fears.

Among the papers included in the package were a number of typed letters from Lowell to various friends and acquaintances which reflected his attitude toward his commission's investigation and its final conclusion.

"To tell the truth," said Lowell in an Aug. 23, 1927, letter to retired Judge Robert Grant, a member of the commission, "I did not find the work over the Sacco-Vanzetti case tiresome, but rather restful — perhaps it was because it was such a change of occupation and companionship was delightful."

The case, which stemmed from the 1920 robbery of a South Braintree shoe company payroll in which two persons were killed, dragged on for seven years and drew worldwide attention. Sacco and Vanzetti were executed in 1927 after a series of appeals which went to the U.S. Supreme Court as thousands of demonstrators marched in the streets of Boston.

Fuller refused to change the death sentences for the two men because of the Lowell commission report, which found there was no reasonable doubt about their guilt.

Lowell's personal papers were turned over to Harvard by his biographer Henry Yeomans and his secretary Nora Dwyer with the stipulation they not be opened until Dec. 9, 1977.

Dukakis asks for local aid

BOSTON [UPI] — The federal government should put more emphasis on improving economically distressed regions and local communities, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday.

In a speech prepared for delivery yesterday in Washington at the White House Conference on National Balanced Growth, Dukakis said cities and towns are "seriously limited" in what they can do to "pull themselves out of a declining economic spiral."

But he said local and state leadership has to be coupled with increased federal efforts to alleviate economic problems.

"I deeply believe we cannot leave to chance the role of state governments in the implementation of a national economic policy," Dukakis said.

"Powerful incentives must be built into federal law which can involve every state in the task of dealing with the special economic problems of its citizens. Unless the states are involved — and involved deeply in that effort — it is doomed to failure," he said.

In order to ensure state involvement in such an effort, Dukakis said, a system of federal incentive grants should be established and each state should be encouraged to develop its own comprehensive statewide growth policies, including plans to aid economically distressed areas.

"The incentives to the states — in the form of major federal grants — would follow federal approval of a state's overall growth policy," the governor said. "Some of these grants would not require new legislation; others would."

Officials to drain aquarium

BOSTON [AP] — Despite suggestions from interested people, officials at the New England Aquarium still plan to drain and then repair the facility's large central viewing tank.

"We've had people giving us all kinds of advice," said Rosalyn Ridgway, spokesperson for the aquarium where a crack in the giant sea tank was found at one of its viewing windows in early January.

"Shipfitters; just anybody has been calling us. They said they'd do the work or they know how it can be done better," she said yesterday.

The tank, holding 250,000 gallons of sea water, is one of the world's finest spots for viewing sea life.

Later in February sharks, turtles, eels and all the rest of the 280 aquarium creatures will be removed from the tank and placed in other tanks around the facility. Then the tank will be drained and the cracked window repaired.

Fire threatens senator's home

METHUEN [AP] — A brief fire broke out yesterday morning in the apartment house where state Sen. Sharon Pollard lives, officials reported.

Authorities said the cause of the blaze was undetermined and damage, to a number of the apartments, was not extensive.

There were no injuries. Firefighters said the senator, a Democrat, was not at home when the blaze was discovered.

Withdrawal Preposterous

By YITZHAK SANTIS

President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt insists on absolutely no Jewish settlements on Egyptian soil, full withdrawal from all Arab lands captured by Israel in 1967 and complete self-determination for the Palestinian Arabs on the West Bank and Gaza. Israel, of course, opposes all of these demands. But to what extent? And why is Sadat taking such a hardline stance on these issues? What do the Israelis hope to gain?

Sadat is calling for the complete and total withdrawal of all Israelis, military and civilian, from all the Arab territories and he does not fail to include the Old City of Jerusalem in his definition of Arab territories. He refuses to back down from these demands and considers his trip to Jerusalem on Nov. 19 (thereby granting de facto and later declaring de jure recognition to Israel's right to survive) as being the one and only compromise the Israelis wanted and needed.

The gall displayed by Sadat in these demands is overwhelming. After four wars against Israel, all of which were aimed at destroying the Jewish state, and after engineering the surprise, unprovoked, all out attack on Israel on Yom Kippur in 1973, Sadat has the audacity to come to Jerusalem and demand that no Jews be allowed to live on any Arab lands, even under Arab sovereignty, and to give up Old Jerusalem!

One point must be made clear here. President Sadat represents Egypt and only Egypt. Egypt is alone in giving recognition to Israel. The other bordering states, Jordon, Syria and Lebanon have not granted recognition nor have any of those nations given any indication that they would have joined the talks. On the contrary, Syria has joined the PLO in denouncing Sadat as a traitor and demanded that he be assassinated. Sadat, however, claims to be the voice of all the Arab countries in order to claim Arab unity and to prevent alienation from his banker, King Khalid of Saudi Arabia.

Begin has offered Sadat complete return of the Sinai peninsula with the existing Israeli settlements remaining under Israeli administration but under Egyptian sovereignty and law with a demilitarized zone of over 150 miles between these settlements and the strategic Gidi and Mitla passes. This Sadat has refused on the pretext that "No Jewish settlements will be allowed on Egyptian soil." Is Sadat saying that he wants the Sinai to be Judenrein (free of Jews)? What possible threat can Jewish settlements, in the middle of the desert, separated from Egypt proper by over 150 miles of a demilitarized zone and under Egyptian sovereignty pose to Egyptian security? These Jewish settlers would be defined as Israeli nationals living in Egypt. A parallel can be drawn to American nationals living in France, England or Canada. Foreign nationals living in a host country is one true sign of peace and open cooperation and in the spirit of open cooperation, Israel should welcome Egyptian settlers to the Negev to help develop that vital desert area. But Sadat's statements on this issue makes one begin to wonder exactly what type of peace he really wants.

> "The gall displayed by Sadat in these demands is overwhelming. After four wars against Israel...Sadat has the audacity to come to Jerusalem and demand that no Jews be allowed to live on Arab lands..., and to give up Old Jerusalem!"

Withdrawal from Old Jerusalem is a preposterous demand that no Israeli can or will take seriously. Jerusalem is the heart and soul of not only Israel but to all of Judaism throughout the world. To relinquish control of the City of Gold would be committing spiritual, cultural and national suicide.

Israel will not withdraw from the Golan Heights, and that for humanitarian reasons. The 13,500 Druze residents of the Golan Heights (the Druzes are a sect of Islam that is not accepted by the main body, they have been the target of Syrian persecutions) have petitioned the Israeli Government to annex the Golan Heights. Mayor Muhsein Abu Salah of Masada said, "The Golan should be a part of Israel and Israeli law should apply." His reasons were that, "relations with the Israelis were good and the economic situation is 600 per cent better than it had been under Syrian rule." Also, the 40,000 Israeli residents of the Huleh Valley well remember the constant bombardments and snipings that came from the Golan Heights before 1967. Given Syria's current position and past record you can hardly expect the Israelis to even consider a withdrawal.

The Palestinian Arab question is by far the thorniest issue. Sadat insists that the resolution of this issue is a prerequisite to any peace settlement. Begin refutes this and he is correct in doing so. First, peace has got to be achieved and recognition of Israel must be obtained from all the Arab nations directly involved with her, including the PLO. Then, and only then, can the issue of the Palestinian Arab question be solved.

Begin's limited self-rule is clearly not enough. But it is the most that can be offered at this time given the present circumstances. Only after the PLO abolishes its covenant and only after Syria, Lebanon and Jordan give full and complete recognition to Israel thereby insuring her security, then can the creation of a Palestinian Arab state on the West Bank and Gaza be seriously considered.

Israel's security fears are very real, despite Sadat's claim to the contrary, and self-determination for the Palestinian Arabs is understood and is taken very seriously in Israel, but the Israelis will not allow Palestinian Arab self-determination at the expense of Jewish self-determination.

Therefore, Sadat must soften his position and look at the situation realistically. He must stop demanding such ridiculous conditions for the Israelis to follow in order for peace to be achieved. If he really wants peace he'll have to lower his price a little. For, you see, peace is a priceless commodity to Israel, but peace at any price is much too expensive.

Dysfunctional Whitmorites

bob melia

One of the biggest UMass news items of the intersession, second in importance only to the basketball team's losing streak, was the firing of Provost Paul Puryear by Chancellor Bromery. Puryear had been under heavy criticism for months, but in the end he himself was his worst enemy, as it was his own heavy-handed arrogance that finally forced Bromery to dismiss him.

Puryear was the administration's hatchet-man, but when he demanded the resignation of six academic deans who opposed his plan for the future (the infamous Puryear Plan), he went too far. At a time when the administration is trying hard to appear as if it is negotiating in good faith with the faculty union, it simply could not fire all the deans who were hostile to the Puryear Plan, as the plan touched on issues that the faculty union will surely be concerned with.

Puryear is gone (or at least banished to the political science department), but his demotion is unlikely to be more than a symbolic victory for his opponents and others concerned with the quality of education at the university, for Bromery dismissed him because he and Puryear had "conflicting styles of management." This implies that on important matters, matters of substance, Puryear and Bromery thought (and think) alike.

Reinforcing this impression are Bromery's remarks that Puryear's problems were inherited, that Puryear was simply the fall guy for conditions beyond his ability to control. It seems likely then that Bromery will appoint a brand new Provost to carry out the same old plan, only with more subtlety and sophistication.

Which is ironic. Absurd, even. The Puryear Plan, remember, is designed to turn the University into a glorified vocational school; the type you see advertised on matchbooks. Contrast this view of the future with the report of the accreditation committee. (UMass, like all schools, must be periodically evaluated and accredited). Accreditation is virtually assured, but the process has some value because it evaluates the school and the students, and attempts to pinpoint strengths and weaknesses.

The committee described UMass students as "provincial, a-intellectual, and dysfunctional." The meanings of 'provincial' and 'a-intellectual' are obvious (even to us a-intellectuals), but dysfunctional needs a short explanation. As near as I can determine, it means we have a negative image of ourselves, which prevents us from functioning as well as we should.

To add insult to injury, the micro-college, a group involved in the accreditation process and composed largely of Whitmorites, implicitly agreed with the accreditation committee's opinion of us. The micro-college, concerned with (among other things) determining the proper role of students, was conveniently held over the intersession, when very few students were around to provide a student viewpoint on what the student role should be.

> "It seems likely that Bromery will appoint a brand new Provost to carry out the same old plan"

At first sight this may appear puzzling, but of course if the administration regards us as too provincial to determine our own role, too a-intellectual to understand it, and too dysfunctional to implement it, than everything makes sense, in a sense.

This being the administrations view of us, ponder a moment the fact that recent administration actions have been designed to intensify those unfortunate traits we all suffer from. If we aren't provincial, the administration would like to make us so, by eliminating programs where we can study other cultures and histories (Slavic and Asian Studies). If we aren't a-intellectual, the administration appears intent on making us that way, for it wants to undermine the College of Arts and Sciences. And if we aren't dysfunctional, the administration seems bent on ensuring that we become so, for every time we attempt to function independently, the administration has delayed, ignored, disparaged and undermined our efforts.

This last is the most serious charge, for there is a grain of truth to the accusation that UMass students are dysfunctional. Massachusetts has historially been educationally elitist and has celebrated private education while ignoring and criticizing public education. But this negative image and myth of incompetence is being dispelled by student activity; cooperatives, political involvement, economic development and self-education. We are national leaders in the struggle to acquire significant influence over curriculum, faculty evaluation and hiring, living conditions, and general intellectual environment. But at every turn the administration has harassed our attempts at creating a student community which is assertive, vital and functional.

In the spirit of reciprocity, we ought to hold our own micro-college to evaluate the administration. Remembering the mental geniuses in the housing and admissions departments who left 400 students ill-housed and ill-fed (though thankfully not ill-clothed), we could term the administration a-intellectual. Recognizing that Whitmore can rarely do anything right the first time, we could justifiably call the administration dysfunctional. And realizing that administrators seem constitutionally incapable of comprehending and responding to interests other than their own, we could appropriately label them provincial.

The question now becomes, what is a provincial, a-intellectual dysfunctional doing teaching in the political science department?

Anti-Bakke Group Forming

To the Editor:

This year the U. S. Supreme Court will decide on the case of Allan Bakke vs. The University of California. It is the most important legal issue facing Blacks, Asians and Hispanics in America today. It is at the forefront of the many racist attacks on our civil and human rights.

If Bakke wins, it will not only be a devastating blow to preferential admissions programs on the college campuses, it will call into question every affirmative action program in the country including those affecting unemployment, health care, legal services and many other areas. Already there are thousands of cases pending the outcome of the Bakke Decision. This is truly a landmark case that requires an end to business as usual and action on the part of those who are in favor of civil and human rights.

The National Committee to Overturn the Bakke Decision [NCOBD] has called for a week of educational activities, Feb. 19-25, local actions April 8th and a national march on Wash. D.C. April 15th. These calls have been supported nationally by the National Student Coalition Against Racism [NSCAR] and the Black American Law Students Association [BALSA]. We, locally, want to join with this national campaign. There is no local chapter of NCOBD, but that should not stop us from building support for the actions. We can do this by forming a broad based coalition around these actions.

We need all the help we can get to mobilize our side, in defense of our rights. If you would like to help organize the first meeting [called for Tues., Feb. 7th at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom] call Stan Kinard at 5-2517; drop by the Third World Affairs office in the Student Union Building or call Sally Rees [527-0316].

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Attention

Any person interested in doing editorial work — cartoons, subject representations, etc. — should come down to the Collegian office or call 545-3500 and ask for Michael Doran.

Catch words and phrases for Hob-knobbers

jerry rogers

Pasted on a wall in the composition room of the Ware River News, where the Collegian is pasted up before being printed, is a small photo of former Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage. Pasted on the wall below the photo is a short poem by Anonymous. It reads:

I sadly fear
Today shall be cloudy
Because of cheap bear
And convection

Every time I look at this happenstance combination I think back to the halcyon days of my early years at UMass. Gage was a central figure in the student activism of the first half of the decade. Even if his name was held in disdain by active students, it was a name everyone should have known. Gage, the ill-fated Universal Resource Fee, the weather and cheap beer were always topics of conversation (the latter two remain so).

In any event, to effectively engage in UMass conversation, only one need know the catch words and phrases of the day. What follows are the basics necessary for hob-knobbing around campus.

It seems fitting that we start with the subject of Academics, since that is the commodity we're all involved in marketing.

CASIAC — No one really knows what these initials stand for, however, you can be reasonably certain that Casiac is connected with the College of Arts and Sciences. Some practitioners of conspiracy theory assert Casiac is some type of Big Brother computer related to the machine in Whitmore known as Oscar. A few radical thinkers believe the initials stand for an office known as the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center. Their theory is given little consideration because we all know administrators abhor well informed students.

Provost — The Provost is believed to be the chief academic officer on campus and second in command to the chancellor. The term is derived from Provo, Utah state college. In Provo students are only permitted to audit classes. Since no grades have to be given, the administration employs a staff of notaries public which certifies attendance records. The certified students, having no problems with grades, are a pleasure to the administration. UMass fills the post of provost each year with the top notary public in the state in hopes of emulating the serene campus existence of Provo.

Incomplete — Incompletes are the affliction that befalls the worst procrastinaters. They are known to hang like swords dangling from the ceiling above the heads of the procrastinaters. Like a loan from a loan shark they are mistakenly seen as "the way out".

So much for the more depressing aspects of university life. Everyone should also know the names of some key students, professors and administrators.

William Field — Bill is the Dean of Students and has the power to do almost anything he wants when a student is involved. His secretaries claim he is a kind man. Students who have suffered disciplinary action tend not to agree. He is known to be a member of the "Administrator is King" school, which deals with students as a commodity, rather than the reason UMass exists.

Randolph Bromery — This man holds the position of Chancellor when he is not off scouting oil for multinationals. He has been the butt of many jokes and cartoons. He has never been known to respond directly to a question, any question. The presidency of UMass is an open position and Randy would love to split Amherst to fill the job. Whether that happens or not is contingent upon the trustees, an enigmatic body known to act in their interest and no one else's.

Jim Paulin — Jim is a student and a crusader. He is also Bill Field's biggest headache. James writes a column for the Collegian, attempts to represent commuter students in student government. While he is often thought eccentric, he is a hero to many. He should be revered by all students and protected from the aforementioned Dean of Students. Walls all over the university are covered with James' handiwork.

Alex Eldridge — Alex is a man with many talents. On the basketball court he can be both an entertainer and a superstar, though Jack Leaman may occasionally think of him in much the same way Field thinks of Paulin. In many ways Alex is a typical New Yorker, and I love New York.

And now to politics.

Lackeys — The Lackeys are a group of students and former students who are claimed to be converts to the administration. Many of them are genuinely admirable people who simply lined up on the wrong side when the battle lines were drawn. They are often attacked by the student government leaders who claim to represent the students. I like the students' representatives more than the Lackeys, but both groups are politicians.

Administration — No-goodniks in the true sense of the term. Get what you can from them and give them no credit. They steal young students and make them lackeys.

The Students — Students are us. Politically we are either unified or diverse and in need of unity. The person using the phrase chooses its meaning. We are not well organized and get shafted by many opportunists — administrators, professors, business people, and yes, some of our own.

> "Randolph Bromery - This man holds the position of Chancellor when he is not off scouting oil for multi nationals...He has never been known to respond directly to a question, any question."

Unionization — It seems everyone belongs to a union except students. We should have a union. The Administration and their lackeys do all they can to keep us from realizing this.

So as to avoid boring you further we will now proceed to recreation.

Bally, Williams and Gottlieb — No this is not a firm of attorneys. These are the names that adorn pinball machines in the Blue Wall, the Campus Center and other spots in the area. The machines have sexist drawings and often steal your money. The games are addicting and many students can be seen shouting at the electric wizards — that is, however, when the players are not winning free games or threatening to beat the machines to a frazzled short circuit.

Jubilation — This is the Jazz (or Black Classical if you wish) program aired on WMUA every Sunday night. It is the most redeeming feature of the station. Everyone should listen.

Program Council — This is the branch of student government that schedules many concerts and movies on campus. The group's work has resulted in improved campus programming of late. U.P.C. is also known to host some of the best joint committee meetings on campus.

Joint Committee Meetings — These meetings do not involve more than one committee and are not very productive. Need I say more?

Frisbee — The beauty of the flying disc has not gone unnoticed on this campus. The Phys. Ed. department offers courses in disc-work and the UMass Ultimate team is composed of many of the most beautiful people I've ever met at UMass. The team is also the most skilled at joint committee meeting organizations.

Remember these things and you'll do fine while making conversation and drinking the lousy Hatch coffee, but the Hatch culture is a column in inself ...

Jerry Rogers is a Collegian Columnist.

Thomson speaks on apartheid

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson said yesterday he does not see apartheid as a moral issue and accused the press of misquoting him during a South African tour.

"I haven't looked on apartheid or racial separation as a matter of morals," Thomson told his first news conference since an 11-day tour of South African in his role as shadow secretary of state for the National Conservative Caucus.

Thomson said it was a "misstatement" to say he called Soweto Township, home of 1.2 million blacks outside Johannesburg, a "wonderful place."

"I never said Soweto was just wonderful," Thomson said. He said he told reporters that cooperation between whites and blacks in Soweto was "just wonderful."

Thomson told a news conference in Johannesburg Jan. 26, after a Soweto tour, "It's a wonderful place and so much better than anything I ever envisioned." He added that "some of these houses are better than some of our neighbors' houses in Orford, New Hampshire."

New Hampshire clergy who criticized him Sunday for defending South African policies came under fire from Thomson for basing their opinions on "second hand reports." He suggested they apply to the Southern African Freedom Foundation, which paid for his trip, for similar tours of the nation.

Thomson said too little unbiased information about South Africa is available in the U.S. and the press should do something about it. "If we have a truly free press, they ought to be carrying both sides of every story."

He said he would not be making a national tour to discuss South Africa, as had been reported, but does hope to speak to many New Hampshire school children about that nation — starting with a visit tomorrow to the Rochester Junior High School.

He handed out press packets including photographs of his trip, publicity for the Southern African Freedom Foundation, statistics on armed forces throughout Africa, and lists of Soviet-made weapons captured on the Angola border.

The governor was asked why he, in South Africa, made statements on matters of national policy, criticizing U.S. energy policy and calling the State Department "un-American."

Thomson said he wanted to study South Africa's energy policy and assess that nation's strategic importance to the U.S., particularly if the Panama Canal treaties are ratified. He said if the canal comes under the control of a communist dictator, it is vital to ensure a friendly nation retains control of Cape Hope and the southern tip of Africa.

He also defended his interest in national policy, particularly his opposition to the Panama Canal, by recalling Theodore Roosevelt's opposition to a 1900 canal treaty. Roosevelt, then governor of New York, raised such an uproar about guaranteeing the neutrality of the canal in peace and war that the Senate refused to accept the treaty until the neutrality provision was removed.

New generator on Conn. River

HOLYOKE [AP] — Holyoke Water Power Co. plans to build a $12 million hydroelectric generating station on the Connecticut River in Western Mass.

The firm, a subsidiary of Northeast Utilities Co., said yesterday that preliminary studies conclude it is feasible to construct a twin to its existing 15,000-kilowatt water-driven generator. The new power plant would draw energy from water not used by the existing generator at the company's dam in Holyoke.

The sharp oil price increases of recent years make the second hydroelectric generator economically feasible for the first time, said John Hickey, president of Holyoke Water Power. He estimated it would produce electricity that requires 80,000 barrels of oil a year in a conventional power plant.

Detailed engineering studies now are being conducted, Hickey said, and the federal Energy Regulatory Commission will receive the results. Government approval for the project is expected to take at least two years, with construction lasting about three years.

Saxaphonist found dead

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands [AP] — Gregory Herbert, a saxophone player and recent member of the rock group Blood, Sweat and Tears, was found dead yesterday in an Amsterdam hotel room where a search uncovered some drugs, police reported.

The search of the 30-year-old jazz musician's room turned up "significant quantities" of heroin and cocaine, as well as a number of hypodermic syringes", a police spokesperson said.

The cause of death was not immediately determined and an autopsy was planned.

Herbert's body was found by other band members who were returning from dinner. The rock group immediately canceled an evening concert in The Hague and flew to London where a spokesperson said they will decide whether to continue their European tour.

One of America's best known rock groups, Blood, Sweat and Tears has gone through a number of personnel changes in its ten-year history.

Started in 1968 by Al Cooper who wanted to experiment with a combination of blues and horns, the band gained popularity because of its unique blending of the big band sound within a rock framework. The group usually consisted of eight to ten musicians, including at least two on trumpet, two on trombones and one on the saxophone.

The band is famous for such hit singles as "You've Made Me So Very Happy", "Spinning Wheel" and "God Bless the Child."

Second ship called to save leaking oil from split barge

NEWINGTON, N.H. [UPI] — The Coast Guard yesterday called in a new barge to take on more than a million gallons of industrial heating oil from a 340-foot barge which split almost in half Monday night while loading at the Atlantic Terminal pier.

No more than a few gallons of oil leaked out when the Bouchard 105 cracked from side to side across an empty compartment, Coast Guard Capt. John Ekman told a news conference at the terminal.

"There has been a negligible leakage of the fuel into the Piscataqua River," Ekman said. He said the crack ranged from six feet wide on deck to a fraction of an inch near the keel.

The Coast Guard said about 31,000 barrels or 1.3 million gallons of No. 6 heating oil remained on board at midday. About 6,000 barrels were pumped off into a large storage tank Monday night.

Further offloading awaited the arrival of a representative of the ship builder and a barge from the Coast Guard's Portland, Maine station. The Coast Guard gave no indication how long the offloading would take.

The Coast Guard's Atlantic Strike Team was flown to Newington Monday night to help local Coast Guardsmen put a flotation boom around the vessel, which stayed afloat throughout the incident.

The Bouchard 105 is an eight-year-old vessel with a capacity of 102,662 barrels. It is owned by Steam Tug Alladin, Inc., of Hicksville, Long Island, N.Y., and is operated by Bouchard Transportation Inc., at the same address.

In January, 1977, another Bouchard-owned barge ran aground after it became stuck in ice-clogged waters at the mouth of the Cape Cod Canal in Buzzards Bay.

More than 10,000 gallons of heating oil was spilled before most of the barge's cargo was offloaded to another barge. Area shellfishing beds were closed.

Two women who led the successful fight to keep the world's largest oil refinery out of nearby Durham, N.H., said the accident was a warning of what could happen if a loaded barge ran into trouble in the Piscataqua, the river which widens into New Hampshire's one major port at Portsmouth.

"We can all thank God it wasn't full of oil," said Executive Councilor Dudley, D-Durham. When she was a legislator she led the fight that kept Aristotle Onassis' planned refinery out of town, despite Onassis' strong backing from Gov. Meldrim Thomson.

"We're just darn lucky," said Nancy Sandberg, former chairperson of Save Our Shores, a citizens group which fought the Onassis proposal.

She said the accident illustrates the dangers of having oil tankers and barges coming into New Hampshire ports. "How many times has Thomson said accidents like this never happen. Well, they do," Sandberg said.

Kleindienst testifies before grand jury

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Richard G. Kleindienst, former attorney general in the Nixon administration, testified for almost two hours yesterday before a federal grand jury investigating an insurance swindle involving the Teamsters Union.

Afterwards, Kleindienst spoke briefly with reporters and said: "I appeared as a witness, not as a suspect."

Kleindienst received a suspended jail sentence of one month in 1974 for inaccurate testimony before a U.S. Senate committee at his 1972 confirmation hearing.

Teamster President Frank E. Fitzsimmons was scheduled to appear before the grand jury later yesterday.

Both Kleindienst and Fitzsimmons had testified previously before a Senate committee and gave contradictory versions of their roles in the 1976 insurance dealings of Joseph Hauser who was awarded a $23 million contract for health insurance for Teamster members.

Hauser was later convicted of bribery of two union officials and attempting to bribe two others. He was sentenced to 30 months in prison and is free pending appeal.

Kleindienst told the committee he used his friendship with Fitzsimmons to get the contract and said he received a fee of $250,000 for interceding on Hauser's behalf. He said he split the fee with two members of a Washington public relations firm.

Fitzsimmons agreed that he talked three times with Kleindienst about the matter but said he did not give any assurance Hauser would be awarded the contract. He said he did not consider Kleindienst a "great personal friend" who would influence his decisions as a trustee of the health and welfare funds.

Kleindienst was asked by reporters yesterday about the apparent contradictions in their Senate testimony.

"Make of that what you will," he said. "I'd just as soon not talk about it."

The former attorney general declined to discuss his grand jury testimony. Grand jury probes in the initial stages are protected by law from public scrutiny so there will be no immediate disclosure of the testimony of either Kleindienst or Fitzsimmons.

Hauser is now being sued by the Teamsters for allegedly siphoning off $7 million in premiums.

The General Accounting Office has disclosed that the Prudential Insurance Co., not Hauser's firm, made the lowest bid for the contract.

Kleindienst admitted in 1974 he testified inaccurately at confirmation hearings about aspects of the Nixon administration's handling of an International Telephone and Telegraph case.

U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. sentenced Kleindienst to a month in jail and a $100 fine but suspended both sentences, calling Kleindienst a person of "high integrity" who was "universally respected and admired."

The evidence presented to the grand jury was gathered by a special "strike force" headed by U.S. Attorney Thomas Kotoski and was being presented by U.S. Attorney Ronald Rose.

Webster won't promise prosecution of agents

WASHINGTON [UPI] — FBI director-designate William Webster refused yesterday to promise he would push for criminal prosecution of agents for past illegal actions, saying such decisions are up to the Justice Department.

Rounding out two days of testimony at the Senate Judiciary Committee's confirmation hearings, the federal judge from St. Louis said he would report any such activity he might turn up and take disciplinary action where FBI regulations, rather than criminal laws, were violated.

But under questioning by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, Webster declined to commit himself to a blanket recommendation for prosecution of FBI agents involved in such illegal activities as warrantless wiretapping and mail opening.

"One has to look at each file on its own face," Webster said.

"Many agents may have been asked to do things or directed to do something that appeared lawful at the time. That would have to be taken into consideration by the Department of Justice."

Metzenbaum pressed him: "If you made that distinction, would that not mean a substantial number of Watergate violators would have been exempted? The fact is, the small fry got the stiffest sentences."

Webster acknowledged that acting in good faith might well be grounds only for reducing penalties and not for preventing prosecution, but still insisted that decision would not be his.

"Are you saying you will not go back and provide stern enforcement of the law against those violations by those FBI agents?" Metzenbaum asked. "That commitment doesn't come through."

"The reason it doesn't come through," Webster responded, is that the FBI director does not decide which cases to prosecute and "I'm under the impression that no recommendations are made" by the director.

After Webster finished testifying, and with Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., presiding alone, the spokesperson for a coalition of 80 activist groups voiced opposition to the nomination.

Ted Glick, national coordinator for the Peoples Alliance which grew out of Bicentennial Year demonstrations, said Webster does not appear to "know a great deal about the abuses that have gone on" or appear to be prepared to deal with them.

DeConcini defended the nominee, saying, "It seems to me Judge Webster did make it clear he did not condone that activity."

Another witness, professor Leon Friedman of Hofstra Law School, told the committee: "The only way for adequate controls to be established over the FBI is for Congress to lay down a charter that allows it to do the job it was set up for, namely the investigation of federal crimes.

"It is not enough to assume that the problem ... will be solved by the appointment of a good person at the head of the agency."

Lakers win

RICHFIELD, Ohio [UPI] — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar connected on 14 of 22 field goals in scoring a game-high 31 points and Adrian Dantley added 25 last night in leading the Los Angeles Lakers to a 116-107 win over the Cleveland Cavaliers.

The victory snapped a seven-game losing streak on the road for the Lakers.

Los Angeles took a 31-23 first period lead with Jabbar hitting on his only field goal attempt of the period. The Cavs dropped in 14 of 20 from the field in the second period, and still trailed 60-51 at halftime as Jabbar countered with 12 second-period points.

The Lakers upped their lead to 100-79 with 9:23 left in the game, but the Cavs, with Bobby Smith and Walt Frazier combining for 13 points, outscored LA 17-5 in the next four minutes to cut the lead to 105-96.

Rookie Norm Nixon added 29 points for Los Angeles, while Frazier topped Cleveland with 27 points.

Knicks lose

NEW YORK [UPI] — Dan Issel's 10-foot bank shot with 2:18 remaining in the game last night lifted Denver into the lead en route to a 119-115 victory over the New York Knicks behind 14 points by David Thompson.

Issel scored eight to his 27 points in the last four minutes to help the Nuggets repulse a frantic Knick comeback which brought them the load after trailing 85-67 late in the third quarter.

Thompson scored 23 first-half points as the Nuggets raced to a 59-53 lead, outrebounding the Knicks 28-17 — with Issel scoring 13 points mostly inside. After Denver outscored New York 26-14 in the first seven minutes of the third quarter, New York reserves rallied the Knicks to 12 straight points to close the gap to 85-79.

Bob McAdoo scored 10 points in the final period, and his jump shot with 4:05 remaining gave them a 107-105 lead. But Issel's inside play proved too much.

Maravich hurt

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Pete Maravich, the NBA's leading scorer, was carried from the floor of the Louisiana Superdome on a stretcher Tuesday night with 4:12 to play in the Buffalo-New Orleans Jazz game. The Jazz won 114-95.

Maravich, lost his balance passing the ball between his legs at mid-court and fell heavily on his right knee. He lay on the court, holding his knee, as play continued around him until his New Orleans teammates could control the ball and call time out.

Maravich had 26 points and New Orleans was leading 105-82 at the time.

He was rolled on a portable stretcher to a locker room and an ice pack was applied to his knee.

Stars, 7-4

ATLANTA [UPI] — Eric Vail scored two goals, including the 100th of his career, to give the Atlanta Flames a 7-4 victory over the Minnesota North Stars last night.

The third period was highlighted by a stick fight between Atlanta's Bill Clement and Minnesota's Jerry Engele which left Clement with a gash above his eye that required six stitches.

Dean Talafous put the North Stars ahead 1-0 early in the first period, but Guy Chouinard, Bob MacMillan and Vail all erupted for goals, giving the flames a 3-1 advantage going into the second period.

The North Stars picked up steam, scoring three goals to Atlanta's two in the second period. When Kent-Erik Andersson scored for Minnesota at 12:16, putting his team within one of the flames, Atlanta goalie Dan Bouchard was replaced by Yves Boulanger, who held the North Stars scoreless. Vail made his 100th at 5:36 of the second period on a power play.

similar proposal was opposed by many.

Another policy proposal by Puryear, which he said was implemented by Gluckstern, was the reallocation of faculty positions according to faculty-student ratios and other variables. The five-year long-range plan proposed by Puryear last spring met considerable opposition from faculty.

Puryear said records in the provost's office show that Gluckstern had reallocated 13 positions in 1974 without opposition Puryear received last spring.

Puryear said he came to believe that the perogatives of a white provost could not be assumed by a black provost like himself.

Celtics win, 104-94

By CURT P. KOHLBERG
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Last night the Boston Celtics produced a fine overall team effort and it resulted in a 104-94 win over the Indian Pacers at the Springfield Civic Center.

Star of the game Sidney Wicks displayed flashes of brilliance as he defensively outclassed and outmaneuvered both Ron Behagen and Mike Bantom, while pouring in twenty-three points of his own.

Indiana, playing without the services of guards Ricky Sobers (3 game suspension for punching) and John Williamson trades to Nets, started Earl Tatum and Mike Flynn in the backcourt against John Havlicek and Dave Bing of the Celtics.

In this matchup of youth versus experience, the Celtics came up with the short end of the stick primarily because Bing produced what was in this reporter's mind his worst game as a Celtic.

He was sluggish as he brought up the ball, he missed easy jumpers, and he fouled out early in the fourth quarter, thus enabling Kevin Stacom to see action.

In this instance, he took advantage of it and played "heads up" basketball. Havlicek also played well in spots, to the delight of many local fans who have supported "Hondo" throughout his illustrious career.

But, some clutch buckets from Flynn and the aerial wizardry of Tatum and his 30 foot swishing jumpers from "downtown" kept the Pacers in the game.

The Celtics won the game on the boards. Dave Cowens ripped down key rebounds, which often resulted in a quick two for the Green.

Cedric Maxwell sparked the club with his offensive boardwork, and "Steamin' Sidney" supplied the rest of the fireworks, which notched the Celts first victory after four consecutive losses.

Jo Jo White, who decided not to dress for the game, ended his streak for playing in consecutive games at 488, a club record. The fourth place Celtics were also without the services of Curtis Rowe, who did not dress because of swelling on his sensitive left knee.

A Random Note: The local bookies made the Celtics a 4½ point favorite prior to tip-off. The Celtics have not been "covering" the spread very often this year, and with Dave Cowens listed as a doubtful starter (prior to playing three full quarters) and realizing that Indiana has five more wins than the Celtics. Indiana obviously became the public's choice with the bookies, and is so often the case, the public went down in defeat. Basketball is a very hard sport to constantly beat for local gamblers, because when a bunch of old-timers like the Celtics get together to throw a round ball through some strings, anything can happen and usually does.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1 — Born today, you may have a difficult time establishing and, for a while, maintaining, a stable marriage. You are extremely independent and will find it anathema to compromise or give in. Ultimately, because whatever you attempt to do you end by doing well, you will have a fine marriage, having come to it with eyes open and in full support of each other.

You are partly the free and easygoing youngster, no matter how old you grow or how mature others insist you become. You behave maturely when necessary, and you are able to hark back to childhood for that wondrous attitude that makes all things deeper, broader, more worthwhile than without it. You do not insist that everything be fun; you do desire all experiences to be worthy of the time and attention they take.

You are a lover of travel, change, and excitement. You have a way with the young and can bring them into any activity.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Love will find a way today. Don't despair; acknowledge another's presence and prepare for change.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – Lead the way thoughtfully and with dignity in intellectual concerns.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – Caution need not be abandoned, but be braver in your approach to something new.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – Parents and children may have much to thank each other for today. Look ahead to better times.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - - Make the most of a bad lot this morning. You may not be able to enter circles that would help you.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Dislike of authority could cause difficulties today, especially if you are traveling.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Friends ask favors you may not be able to grant now. Explain, gain understanding; ask for a raincheck.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – If you would better yourself, financially or personally, listen to wisdom from afar.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – Success in preoccupation rather than occupation makes today special. Share benefits with one in need.

January harsh month for hoops...

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

While everyone was digging out of the January storms, UMass almost became buried in its own. But fortunately, it is not a state emergency.

For the month of January, UMass was a dismal 1-5 which is quite tragic considering they went undefeated 8-0 the month of December.

For the record, the Minutemen lost a disappointing game against Rutgers in Springfield 78-74, almost got blownout by an impressive Villanova squad 71-64, absolutely played the worst game of the year in that famed Hartford Civic Center crash 56-49, but quite possibly played its best game of the year despite a losing effort against 9th ranked Providence 50-49.

At the Colonial Classic this past weekend, UMass determined to play Holy Cross in the final, finally blew out an opponent, Boston College 88-64. But, in the final, UMass, only behind by 1 point at halftime 35-34, succumbed in the late stages of the game and lost to Holy Cross 76-63.

In between, two games at Penn State and Duquesne were postponed due to poor flying conditions from New York City to Pennsylvania. During the snowstorm, UMass was stranded for the whole weekend. The games have been rescheduled for Feb. 20 at Duquesne and Feb. 21 at Penn State.

Coach Jack Leaman is less than ecstatic about his team's performance during January. When asked about his team's development during that period, he said, "How can I be happy with a team that's gone 1-5."

"We have an awful lot of work to be done. At times we can look great but in other spots, we just fall apart. Losing to Providence and Holy Cross doesn't mean anything. It all comes down to the EAA playoffs in March. At least, we proved we can play with teams of that caliber," said Leaman.

Team captain Derick Claiborne said the team is looking forward to playing home in the Cage again but said going 1-5 was not the end of the world.

"During January we played some pretty tough teams away from home. During four of the games, we missed some chances to take the lead and win those games and we were only seriously outplayed in another," said Claiborne.

"I think our offense has been better developed since the beginning of the year and our defense has improved. I think we're going to come on strong once we start playing at home," he said.

Rutgers handed UMass its first loss of the season and first setback in the Eastern Athletic Association (EAA).

UMass, in that game held a halftime lead 37-34 and continued to up its lead 45-40 with 17 minutes left to go in the game before Rutgers exploded for an 18-2 spurt in the five minute span.

Leading that spurt were Boston born, James Bailey who scored 21 points while teammates Hollis Copeland and Abdel Anderson scored 20 and 18 respectively.

UMass, down 58-47 with 11:58 left to go in the game, managed to sneak back to within three with 3:53 before Mark Haymore who scored 20 points fouled out with 2:53 left.

Against Villanova, UMass was down by 18 points in the first half but managed to get within eight before Haymore again fouled out. In that game Haymore scored 16, Mike Pyatt-14 and Len Kohlhaas and Alex Eldridge scored 10 apiece in the losing effort.

On January 17th, UMass played UConn at the Hartford Civic Center in a blinding snowstorm. Four of the players had a mild case of the flu, another, George Dennerlein had left the team, and another had a death in the family.

The result; a 56-49 setback to the Huskies. UMass shot 40 per cent for the game, 30 per cent for the second half, only scoring 21 points, shooting 7-23. The Huskies were playing without its leading scorer Joey Whelton.

"We got the hell kicked out of us. We didn't shoot, play defense, or rebound. Just atrocious," said Leaman.

The UMass team left the Hartford Civic Center at 11:45 p.m. that night. That following morning at 4 a.m., the roof of the Civic Center collapsed.

Almost completely opposite to the way they played against UConn, the Minutemen rebounded in impressive fashion against Providence, but only to lose in heartbreak fashion.

Providence, who had thrashed Holy Cross by 18 points a week earlier and were ranked 9th in the country, did not play well against UMass.

It took junior guard Dwight Williams, who scored only two points the entire second half, 14, total to hit a fast break jumper off a missed free throw by UMass' Mark Haymore, to ice the game for the Friars with only 9 seconds remaining.

Mike Pyatt who scored 12 points for the game, took the last shot, which could have won the game, but missed and Providence came down with the deflected rebound to win the game.

With 27 seconds to go, UMass had taken the lead 49-48 on a brilliant Mark Haymore (20 points) three point play. Twelve seconds later, Haymore had a chance to increase the lead as he went to the foul line. He missed the foul shot and Providence went on the fast break, enabling Williams to hit the game-winning shot.

"If we had beaten Providence," said Haymore, "and then Holy Cross, we would have been number one in New England. But the breaks didn't go our way during January," he said.

...but sun shone in December

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

December was a nice enough month. The weather was fairly balmy. Jackie Leaman was smiling quite a bit. The UMass men's basketball team was 8-0.

Fueled by Alex Eldridge's sleight of hand; sparked by Len Kohlhaas's "bully-boy" rebounding; propelled by Mike Pyatt's scoring; and inspired by Mark Haymore's rim-bound antics, the Minutemen five was too strong for Connecticut, 74-64; outlasted Bentley, 85-70; and ran away from Niagara (84-73) and Manhattan (88-74) to take the UConn Classic.

Eldridge's star shone the brightest during the month of December. The 6'2" senior guard from New York, NY, tied a school record for assists in a game with 15 against Connecticut. The other UMass player to dole out 15 was Joe DiSarcina (1969).

Boob followed that performance up with a 13 assist effort against the Falcons of Bentley, but he was only warming up for the UConn Tournament, were he scored 36 points, had 10 steals, grabbed six rebounds, and handed out 16 assists to win the Tournament's Most Valuable Player award by getting all but two of the votes cast by attending sportswriters.

Pyatt was named Eastern Athletic Association Player of the Week for his play against UConn and Bentley. Pyatt, who won the award once last year, hit for 43 points (19-36 shooting, 5-9 from the line), and grabbed 17 rebounds. At the time, the 6'6' senior forward was averaging 18.3 points and 6.8 rebounds.

Junior 6'8" forward Haymore was the most consistent performer through the month of December, and indeed the season, as he has led the nation (including UCLA and Kentucky) in field goal percentage since the beginning of the season.

Haymore, in the latest stats released by the NCAA, had a shooting percentage of .764, on 68-89 shooting, besting runnerup Mike O'Koren's .673. In the latest EAA stats Haymore was leading the leage with a .745 percentage. He has also led the league all season in FG percentage.

Kohlhaas, a 6'9" junior center, became a force on the boards in the last three games of the month, as he took down 38 rebounds against Bentley, Manhattan, Niagara, including 14 against the Purple Eagles in the championship of the UConn Classic.

Haymore scored 20 and Pyatt added 18 in a rugged UConn contest, but 6'4" junior swingman Brad Johnson was the key as he came off the bench to shoot 5-6 from the floor and score nine of his 12 total points

Wrestlers host meet in midst of streak

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The high-flying UMass wrestling team will have its first home meet of the season tonight at Boyden Auxiliary Gym as the Minutemen entertain Southern Connecticut and Union College in a tri-meet. The first match begins at 6:30.

UMass, winner in three of four meets last weekend, will open with Dana Rasmussen at 118 pounds and Tony Perry at 126 pounds. Co-captain Larry Otsuka will be at his usual 134 pound spot.

In the 142 pound weight class coach Dave Amato plans on using both Mike Carroll and Charley Rigoglioso.

"I think I'm going to have Rigoglioso wrestle against Southern Connecticut," said Amato. "Carroll will go against Union."

Timmy Fallon will wrestle at 150 pounds, and Amato will again use two wrestlers in the 158 pound class as Monty Payette faces So.Conn. while Mike Mitrowski wrestles Union.

Rounding out the UMass lineup, Fred Rheault will go at 167 pounds, Bob Radowitz at 177 pounds, Bob Clark at 190 pounds, and John Allen will be the heavyweight.

Union College announced yesterday that because of injuries they will forfeit their bouts at 118 and 126 pounds. UMass is expected to handily beat Union, but Amato is taking no chances.

"They have a very good team and I don't plan on overlooking them," said the former UMass wrestling champion. "Our big meet will be with Southern Connecticut, though. They're ranked number two in New England."

If the Minutemen can put it all together against So.Conn., their ranking in New England should be significantly improved.

UMass, 3-9 on the season, seems finally to be on the move after eight straight opening losses. As the New England tournament rapidly approaches, Amato is still looking for the ten grapplers that will represent UMass. Amato has been generally going with freshmen this season, and in fact will use eight freshmen in the big Southern Connecticut tilt tonight.

Southern Connecticut coach Don Knaf knows that his squad will be facing a young team, but plans no special changes.

"Those UMass freshmen are all very capable wrestlers and all have good high school backgrounds," said Knaf. "I just hope that my kids don't take this lightly. Yale tied (nationally ranked) Rhode Island last week, and I'll bet it was because they took them lightly. We're not taking any chances with UMass, and we're giving this meet a great deal of thought."

Swimmers return home

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

It will be a doubleheader for swimming fans tonight, as both the men's and women's swimming teams from UMass will be taking on competition at home for the first time this year.

The men's team, under coach Bei Melamed, will be facing Tufts in a 4:00 dual at Boyden. The men are 2-1 going into the meet, following an 88-24 loss to the University of Maine at Orono last weekend.

However, Tufts should be a little closer meet for the team. Although they lost to Tufts last year, a big rivalry has developed, and UMass is "getting really psyched" for tonight, according to team members. "We'll be going all out" they said. "This is our most important meet of the year."

Following the men's meet, the women's team will be facing Bridgewater State College at 7:00 at NOPE.

"It should be a fine meet," according to Coach John Nunnelly, but Nunnelly is confident about coming out on top. Last year the team destroyed Bridgewater.

This year Nunnelly will be entering his swimmers in some different events than they usually swim. He'll also be giving team members a chance to get qualifying times for the New Englands, which are only two weeks away.

This will be the first competition for the team since their intensive training session over vacation, when they swam twice a day for three days. They have a 5-5-1 record to date.

Minutemen beat up Crusaders

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — A surging UMass hockey team showed the Crusaders of Holy Cross just what it can do when it gets a little fired-up last night at the Hart Center.

Trailing 2-0 after the first period, the Minutemen came storming back with a single tally in the second period and two more in the third and then hung on tight for a gutty 3-2 victory before 800 stunned fans.

The victory was the second straight for the Minutemen who have upped their record to 5-6-1 and now set their sights on big weekend contests against Merrimac and New Haven.

For the Minutemen this was a solid performance all the way around as they outshot the Crusaders 43-31, played tight defense for three periods and got some clutch goaltending from senior John Riley.

The Crusaders took the early lead at 3:14 of the opening period when Dan Bowman tipped a John Ross centering pass into the right corner. Paul Allen also got an assist.

The Cross went up 2-0 just 31 seconds later when Ross tipped in a Paul Drennan slap shot from 25 feet out.

From that point on however, Riley was simply magnificent in the nets as he stopped 31 shots and turned in yet another sterling performance.

Down 2-0 the Minutemen came out smoking in the second stanza and drew to within one, just five seconds into the period when center Don Murphy took a pretty centering pass from co-captain Bob White and beat Crusader goalie Mark Young with a low wrist shot from ten feet out.

Both teams then poured on the offense, but the period belonged to the goaltenders and soon became the "John Riley-Mark Young show.

Riley was brilliant as he stopped 10 shots including some toughies, but Young was magnificent. The freshmen goaltender turned aside 19 shots, including seven during a UMass poower play.

The Minutemen put all kinds of heat on Young late in the period but came up empty-handed, and entered the third period trailing by a goal.

They picked up the equalizer with just 39 seconds gone, when Nick Carney took a perfect centering pass from Joe Milan and fired a low wrist shot between Young's pads. John Peters picked up the other assist.

That same tandom of Milan and Carney connected for the game-winner nine minutes later. It came at 10:09, and it was a beauty.

Carney took a long pass from Milan just inside the blueline, wound up, and sizzled a low 40 feet slap shot between the legs of a surprized Young.

Armed with the slim one goal lead, the Minutemen did exactly what they had to do for the remaining 10 minutes. They combined solid forechecking, stubborn defense in their own end and good, clutch goaltending to preserve a hard-earned win.

The victory was the most satisfying of the year for the Minutemen who have suddenly, realized their potential, and now take dead aim at a possible playoff spot.

The Minutemen are currently in 12th place in the Western Division of ECAC Division 11. The top eight teams in the division will advance to the playoffs in March.

Gymmen outclass Cornell

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastic team soundly defeated Cornell University this past Sunday 187.00-168.41 at Curry Hicks Cage. The outcome was neither a surprise nor an unprediction to coach Swetman, who was more concerned at the time with the Syracuse meet this Saturday. Cornell in a sense was more of a warm-up for the gymmen after the long intersession break. UMass won every event, and after floor lead by five points, never once looked back to see if Cornell was still in the cage.

On floor, senior John Forshay won the event with an 8.65 only missing his press, which ultimately kept him from reaching the nines. Meanwhile, on the pommel horse Dave Kulakoff took command and produced the highest score of the meet, 9.45. The only competition from Cornell was Paul Blake who squeeked by Bob Donahue to place second.

The still rings event was won by freshman Dave Felleman with a very impressive 8.45 performance. Co-captain Dave Kulakoff also won the parallel bars with a very solid 8.00.

The long horse vaulting event was also won by another freshman, with a dream come true 9.10 for all-arounder Bob Lamb. Tommy Thomson concluded the meet with a very beautiful performance on the horizontal bar, showing only a little difficulty on his dismount.

Now all eyes look towards Syracuse as the gymmen travel to New York this weekend, which could prove to be the turning point in the successful season for the gymmen.

Hoopwomen scalp outmanned Chiefs

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It ain't what it used to be.

At one time, UMass-Springfield College women's basketball games were real nerve wracking affairs. The two area rivals used to go at it nip and tuck for 40 minutes.

But that was a few years back. In the meantime, the Minutewomen have pulled far ahead of their foe in terms of talent. As a result, the games have lost quite a bit of their luster.

The script remained the same last night in the Cage. UMass burned the Chiefs with a 42 point first half, and then breezed through the final 20 minutes en route to a 67-54 win.

The loss atoned for a two-point defeat the Minutewomen suffered last season in the quarterfinals of the Easterns, and also proved that UMass could, indeed, play an inspired brand of basketball.

"We were ready to play basketball tonight," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "We haven't been playing good ball this season but tonight we finally put it together."

Leading the way was Sue Peters. The sophomore guard kept her points per game average above 20 with a 22 point performance. Her offensive repertoire included fast break layups and jumpers as she also led the Minutewomen with 10 rebounds and handed out three assists.

Maura Supinski added 11 points and seven rebounds, while Cheryl Carey had 10 points, six rebounds and four assists. Debbie McCulloch came off the bench to add six points and six rebounds.

To a large degree, this game was decided on the boards. UMass outrebounded the Chiefs by a whopping 39-19 margin, including a decisive 21-8 advantage on the offensive end. Six of the Minutewomen's hoops were scored off offensive rebounds.

The result was never in doubt. UMass jumped off to a quick 10-4 lead as it was able to break Springfield's full-court press with ease.

The Minutewomen extended the margin to 23-12 with 10:54 left on a Cathy Harrington (nine points, four rebounds) jumper. Both teams then went cold for a six minute spell, during which UMass scored just two points to the Chiefs four. After the cold as ice time, the Minutewomen turned a 25-16 lead into a 32-16 edge with a seven point string.

A Barb Breedlove basket interrupted the skein, and UMass then went on to outscore Springfield, 10-4, during the remainder of the first half to take a 42-22 point lead in the locker room.

The rest of the game was academic, as Ozdarski used her bench freely and let her starters get some rest.

Laura Hoffman led Springfield with 11 points, while Lori Clark, who burned the Minutewomen in last season's loss with 24 points, was held to just seven. Three other Chiefs scored six points apiece.

As far as the UMass backcourt situation was concerned, Mary Halleran and Julie McHugh split the duties evenly beside Peters. Halleran, who drew the starting assignment, handed out five assists and played a pesky brand of defense. McHugh had three assists.

"I told them before the game that they'd both share the duties," Ozdarski said of the two guards, "and they were content to each play 20 minutes. They can go out and give 100 per cent out there."

A big cheer came up from the crowd when with 11 seconds left, Lu-Ann Fletcher scored her only two points of the game on a jumper. The senior is still working her way back into playing shape after undergoing knee surgery.

DuBois Dept. Statement Concerning Professor Paul Puryear

(The following is the statement made by the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American studies concerning the forced resignation of Vice Chancellor and Provost Paul Puryear)

The Department is pained and disillusioned by the chain of events culminating in the forced resignation of Vice Chancellor and Provost Paul Puryear from the administration of this University. These events represent the most discreditable episode in the recent history of this school.

As a consequence of what has happened, the University is the poorer and everyone loses: the stature of the Chancellor is diminished; the professional reputation of the Provost defamed; and the general prestige and credibility of much of the faculty permanently tarnished. And, at a time when it can scarcely afford it, the University is losing the services of an administrator of vision, character and unquestioned ability.

This is all the more painful and destructive because none of it was necessary and ought not have happened, especially in a community claiming to conduct its affairs in accordance with principles of reasoned and enlightened behavior and humane and decent traditions.

There has been much talk about the intransigence, authoritarianism and rigidity and style of the Provost. These arguments do not account for what has happened. The fate of Provost Puryear, unfortunately has less to do with his style, than with his race and with the fact that he consistently took clear and unequivocal positions which were not popular with certain recondite and self-serving interests among the faculty. For that reason the Provost has labored in isolation and in an atmosphere of hostility and obstruction, almost from his first day on this campus. Indeed, organized opposition to his presence began before he even set foot here, as did the widespread racist remarks about a black takeover. It is also clear, that despite the criticism of the Provost's personal style, the sustained, vocal and obstructionist resistance to his policies, which came mainly from the Faculty Senate and elements within the College of Arts and Sciences, was based on opposition to his attempts to move the campus more into line with the imperatives of a changing and shrinking student population and a diminishing fiscal base; changes which inevitably threatened the interests and traditional prerogatives of entrenched faculty groups.

The harassment and hostility to which he has been subject does this community no credit. His resignation is a blow to the morale of the black community even as it opens our eyes. It can not help but have a profoundly negative effect on our attitude towards this community.

In all this, Provost Puryear has conducted himself with a dignity and forbearance that is admirable. He has concerned himself with issues of substance rather than of personality; he has been forthright and candid; and even his critics have not accused him of being self-serving. He has earned our admiration and respect.

It will stand as a permanent and indelible blot on the professional prestige of this community that it did not have the resources of tolerance, disinterested altruism, and vision that would have averted this dismal situation.

Who Killed Malcolm X ?

By ALAN BERGER

Malcolm X

This article first appeared in the Real Paper, copyright the Real Paper, Inc. 1978.

The assassination of Malcolm X thirteen years ago left in its wake a trail of unanswered questions. Some of these were legal questions and some were larger, political questions. The standing legal verdict on the assassination holds that three men, forming a conspiracy, were guilty of the act. And since two of the three were well-known Black Muslim "enforcers," the public has accepted the obvious implication — that the murder was ordered, planned, and carried out solely by the Black Muslims as the culmination of that group's vendetta against the apostate, Malcolm X.

Yet, in the last few days of his life, Malcolm told people close to him that recent events had "led him to believe that the plotters of his death were much bigger than the Muslims." Malcolm had what he considered sound reasons for this belief. The previous summer he had been poisoned in the main dining room of the Cairo Hilton Hotel in Egypt. Malcolm was certain this was not the work of the Black Muslims; he had grounds for attributing this attempt on his life to the CIA. Less than two weeks before his death, he was denied entry into France forever as an "undesirable person," possibly because French officials feared he would be assassinated on French soil. Malcolm assumed that these signs of danger were the inevitable consequence of his political effort to "internationalize" the situation of black people in America by taking their case to the United Nations.

The assassination itself and the trial that followed almost a year later produced a myriad of disturbing indications that two innocent men were convicted and that undercover agents of the New York Police Force and the FBI may have played an instrumental role in the case.

Attorney William Kunstler has recently submitted affidavits to a New York court intended to show that new evidence unearthed since the final appeal in the case constitutes grounds for obtaining a new trial.

One of the three men originally convicted, Thomas Hagan, has now volunteered to name four other men who acted with him in the murder. Hagan says that Thomas Johnson and Norman Butler, the two men convicted with him, are innocent. Attorney Kunstler has submitted Hagan's affidavit along with another that includes the transcript of testimony given by police undercover agent Gene Roberts, who demonstrated during a 1971 conspiracy trial of twenty-one Black Panthers in New York City that he had been a bodyguard to Malcolm X and possessed crucial knowledge about Malcolm's murder which had been withheld from the original trial.

Thus far the media have given little attention to the initial motions for retrial, but if Kunstler is successful in negotiating the successive legal stages leading to a new trial, then the American public and what is likely to become an international audience may be exposed to a new chapter — and not the least damning — in the continually unfolding story of politically inspired criminal actions carried out by organizations that were established to gather intelligence and to enforce the law.

A little after three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, February 21, 1965, Malcolm X walked out onto the stage of the Audubon Ballroom on Broadway and 166th Street in

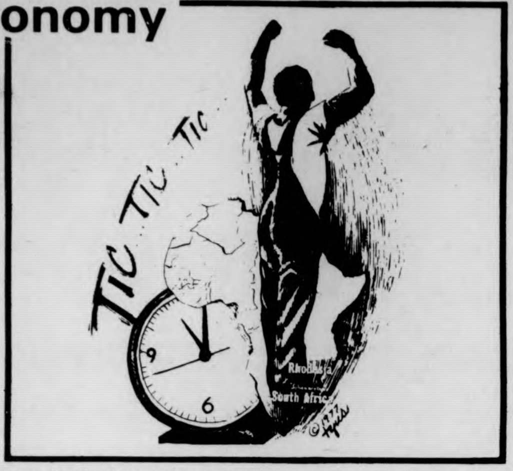
Political Uprisings Erode South African Economy



NEW YORK (Southern Africa-LNS) — A few years ago the headlines would have been as shrill as the attacks would have been extraordinary. But not any more. After more than a year and a half of school boycotts, demonstrations and daily clashes between angry blacks and police, bombs and arson have also become an acknowledged element of daily life in South Africa. And reports in the South African press are almost laconic: "Cape bombing — Two security guards were allegedly held down by students while a petrol bomb was tossed into the Bantu Administration Board Building in Zwelitsha near King William's town last night;" "Pamphlet bombs explode in City;" Blast outside Johannesburg police station;" "Blast in train: guard hurt;" "Bomb blast at Carlton."

The last three headlines all hit the newsstands during a single week. In the first two weeks of December, four bombing attacks were reported in the Johannesburg area alone. And with such episodes now a standard part of the political landscape, the question addressed with increasing candor by the captions of South African government and industry is how the once-proud economy can hold up.

"The insurance industry and the Government have had high-level talks on the possibility of setting up a national riot or urban terrorism fund," The Star reported in late November. "Insurance spokesmen said the potential for loss by companies was 'astronomical' and for this reason firms were unwilling to offer riot coverage. Another executive said bluntly: "We don't see ourselves offering urban terrorism cover."

Insurance may be one of the lesser worries besetting the South African economy. But it is symptomatic. So was a 50-page supplement put out by the Financial Mail, South Africa's equivalent of the Wall Street Journal, on November 10 — its cover featuring the word SECURITY in two-inch high red letters, right below the fangs of a snarling attack dog.

"There are still people who think that the 'troubles that first bubbled over in Soweto last year will go away, when the evidence is that they could get far worse before they get better," the supplement's forward warned. The next 49 pages of advice on alarm systems, guns private guard services, and various gadgets make it clear that "the evidence" has created at least one new growth industry.

But the rest of the economy is not flourishing. The signs for the future are not auspicious. And the growth of black resistance to apartheid is reflected in the statistics about rising inflation (11 percent for 1977) and sinking profits.

It shows also in the unsettled mood of major sectors of South African industry and consumers. As, for instance, when one newspaper headlines "Swingabout in migration hits house building." With whites no longer flocking to the country at a rate of 30,000 a year, the article explains, experts now calculate a net loss of 2,000 white citizens for 1977 and a "deep slide in demand for new homes for white families" in 1978.

The impact of political resistance shows even more in the increasing pressure from abroad, as the United Nations seriously contemplates an oil embargo and major corporations talk about cutting bait.

South African officials, in response, boast bravely about stockpiles of oil and the wonders of coal gasification. But independent researcher Bernard Rivers sounds considerably more convincing when he estimates that no more than six to nine months' supply of oil has been stored.

Officials also make a point of shrugging off recent announcements by several western companies that they are pulling back from further involvement in South Africa. But the changing climate seems clear as Polaroid announces an end to its vaunted "experiment" and a vice president of Citibank proclaims, "We are certainly not going to put any new money in there." Only last spring Citibank was annointed as South Africa's most important and faithful U.S. banking ally, after Chase Manhattan showed signs of getting cold feet.

Talk is cheap. Corporations have always shown a willingness to indulge in a little from time to time...as long as they could also indulge in cheap South African labor and spectacular South African profit margins. But statistics suggest that at least some corporations may now be reevaluating their positions.

According to a major study by the U.S. Congressional Research Service released in early December, U.S. corporations which formerly plowed 60 percent of their South African earnings back into increased investments in apartheid are now shipping 65 percent of their profits home. The study predicts that power and transport will be the first sectors of the South African economy to falter because of a shortage of foreign capital. And that this in turn will make investment in mines and factories less attractive.

The dollars are not coming back to the U.S. because corporate managers have suddenly been afflicted by pangs of conscience after years of reaping profits from white supremacy. A University of Delaware study suggests quite another reason. Ranking countries around the world on a "political risk index" for prospective investors, the study shows South Africa plummeting from the "moderate risk" deep into the "prohibitive risk" category over the next three to seven years.

U.S. activists who have long called on American corporations to leave South Africa are currently mounting a nationwide campaign focusing on general economic disengagement. They are beginning to find an unlikely but powerful ally in the figures now turning up on the pages of the financial press.

South Africa Building Uranium Plant

The Pretoria regime plans to build a plant to enrich uranium to serve as fuel for nuclear reactors, the Dec. 29 London Times reported. When completed, the enriched uranium produced by the projected facility could be diverted to making nuclear weapons.

The South African government is holding up announcement of the decision because it is debating the size of the project. Reportedly, it is considering either a plant with an output of about 5000 tons of enriched uranium a year or one with about half that production.

"It seems likely that for reasons of speed and cost the government will opt for the smaller project," the Times wrote. "It would be the sixth uranium enrichment plant in the world. The others have been or are being built by Britain, the U.S., the Soviet Union, the Netherlands and France. It would be constructed at Valindaba, where a pilot plant is already in operation."

The govenment claims that the enriched uranium would be only used as fuel for a large nuclear electrical generating plant under construction by a French consortium near Cape Town. But the diversion of only a fraction of the output could be utilized for a significant number of nuclear weapons. There would be no safeguards to prevent this except the word of the racist regime.

Last year, the Soviet Union announced that South Africa was engaged in preparations for testing nuclear weapons. The Pretoria regime denied the charges, but reportedly it postponed the planned tests as a result of pressure from Western governments, particularly the U.S. South Africa is believed to have accumulated weapons-grade uranium as a by-product of an experimental nuclear reactor supplied by the U.S. Until recently the U.S. had been regularly supplying fuel for this reactor.

Largely as a result of U.S. coperation in the past, South Africa has engineers and scientific personnel capable of designing a uranium enrichment plant. With about one-fourth of the world's known reserves of uranium minerals. South Africa is also a major producer of uranium ore.

British Judge Condones Racist Remarks

NEW YORK (LNS) — The right-wing movement in Britain claimed another victory in January in its accelerating campaign to stir up animosity against nonwhites and immigrants in the country. The head of the British judiciary refused to dismiss a criminal court judge who ruled that the use of racial epithets in public speeches is not unlawful, but a right of free speech. The judicial head made this decision in the face of demands for the judge's ouster made by more than 100 members of Parliament and religious and community groups and despite Britain's law specifically banning "incitement to racial hatred."

The controversy erupted as Judge Neil McKinnon presided over the trial of John Kingsley Read, a former leader of the racist National Front Party, and now the head of an equally reactionary group, the Democratic National Party. Read was charged under the statute outlawing "incitement to racial hatred" for a public speech in which he lambasted nonwhite immigration and urged repatriation of immigrants already in the country. He was acquitted by the jury.

In charging the jury, McKinnon said that use of the words "niggers, wogs and coons" by the defendant (or by anyone else, he implied) in a public speech was not a violation of the law. The Australian-born judge said that the change against Read dealth with instigators attempting to whip up hatred but not with exhortations aimed at "stemming immigration or advocating repatriation." Since practically all nonwhites in Britain are relatively recent immigrants, most racist attacks are carried out in the name of "stemming immigration." So the judge's interpretation would appear to make the law virtually unenforceable.

On the other hand, those who oppose Judge McKinnon contend that Read's praise of the killing of an Asian youth by another Asian youth, as "one down and a million to go", in his speech, was clearly an incitement to racial hatred.

Read asserted at the trial that he really meant no harm in his speech. He said that he used offenseive words in a humorous vein. The audience laughed at them, he said, and no violence followed.

"In this England of ours at this moment we are allowed to have our own views still, thank goodness," McKinnon told the jury. "And long may it last." In dismissing the case, Judge McKinnon said to Read: "I wish you well."

Members of Parliament who signed a motion demanding the judge's removal joined many other citizens in Britain who denounced the judge and called his statements "an affront to human rights."

Mississippi ACLU Drops Klan Case

And we're also suing 'cause my client,too, is a victim of reverse discrimination...
Corky

NEW YORK (LNS) — While Ku Klux Klan leaders are gloating that they have provoked a hemmorage of support from the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), one deep south ACLU chapter has broken ranks with the national policy of handling KKK cases.

The Mississippi chapter of the ACLU has decided not to take a case defending the Klan's right to hold an "Americanism rally" at a Gulfport, Mississippi high school. However, the national office of the ACLU, which has the prerogative to take up any case an affiliate rejects, may represent the Klan instead, according to the organization's legal director in New York.

Dick Johnson, president of the ACLU's Mississippi chapter told LNS that his affiliate was compelled to change its mind due to pressure from the Gulfport school board and local high school students who opposed Klan activity at the high school. He also cited the resignation of 10 of the Mississippi chapter's 21 state board members following a prior decision to defend the Klan, as a contributing factor in the decision. The ACLU's national board will decide soon whether the national office will take the case.

But there are indications that this decision may be a foregone conclusion. Bruce Ennis, ACLU Legal Director, told LNS that not only does he believe the ACLU should support the Klan in this case, but "most of the national leadership believe the ACLU should take that case."

"If free speech means anything," Ennis told LNS, "it means any free speech. We believe everyone has the right to express an opinion."

Moreover, Mississippi chapter president Johnson told LNS he'd have no qualms if the national office decided to defend the Klan. "I feel the national office could legitimately determine that first amendment rights were primary. I personally would have no real problems with that decision."

In any event, Ennis says that the ACLU's firm support of the Klan's rights will ultimately attract support for his organization rather than lose it. "In the long run it will not hurt us but help us," he said. "for the public will realize that the ACLU is a principled organization" which will not be compromised.

Up to now this has not been the case. The ACLU's legal support for the Klan has triggered vehement criticism, a severe drop in financial contributions and mass resignations — 3,000 in the past five months.

And in a Christmas letter mailed to Klan supporters, Klan national director David Duke credits his organization for much of the ACLU's decline in support. Citing the ACLU's legal defense of the Klan's organizing of white marines at Camp Pendleton, Calif. and elsewhere, Duke boasts that the Klan has "caused the basically anti-white ACLU to lose 40 percent of their support," and chalks this up as one of the Klan's major accomplishments for 1977.

Many people have agreed that the Klan's real purpose in using the ACLU is to destroy it. Still others have argued that the issue is not the Klan's right to speak freely but its unsavory history of publicly advocating and often fostering racial violence and mayhem.

Palestinians Exiled in Squalid Camps

REPRINTED FROM THE GUARDIAN

By SHEILA RYAN
Second of a series

The Palestinian people are a principal factor in any solution to the Middle East conflict. This series examines the people behind the headlines — where and how they live, the ties uniting them as a nation and the political organizations participating in their struggle for self-determination.

Today half the Palestinians are living outside Palestine. Among this 1.7 million population of exiles are those who were driven from their homes in 1948, and their children. Another sector is made up of people expelled from Palestine as a result of the June 1967 war, and the children born to them since.

Not all of the actual refugees live outside of Palestine, however — roughly a third of the refugees from 1948 are living in parts of Palestine occupied by Israel in 1967. They are gathered either in the huge complex of refugee camps in the Gaza Strip, or elsewhere in that tiny slice of land densely packed with refugees, and in the West Bank.

And to complicate the painful plight of these people, some have been made refugees twice. They were first driven from their towns and villages in Palestine in 1948 to the West Bank, then forced from their refugee camps into exile when the West Bank was occupied in 1967. There is even an uncalculated number of triple refugees, driven out in 1948 and then again in 1967, and for a third time thereafter by Israeli air raids or one of the many reactionary attacks on the Palestinian population in East Jordan.

REFUGEE LIFE

The quintessence of life in exile is the refugee camp, where approximately a third of all refugees live. (Reliable statistics are hard to come by, and all figures should be taken only as indicating a general range.) These settlements, numbering 63, are scattered through the countries adjacent to Palestine — Jordan, Syria and Lebanon — as well as in the West Bank and Gaza.

In an "old" camp housing primarily refugees from 1948, such as the sprawling Wahdat camp near Amman, Jordan, time has blurred the physical distinctions between the camp and other urban quarters which house the poor. Residents have added new rooms to their shelters and perhaps planted trees.

In a "new" camp accomodating refugees from the 1967 war, such as Bekaa in East Jordan, the sun still glints strangely on the metal shanties marching up and down the hillsides in rows of regimented precision, like some thousands of chicken coops in military drill.

The physical conditions of the refugee camps are truly miserable, with large families crowding into inadequate 1- or 2-room houses. A 1971 Lebanese survey found that 88 per cent of the camp residents there were packed in at 3.7 persons to a room or at even greater densities.

The poor housing offers little protection from the chill and rain of winter, leaving residents prey to pneumonia and bronchitis. In the summer, insects breed in the open sewers, which are the rule in the camps, spreading eye diseases and infant diarrhea, one of the most prevalent causes of death among children.

The shelters themselves crowd one upon another, for often land which was meant some time ago to house a certain number of people must today accomodate double that number.

The refugees will often reflect that their situation has improved since the few years immediately after the wars of 1948 and 1967, when standard housing for the newly homeless was a tent. But the conditions are still far below a level suitable for human habitation. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) is the arm of the world body responsible for services to the refugees. (At its origin, as the Palestinian nationalists rightly charged, the agency was intended by the U.S., which then dominated the UN, to "liquidate" the Palestine problem by permanently settling the refugees outside their homeland.) UNRWA provides shelters in the camps and a basic ration of food to "registered refugees" inside the camps and out, as well as health care and education.

Map of Israel Sinai Peninsula and surrounding area

The monthly food ration, consisting of 10 kilos of flour, 600 grams of sugar, 500 grams of rice and 375 grams of cooking oil — just enough to provide a bare 1500 calories a day of a diet deficient in vitamins and protein. Neither fresh fruits and vegetables nor any animal products are included. Special "vulnerable" categories of the population — including children, pregnant and nursing mothers and certain people in poor health — are eligible for extra food. But for those unable to supplement it, the standard ration is quite inadequate.

UNRWA also provides educational opportunities — highly prized since they offer a way out of the misery of the camps. Some 90 per cent of the children, however, must attend on double shifts.

The camps are not mere warehouses where Palestinians are stashed away to subsist on the international dole. They are places of misery, yes, but also centers of vibrant national culture, complex social life — and resistance. To a very marked extent, the refugee camps are the sites of transplanted villages, where the exiled Palestinians have maintained to an amazing degree their family and clan networks.

Very often the original allotment of space in the camps was actually made on the basis of village units which had fled en masse. In any case the preservation of elements of traditional culture is an important part of refugee camp life.

Some elements of this traditional culture, notably the restrictions placed on women, have served as barriers to full popular mobilization, and the Palestinian resistance has sought to erode its most extreme forms. On the other hand, the social cohesion in the Palestinian camps has prevented many forms of crime and antisocial behavior often associated with refugee life.

Rosemary Sayegh, an informed observer of the Palestinian refugee camps, has written, "Culturally (the camps) are a projection into a different environment of Palestinian villages. Economically they are dormitories of an 'ethnic proletariat' that has helped to swell both national output and private bank accounts in Beirut, Amman and, of course, Geneva."

In fact, most of the male refugees are employed usually at day labor. Frequently, however, they are unemployed. The 1971 Lebanese study previously referred to found that 75 per cent of the men between 16 and 45 were employed at least sometimes. (The civil war in Lebanon, which severely disrupted the economy, has since considerably raised the unemployment level.) The work available to the refugees, most often unskilled, is usually very poorly paid. In Lebanon, Palestinians plagued with restriction from government-issued "work permits" receive no social security and are generally discriminated against.

WORKING IN EXILE

Many Palestinian refugee workers in the Arab countries adjacent to Palestine have been able to find homes outside the refugee camps, though often in conditions little better than those of their compatriots in the camps. For others, education for professional or technical employment and a job in a distant Arab oil-producing state has been the road out of severe privation. Thus many families in refugee camps are kept from total destitution by wages remitted from a son working in a far-off country.

Jobs in the oil-producing states, especially Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the Gulf states and Libya, mushroomed in the late 1950s, when the oil boom in those desert countries began in earnest. Lacking an indigenous educated population to perform the new technical and professional jobs, they recruited large numbers of Palestinians, educated perhaps in UNRWA schools or in Arab universities offering free education to Palestinians. Most of the Palestinians hired left their families behind, although some were able to bring them along.

Today in Kuwait, the Palestinian population is estimated at 175,000 people. Material rewards are available, but at the price of great alienation. One Palestinian, making a comfortable living in Kuwait, remarked, "We can never forget that this place isn't our homeland." The expatriates in Kuwait are also discriminated against in many ways: they cannot buy land, open a business without a Kuwaiti partner or vote. (A 15-year waiting period is imposed for naturalization, with an additional 15-year waiting period for enfranchisement.)

After the wretched Palestinian flight of 1948, the UN estimated that 80 per cent of the refugees were entirely destitute. Most were peasants who had lost their land or manual laborers for whom no jobs existed in their places of exile. A much smaller group had a skilled trade, education, or some other means of livelihood. Only a small number had managed to bring capital out with them. This last group constitutes the core of the Palestinian bourgeoisie, clustered in Amman (especially in real estate, construction and import) and in Beirut (in a number of fields, including banking). Even the Palestinian bourgeoisie, however, has suffered from exile and insecurity in their new places of business.

Mass Protests Hit Sham Referendum in Chile

NEW YORK (LNS) — A referendum staged by Chilean President Augusto Pinochet gave Chileans the choice of voting for the "dignity of Chile" and the "legitimacy of the government" outlined under the country's flag, or for "international aggression" under a black flag of anarchism.

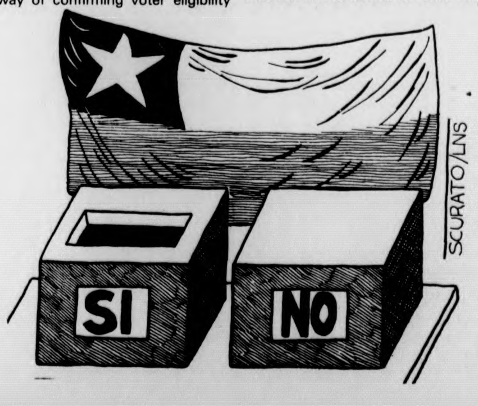
Pinochet received a 77 per cent vote of confidence January 4, after barraging Chileans with ads in the press and leaflets dropped from airplanes. The vote itself was conducted and counted solely by government agents who had no way of confirming voter eligibility since the military burned all voting records in the 1973 coup.

The vote was held shortly after the United Nations passed a resolution condemning Chile's military rule, and was used by Pinochet as a pretext for continuing internal political repression. Following the election, Pinochet announced at a "victory" rally: "No more elections or voting for ten years."

While the "plebiscite" gave little indication of the widespread opposition to Pinochet's rule, the reaction in the streets of Chile did just that. The two week period between the announcement of the vote and the vote itself saw the first sustained mass protests in Chile in the four years since the coup. Chileans marched through the cities chanting "Freedom!" "Chile, yes, junta no!"



A statement published by the Chilean MIR (Movement of the Revolutionary Left) said of the referendum:

"No one can bestow credibility on the 'Pinochet plebiscite' since to do so would be to support the silence of the dictatorship about the 2,500 people who have disappeared, the assassinations and tortures by the ex-DINA (secret police, now called CIN), the situation of the hundreds of political prisoners, the policy of super-exploitation, unemployment and misery of the masses. If the Chilean people could choose today between military dictatorship and freedom, they would sweep away the junta and with it the powerful national and foreign corporation owners it serves."

"The masses have no other road than that which they are following: to organize themselves to overthrow the dictatorship and freely elect a popular and revolutionary democratic government, with the participation of all the forces that contribute actively to the overthrow of the military junta."

Who Killed Malcolm X ?

New Evidence Suggests Government Complicity

Manhattan, across the street from the Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center. He came up behind the rostrum and gave the crowd of about 400 people the Islamic greeting As-salaam alaikum. To those who knew him, Malcolm appeared tense and tired. He was showing the strain of the past few weeks, a time during which his house had been fire-bombed with his wife and four children in it and he had received several warnings of an imminent attempt to assassinate him. For some time he and his friends had assumed and said publicly that Black Muslims, under orders from Elijah Muhammad, were out to kill him. Malcolm had heard rumors, he had seen signs, he had recieved letters. But just before he went on stage he had told his assistants waiting with him in the anteroom offstage that he was going to tell the audience that he had been hasty to accuse the Black Muslims of bombing his home. "Things have happened since that are bigger than what they can do," Malcolm said. "I know what they can do. Things have gone beyond that."

As Malcolm stood behind the rostrum, preparing to begin his talk, a scuffle broke out toward the back of the hall. There was an angry shout: "Nigger, get your hands out of my pocket!" All heads turned to see what was happening — and to see who had spoken this unforgivable word. Malcolm's bodyguards moved down from the stage toward the disturbance. Malcolm himself stepped out from behind the podium and toward the front of the stage. "Hold it! Hold it! Don't get excited," Malcolm said. "Let's cool it, brothers."

Then there was a muffled explosion at the rear of the hall and smoke from an incendiary device rose into the air. A woman screamed. A man in one of the front rows held up a sawed-off shotgun and fired into Malcolm's chest.

As Malcolm keeled over, two or three men were seen standing in the front row, "like a firing squad," pumping bullets into him. After he had fallen the gunmen emptied their revolvers into the inert body.

Now there was chaos in the ballroom. Women and young children shrieked. Mothers and fathers pulled their children to the floor and lay over them. Betty Shabazz, Malcolm's wife, looked to the safety of her four children and then rushed forward to the stage, shouting, "They're killing my husband!"

Some men threw themselves on the floor, some tried to use the literature tables for protection, and some chased the fleeing killers.

Two men were saved from the mob by policemen who had not been in the ballroom during the shooting. The first was "a thin-lipped, olive-skinned, Latin-looking man" whom eyewitnesses said was overcome by pursuers in the hall after he had emptied a gun into Malcolm's body. He was rescued from his pursuers by Patrolman Thomas Hoy.

In the morning edition of the next day's New York Times an account was given of Patrolman Hoy's actions. "Patrolman Thomas Hoy, 22, said he had been stationed outside the 166th Street entrance when 'I heard the shooting and the place exploded.' He rushed in, saw Malcolm lying on the stage, and 'grabbed a suspect' who he said some people were chasing. 'As I brought him to the front of the ballroom, the crowd began beating me and the suspect,' Patrolman Hoy said. He said he put this man — not otherwise identified later for newsmen — into a police car to be taken to the Wadsworth Avenue station."

The suspect arrested by Patrolman Hoy never was identified, never appeared in court, and was never seen nor heard about again. Moreover, he already began to disappear from the afternoon (or late city) editions of the New York newspapers within the same day. The subhead for the Times story was changed from the morning's "Police Hold Two for Questioning" to the afternoon's "One Is Held in Killing."

A story by Jimmy Breslin in the New York Herald Tribune suffered a similar editorial change. The subhead for the morning edition of Breslin's account said, "Police Rescue Two Suspects." Breslin had originally told his readers that "the other suspect was taken to the Wadsworth Avenue precinct, where the city's top policemen immediately converged and began one of the heaviest homicide investigations this city has ever seen." In the next edition of the Tribune (the late city edition) the subhead was changed to read, "Police Rescue One Suspect." And the piece had been edited to eliminate any reference at all to the man Patrolman Hoy brought to the Wadsworth Avenue station house.

The second man captured by the police may have also been rescued from a beating, but his capture was in no other way a rescue. Thomas Hagan was taken to Bellevue Prison with a bullet in his leg, was identified, stood trial and was convicted. He was first taken into custody by Sergeant Alvin Aronoff and Patrolman Louis Angelos, who happened to be cruising past the Audubon in their patrol car. The officers, on arriving in front of the ballroom entrance, saw people rushing out into the street. According to Sergeant Aronoff, "The crowds were pushing out and screaming 'Malcolm's been shot!' and 'Get 'im, get 'im, don't let him go!' " The policemen grabbed Thomas Hagan by the arms. Hagan was being kicked and beaten by a crowd. The policemen fired a warning shot into the air to drive Hagan's attackers back and then hustled him into their police car and drove him away.

In the aftermath of the assassination the press gave much coverage to the feud between Malcolm X and his former spiritual leader, the honorable Elijah Muhammad. Despite heavy police protection, an arsonist was able to climb onto the roof of the Black Muslim's Harlem Mosque less than two days after the murder and use gasoline to set fire to the Muslim building. With only some rare exceptions, the newspaper slant given to the story was of a religious war between two irrational fringe groups composed of dangerous ex-convicts. Because the feud between Malcolm's Organization of Afro-American Unity and the Nation of Islam was accepted public knowledge, and because the titillating concept of a conflict that was part holy war and part gang war could sell papers, it was seductively easy for the press and the public both to accept the assumption that the Black Muslims, alone, killed Malcolm X. The Times and the Tribune both editorialized airily about hatred that turns on itself and the violence that spawns violence.

The editorials appeared despite the well-known change in Malcolm's ideas after he returned from his pilgrimage to Mecca. In a letter to his followers, much publicized in the press, he wrote: "Each hour here in the Holy Land enables me to have greater insight into what is happening in America between black and white. The American Negro never can be blamed for his racial animosities — he is only reacting to four hundred years of the conscious racism of the American whites. But as racism leads America up the suicide path, I do believe, from the experiences that I have had with them, that the whites of the younger generation, in the colleges and universities, will see the handwriting on the wall and many of them will turn to the spiritual path of truth — the only way left to America to ward off the disaster that racism inevitably must lead to." In an airport news conference after his return from that first trip abroad he told American reporters: "In the past, yes, I have made sweeping indictments of all white people. I never will be guilty of that again — as I know now that some white people are truly sincere, that some truly are capable of being brotherly toward a black man. The true Islam has shown me that a blanket indictment of all white people is as wrong as when whites make blanket indictments against blacks."

Malcolm X's widow, Betty, leaves medical examiner's office after identifying body of her husband.

So the editorials about hatred may have been either careless or vicious, but what about the widespread assumption that Malcolm was killed for a renegade by his former brothers in the Nation of Islam? Certainly Malcolm, right up until the last few days of his life, believed and said that the Muslims were out to kill him.

"In any city, wherever I go, making speeches, holding meetings of my organization, or attending to other business," he told Alex Haley, "black men are watching every move I make, awaiting their chance to kill me. I have said publicly many times that I know that they have their orders. Anyone who chooses not to believe what I am saying doesn't know the Muslims in the Nation of Islam."

In his epilogue to The Autobiography of Malcolm X Haley reports that on Tuesday, February 16, 1965 — five days before the fatal meeting at the Audubon Ballroom — Malcolm told a close associate, "I have been marked for death in the next five days. I have the names of five Black Muslims who have been chosen to kill me. I will announce them at the meeting."

Haley also describes Malcolm being followed and threatened during the last three weeks of his life by Muslims he recognized, not only in New York, but also in Los Angeles and Chicago.

Thus there was ample reason for Malcolm to think that he was marked for death, and to believe that the killers would be acting as agents of the Nation of Islam. But to understand the main thrust of the motions for a retrial that William Kunstler will be arguing in the courts, it is first necessary to understand why Malcolm intended to tell his audience in the Audubon Ballroom that he "had been hasty to accuse the Black Muslims," and why he said, "things have happened since that are bigger than what they can do. I know what they can do. Things have gone beyond that."

The assassination carried out so brazenly by the "firing squad" that gunned Malcolm down in the Audubon Ballroom was not the first attempt on his life. At least two other attempts had already been made.

The first of these took place far from Harlem and far from the reach of Mr. Elijah Muhammad. In July 1964 Malcolm was in Cairo to address a summit conference of African prime ministers. He had come to the conference to persuade the powerful friends he'd made on a previous visit to Africa — men such as President Nkrumah of Ghana, President Toure of Guinea, Prime Minister Kenyatta of Kenya, President Nyerere of Tanzania, Prime Minister Obote of Uganda, President Nasser of Egypt and President Azikiwe of Nigeria — that their countries should arraign the United States before the General Assembly of the United Nations for American violations of the human rights provision of the UN charter.

Earlier that year he had told a press conference in Ghana: "All of Africa unites in opposition to South Africa's apartheid, and to the oppression in the Portuguese territories. But you waste your time if you don't realize that Verwoerd and Salazar, and Britain and France, never could last a day if it were not for United States support. So until you expose the man in Washington, D.C., you haven't accomplished anything."

At a press conference at New York's Kennedy Airport, upon returning from his first trip to Africa, Malcolm had told American reporters that "the American black man needed to recognize that he had a strong airtight case to take the United States before the United Nations on a formal accusation of 'denial of human rights' — and that if Angola and South Africa were precedent cases, then there would be no easy way that the US could escape being censured, right on its own home ground."

Third World Students and the Case of Sherwood vs. the Senate

The following brief was prepared and presented by the office of Third World Affairs to the Student Senate Judiciary regarding the case of definition of Third World.

The findings of the court in the case of Sherwood vs Senate is a most curious one when one looks at the circumstances and history surrounding the issue, and on the effect of the court's ruling on the political representation of the third world student body in this senate. The court has ruled that Senate Bill 72-s287 is unconstitutional on the basis of sections 1 and 3 of Article IV of the SGA constitution and of chapter 20 of the general laws. This means, let me repeat, that the court is ruling that students of this university who belong to racial and cultural minorities who have been traditionally excluded from participation within the broader white society of this country, can not be represented within the Senate, as members of these ethnic and cultural groups; because of its interpretation of these two sections.

Let us examine the sections on which the court's findings are based. Article — IV of the SGA constitution defines and affirms the rights held by all students at this university.

Article one says that no student shall be denied equal protection under university policy and that no student shall be denied right that exists or shall come to exist without due process.

Section III affirms the right to all students of the freedoms of speech, thought, publication and association for all students.

While this article is of primary importance to all students, they are of special importance, special and crucial importance, and they were intended to be so, to those elements of the community who are most prone to be, or who have historically been excluded or discriminated against by policy and practice of the society, that is to say cultural and ethnic minorities and women.

Similarly, chapter twenty of the general laws of the SGA is intended to protect and affirm the rights of women and third world minorities, in areas where there has been discrimination against them. The language is clear and unambiguous, and more than that the intent and the spirit is clear. It is a clear moral attempt to redress old wrongs, and to outline policies to see that they are not repeated. It is an attempt to eliminate the discrimination against these groups which we all know has defined this society's treatment of them in the past. Listen to what it says:

Its purpose is clearly, unequivocally, unambiguously to "eliminate all existing discriminatory conditions" within all organizations of the SGA. All policies of such organizations "are to be examined to ensure that they do not operate to the detriment of persons or groups on the basis of sex, race, religion, color or national origin."

This chapter then goes on to articulate and explain a policy of affirmative action for all organizations within the SGA. It says that where "fewer women and third world people were in a particular job than would be reasonably expected by their availability", the organization, "Must recruit women and third world persons as actively as they had recruited white males."

There is nothing ambiguous about the language or its clear intent. It is intended to stop and prevent an evident and well established discrimination against women and people from ethnic and cultural minorities, in other words the groups traditionally excluded by reason of sex, cultural background or race.

These are great and important sections. It took this nation three hundred years to achieve them. They try to redress an old, historical and persistant shortcoming in the moral behavior of this nation. The unfair and indefensible discrimination against women and non-european people.

Therefore, that these two sections from the constitution and general laws, should be cited as the basis for effectively disfranchising the third world community of their Campus, to deprive them of their right to proportionate representation in this senate, is a shining absurdity, an irony of the greatest and most painful proportions. Like Mark Anthony at another political forum I am tempted to cry "Oh, judgement. Thou art fled to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason."

Because, when the court says that Senate Bill 72-S287 is unconstitutional on the bases they mention, they are in fact saying that Third World groups, that is to say those students from non-western cultural backgrounds, the so-called ethnic minorities of the campus, can not be represented in those terms in this body. Can the court mean to do this? Is this in fact its intent by this ruling, that Third World people cannot represent themselves as cultural minorities here in the senate?

By its mechanical and inflexible reading by the issue, by its thoughtless literalness of interpretation the Court has made a hollow mockery of the meaning of these sections. It has violated the spirit, obstructed the intent, and negated the whole moral and democratic intent of the two sections they cite in their judgement.

This finding, if left to stand, would also have a profound effect on the racial character and representative nature of this senate. It would reverse or destroy, the single greatest contribution that this senate has made to the establishment of genuine political and cultural democracy in student government, and to a new fairness of political representation on this campus.

Do not be deceived, what is at issue here is the democratic and representative character of the senate. That was what was affirmed by Senate Bill 72-S287, as by the vote of the Senate in 1972 which made it possible for the cultural and ethnic minorities of this campus to send representation to the Senate and which brought into existence the so-called Third World Caucus. Let us look back to that act, to what caused it, and what it meant. It was a bold and dramatic and important act of this body. What did it mean?

Prior to the creation of the third world caucus the senate and the student government association went about its business as if this campus community were comprised of students from an exculsively European-American background. They made no recognition of the existence and the justified concerns of bodies of students from minority cultures, except at the beginning of each semester when student activity fees were collected from all students regardless of race, religion or previous condition of servitude. This was not active racism of the afrikaner variety, and we do not wish to suggest that. It was thoughtlessness. It was a function of an unexamined, unthinking, unconscious self-centeredness on the part of the majority and the invisibility of the minority in their eyes. But the fact remained, that there were students here representing the minority races and cultures of this society, and here like in the general society they were taxed, were expected to obey the rules and support the programs of this government but were not represented as a group with particular histories, particular perceptions, particular interests, and a particular and unique history of oppression and exclusion in this country.

José Venturelli

But it was a time of change. The perceptions of the nation's majority was widening and changing. The country's majority began to understand just how exclusive and culture bound their institutions were. The Student Government Association here was no exception, and it was in this context that the Senate voted to make fair representation available to the students from the third world. Now, this was explicit. It was not vague or obscure. It had nothing to do with states of mind. It had nothing to do with exotic sexual preferences. It had nothing to do with physical handicaps. Those are not the issue. The Third World representation that the Senate discussed was very simple and clear. In international relationships the term referred to those developing nations of Africa, Asia, the pacific and islands of the sea who were emerging on the stage of the world after a century of foreign domination and european colonization. In this arena the first world was the industrial democracies of capitalist Europe and their derivative societies such as Canada, the United States, New Zealand and Australia. The so called free world, developed world etc.

The socialist states represented the second world, and as we have said the emerging non-aligned nations of Africa and Asia and South America was the third world.

That was the international context. One this campus the term meant, and has always meant, the campus community equilavent of this: those Afro-American, original-American, Spanish American and Asian-American people who have traditionally been numerical minorities and cultural subordinated within the context of American society. It was these groups who sought their right to represent themselves here. They did not ask for paternalistic representation from good-hearted members of the majority. They did not ask to be represented as students who looked different. They asked, and you agreed, to be represented as themselves, groups of students with particular and unique experiences, cultures, aspirations and problems within this society. This is what we are, and to tell us to represent ourselves as anything else is to tell us that the SGA is no more ready to perceive and recognize our essential social, cultural and political existence than was the case before 1972. We do not agree to become political and cultural non-persons, which is the effect of the court's decision.

(Late last semester, the Senate Judiciary reversed the first decision and accept the definition of Third World as presented by the office of Third World Affairs.)

Texas Court Okays Nazi Messages

THEY'VE A RIGHT TO FREE SPEECH, EVEN IF THEY ARE FASCISTS...
ZONK!
Evans

NEW YORK (LNS) — A Texas state appeals court has given the okay to the American Nazi Party to use telephone messages advocating an "all-white war" on minorities and a $5,000 reward to kill a non-white person "attacking" a white person.

The messages say, in part: "We are calling for an all-white war against Jews and other non-whites. I am sure you realize that illegal non-white immigrants have overrun our borders and have made us flee to the suburbs of our cities."

"We are beginning a battle by offering a $5,000 prize for every nonwhite killed during an attack on a white person."

The court ruled that Jewish television personality Marvin Zindler, who filed suit to enjoin the messages, had no grounds for his suit. The court said that Zwindler faced no real personal threat because of the tapes, since listeners must dial a telephone number in order to hear them.

Abdul Farrakhan Quits Over Muslim 'Reforms'

LOS ANGELES — "The Honorable Elijah Muhammad taught us that unity is the key, but I can't help it. This is something I must do."

With that declaration, Minister Abdul Heleem Farrakhan, internationally known Muslim spokesman, announced his break with Muhammad's son and successor, Chief Eman Wallace D. Muhammad.

"I stand firmly on the platform of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, Farrakhan told a group of students at the University of California."

Wallace Muhammad, who took over leadership of the Muslim empire after the Feb. 25, 1975 death of his father, has made dramatic changes in the Nation of Islam.

It now is known as the World Committee of Islam in the West.

Wallace Muhammad has dropped his father's old racial separatist preachings in which whites were called devils.

He has brought about numerous other reforms.

Farrakhan feels that under the reforms the Muslims have lost much of their considerable financial wealth and discipline.

Another criticism Farrakhan has is that Muhammad teaches that Elijah Muhammad is the Messenger of God, taught by God, who came in the form of Master Fard Muhammad, founder of the Nation.

Farrakhan said he hopes to escape the fate that befell anther popular Muslim spokesman, Malcolm X, who was assassinated in Harlem after a break with Elijah Muhammad.

He said one difference is that he is not now forming another major organization and hopes the Muslims can "disagree without being disagreeable."

There had been reports Farrakhan was disillusioned with the Muslims as the leadership is taking them now.

But until his suprise announcement, he had been a forceful supporter of Chief Eman Wallace Muhammad.

He insisted he had not broken with his leader prior to this in order to preserve unity among the one million adherents of the faith.

Farrakhan said he fell asleep as a minister and became complacent but "I thank God He has brought me out of my sleep and now I am back at my post."

Farrakhan said the United States is moving toward fascism.

He pointed to the rise in KKK activity, anti-integration demonstrations by whites and the Bakke case.

With advanced technology now availaale to whites, they no longer need blacks, Farrakhan declared.

Farrakhan said that in order for blacks to oppose the fascism of whites they must gather among themselves as the Israelites gathered around Moses.

Afro-American Studies Courses

PROFESSOR FROM CITY UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK TO TEACH AFRO-AMERICAN STUDIES COURSES THIS SEMESTER.

Professor William Mackey, Jr. a member of the faculty of the Afro-American Studies Department of the City University of New York has joined the faculty of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies as a Visiting Lecturer for the Spring Semester. He will teach two courses (descriptions below) and act as faculty advisor to the Black News Service.

Professor Mackey brings a rich and varied background of experiences to the Department which spans the period from the late 1930's to the present. Educated as a structural engineer, historical researcher, and photo-journalist, he has also been a political activist, oral historian, businessman, and professional photographer. His articles and photographs have been published in Liberation Magazine, Architectual Forum, Black Creation Magazine, Impact Magazine, and Negro Almanac. His work is also in The Eye of Conscience, a book on social-documentary photographers and their work. (1974). He has completed a 500 page manuscript on Black folk-culture and institutions in Camden County, Georgia which is awaiting publication. In addition, he is working on a comprehenseive study of the southern chain-gang prison system. He has also been featured on two photo-documentary television specials (CBS and ABC) dealing with the south-eastern rural south. His photographs have had many exhibits, including the New Africa House Gallery (1973).

Professor Mackey provides an opportunity for students to learn about Black life over the past 40 years from an unique and particularly valuable perspective, since he was an active participant in many aspects of the material he teaches in his courses. His background of experience includes: friendship and working with such people as Malcolm X, Paul Robeson, W.E.B. DuBois, Shirley Graham DuBois, Joel A. Rogers, Shirley Chisholm, Percy Sutton, Richard Moore, and many other Black political and intellectual figures.

During the time Professor Mackey operated a coffee house and restaurant in New York City he met, encouraged and fed many of the Black actors and actresses now prominent in movies and television, including James Earl Jones, Lou Gossett, Moses Gunn, Gloria Foster, Robert Hooks, Godfrey Cambridge and Douglas Turner Ward.

He also provided a showcase for Black writers and poets such as LeRoi Jones (Imamu Baraka), Bobb Hamilton, Calvin Hernton, Ishmael Reed, and David Henderson. Others who appear regularly at his place include Alan Ginsberg, Jack Kerouac and Nat Hentoff.

Professor Mackey's experiences in the military in World War II are particularly interesting in that the story of the vicious racism in the military services has never been adequately reported in the media. He was one of the leaders and negotiators for a group of twenty to thirty thousand Black troops who took over the town of Alexandria, Louisiana in 1943 as a result of brutality and harassment. They held the town for three weeks and were later all shipped overseas to fight. He rose to the rank of First Lieutenant and served in North Africa, Sicily, England, France, Belgium, and Germany, fighting racism all the way.

Professor Mackey also has a first-hand knowledge of the southern penal system; having spent two years on a Florida chain gang as a teenager as a result of picking up a few oranges off the ground while hiking through the south with a

To provide students with an opportunity to examine the impact of development and underdevelopment on the changing status of women in the labor force. After an overview of series purporting to explain the changing economic goals of women, students working alone or in pairs will be expected to prepare reports examining the extent to which theoretical explanations appear to be consistant with available evidence relating to the econimic status of women in specific countries. Possible policy implications will be considered. (3 Credits) ¶ ¶ Cross-listed with ECO 591I ¶ ¶

MUSIC DEPARTMENT OFFERS
AFRO-AMERICAN CHURCH MUSIC

Afro-American Church Music, Music 290D, 534141, a course being offered by the Department of Music, focuses on the history, analysis and sociological aspects of black sacred music. The course will begin with a short review of religion and music in West Africa in the 17th and 18th centuries and proceed through music of the major religious denominations in the black American communities. Such song types as the Baptist-Lining Hymn, Camp-Meeting Spirituals, Negro Spirituals, Jubilees and gospel songs will be discussed and illustrated.

The course, taught by Horace Clarence Boyer, is offered on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 1:25 p.m. in Room 155 of the Fine Arts Center. All students of the Five Colleges are welcomed. For additional information call 5-2279 or 5-2227. The course offers three credits.

white friend who was let off with the warning "never be seen with a nigger in the state of Florida again." Professor Mackey spent a good part of his sentence in the "hole" because he punched out an "overseer" who lashed him with a whip.

These few aspects of the experiences of Professor Mackey indicate the wealth of knowledge and information that can be gained from his classes by those students interested in Black life beyond what is offered in books. It is worth mentioning that he was voted "best teacher" by students at the City College of New York for two consecutive years.

Professor Paul L Puryear

Professor Paul L. Puryear, a native of New Jersey has had a long and distinguished career in higher education, as a student, as a professor and as an administrator. In 1953, he graduated magna cum laude from Talladega College in Alabama with an A.B. in Sociology. At Talladega he also studied with economist Lloyd Hogan, now on the faculty of Hampshire College. Professor Puryear pursued graduate education at the University of Chicago earning both a M.A. (1955) and a Ph.D. (1960) in political science. His teaching career included stints at Norfolk State College (1958, 1960), Tuskeegee Institute (1961-66) and Fisk University (1966-1970). At Fisk, Dr. Puryear served as Director of the Center for Afro-American Research. In 1970, he went to Florida State University where he served as Professor of Government, Director of Urban Research Center (1970-74) and as Provost of the Division of Social Sciences and Law (1974-1976).

Professor Puryear has a long and courageous involvement in the Civil Rights movement including work with S.N.C.C. and S.C.L.C. in Alabama from 1961-1966, work with the Non-partisan Voter's league in Tuskeegee, support of student activists at Fisk, and consistent efforts to enlarge the participation of Blacks in the field of Political Science.

Professor Puryear's combination of activism, personal experience, and scholarly interest (a long list of articles and a forthcoming book) give him unique insights into the material he will be teaching in his courses: Blacks in Southern Politics (Afro-Am 390D) and Political Behavior and Public Policy in the Black Community (Afro-Am 490A).

Dollar Brand

by Nummo News Service

Dollar Brand came to international prominence in the early sixties; the late Duke Ellington 'discovered' him in a Zurich, Switzerland club and it was Ellington who set up the first Reprise recording, which constituted Brand's U.S. debut. Dollar Brand was also presented by Ornette Coleman in concert at the Artist House Gallery in New York City. At this latter engagement, the South African piano player collaborated with trumpeter Don Cherry, basist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Ed Blackwell.

Dollar Brand was born in Cape Town, South Africa on October 9, 1934. He got his first piano lessons at the tender age of seven; it was, however, in the fifties that Brand matured as a musician. He worked with African bands which played not only African music but arrangements by Tommy Dorsey and Count Basie. For a while Brand co-led a group with Kippy Moeketsie, acknowledged by Jazz afficiandos as one of Africa's most brilliant reedmen. The group also included the trumpeter Hugh Masekela and trombonist Jonas Gwangwa.

Since leaving his homeland in 1962, Brand's career has in the words of one critic, been peripatetic; from Zurich to Copenhagen, Copenhagen to Paris, Paris to New York, New York to Montreal, everywhere enthralling his audiences. He would be performing as a soloist, leader of a trio or big band.

Brand's music is living testimony of the international symbiosis music is today. In his music one can trace classical training, Thelonious Monk's intensely rhythmic left and right hand explorations, Tatumesque dexterity and through all this the lingering shadow of Duke Ellington. Whilst the above is true, Brand's music is also an amalgam of African and Afro-American roots — it is a link between the tribal music of South Africa and the music of the African diaspora. The prominent critic Wilfred Mellers writing about Brand in The Musical Times, mentioned the 'authentic' symbiotic relationship of Jazz to African traditional music. "This isn't merely because there is an African fundament to what has become a western art, but also because Jazz...being improvised and performing rather than notated musics, has affinities with an oral rather than literate culture." Observe therefore the three fourths, six fourths or seven fourths time in Brand's music and one finds a fiercely rhythmic, stab-like piano which might at first seem anti-swing — once, however, one passes through this maze of bewildering pianistic dexterity, you discover multi-layered patterns of great beauty. Brand's piano as the British critic Brian Priestly has correctly observed has a heavy African drum-choir base and is specifically percusive. Brand's music therefore is not merely eclectic — embracing the African and Afro-American tradition, its main aim as Monk and Ellington is to create a total impact.

The late Herbie Nichols in an essay accompanying his record, 'The Herbie Nichols Trio' (Blue Note) said: "I keep remembering that the overtones of 'fifths' created by an ordinarily tuned drum was the first music. The Jazz sound is really a living thing and as a piano player I find it mostly in old uprights. Sometimes these faded pianos with muted strings, strange wood-work, and unven 'innards' have a way of giving up fast and resonant overtones. Each note shoots back at you like a base drum."

Brand, therefore, falls in that small group of piano players, who represent the bop and post-bob tangent like Thelonious Monk, Randy Weston, Andrew Hill, Elmo Hope, and Hassan Ibn Ali. Talking to critic Charles Fox, Dollar said, "Its possible, just strolling through a small urban area (in South Africa), to hear not only African and Cape Coloured music, but Chinese, Moslem and Indian music, as well as Jazz. We did not get the chance to hear many American musicians in the flesh. The only ones to visit us were Tony Scott, Bud Shank, and Bob Cooper. Jack Parnell and Johnny Dankworth came from Britain. But we did listen to records, to Dizzy, Bird and the rest. And behind everything was the beat, that beat you get in traditional African music."

A select discography of Brand would include the following: 1. Duke Ellington presents The Dollar Brand Trio, Reprise label. 2. Dollar Brand: Anatomy of a South African Village (trio), Freedom FLP 40107. 3. This is Dollar Brand (solo piano), Intercord 28-448-9U. 4. # Wilmington 10 Lose N.C. Appeal

By BOB McMAHON
Special to the Guardian

Raleigh, N.C.

The Wilmington 10 lost all chance of appeal in state courts Jan. 5 when the North Carolina Court of Appeals declined to overturn the convictions of the civil rights activists.

Pressure has now shifted to the federal courts, President Jimmy Carter, the UN Human Rights Commission, and particularly North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt to intervene in the case. The nine Black men and one white woman were convicted in 1972 of conspiracy to commit arson in the firebombing of a Wilmington grocery store during a white siege of the Black community in 1971.

Attorney for the 10, James Ferguson, has said that if Gov. Hunt does not pardon the group, he will take the case into federal court on the grounds that the defendants were denied due process. At a press conference following last week's court decision, Hunt declined comment on the case, which has increasingly focused national and worldwide attention on the racism of the state's courts.

In taking their action, the North Carolina Court of Appeals let stand a decision last June in which North Carolina Judge George Fountain turned down an appeal for the 10. That ruling following a 2-week hearing in which the three chief witnesses against the 10, Allen Hall, Jerome Mitchell and Eric Junois, admitted lying at the urging of the prosecution.

Hunt has been under mounting pressure for months to intervene in the case, but had repeatedly said he would not take any action until all court appeals were exhausted.

Supporters of the Wilmington 10 see the courts' latest action as putting the burden of action on Gov. Hunt.

"The thing was like a hot potato," commented Irv Joyner of the United Church of Christ (UCC) Commission for Racial Justice. "It was too hot for the appeals court to handle. The judges threw it right at the governor. It's all up to him now."

The Commission for Racial Justice employs Ben Chavis, chief defendant in the Wilmington 10 case.

Dr. Avery Post, president of the UCC, has written Hunt reminding the governor "of the conversation we had in your office a few weeks ago.

"It was my understanding then," Post said, "that you would wait until legal remedies were exhausted in the state of North Carolina and would then immediately — and, I sense, sympathetically — interest yourself in the Wilmington 10 and their welfare.... I beg of you not to force us to carry this case on interminably through the federal court."

UN APPEAL PROJECTED

In a statement issued to the press, the UCC and its Commission for Racial Justice said they intended to present the case to the UN Human Rights Commission within 60 days.

"In the UN we will ask member nations to condemn the United States and North Carolina for their flagrant violation of human rights. We do not seek to embarrass either the United States or North Carolina, but we are compelled to let the world know that the United States does, in fact, have political prisoners and is violating the human rights of various Black United States citizens."

The church leaders also urged President Carter to call upon Gov. Hunt to pardon the Wilmington 10.

The Wilmington 10 case has been an extreme embarrassment for Carter's "human rights" diplomacy. Patricia Derian, assistant secretary of state for human rights recently acknowledged in a TV interview the problems it has caused, noting: "There seems to be no question in the minds of the largest number of people that a great miscarriage of justice has taken place."

Nevertheless, U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell has ruled out any further action in the Wilmington 10 case, saying the federal government will not "intrude in the state process."

In a statement issued in New York, the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression called for increased pressure on President Carter. Write or wire President Carter, said the statement, "demanding that he call upon Gov. James Hunt to grant pardons of innocence; direct the Department of Justice to join the defense through an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief in its appeal before the Federal District Court.

"The Carter administration can no longer refuse to intervene on the premise that it could not act in state matters," the statement continued.

HUNT'S OPTIONS

Gov. Hunt has several options in the case — granting a pardon of innocence; commuting some or all sentences of the defendants; or no action.

The Wilmington 10 defense has asked Hunt to grant the 10 a "pardon of innocence," acknowledging that they should not have been convicted of the frame-up in the first place.

The governor apparently has ruled out such a pardon, and instead is considering whether to commute some of the defendants' sentences. Hunt has asked his legal secretary, Jack Cozort, to prepare a report on each defendant's role in the alleged firebombing that sent them to prison, as given in the trial testimony, as well as behavior in prison that might warrant clemency.

Hunt has said that he intends to take each case up individually, rather than dealing with the Wilmington 10 as a group.

Defense supporters have criticized this approach, noting that it ignores the political nature of the trial and raises th possibility of Hunt's commuting sentences for a few defendants with "good" records while the others are left in jail.

One-hundred-fifty faculty members and librarians yesterday marched outside the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall to protest not receiving pay raises they claim are due them.

Joining the faculty were representatives from the University Staff Association and the Graduate Student Employees Union.

A memo released by the faculty union said the demonstration was to express "widespread dissatisfaction over the University Board of Trustee's refusal to grant faculty and librarian salary increases funded by the state legislature."

Massachusetts Society of Professors treasurer and spokesman Herman Stelzner said the faculty were protesting that they are not receiving a two and one-half per cent pay hike from funds approved by the state legislature but not granted by UMass.

Stelzner said the University contends the pay hike must be negotiated rather than granted outright. The MSP and the University administration are presently holding contract talks.

Under "fiscal autonomy" guaranteed to UMass by the state, the legislature can only appropriate money; it cannot tell the institutions how to spend it.

Brad Klein, chairman of the graduate students union, said approximately 15 members of that union were marching to "facilitate" and "endorse the concept of campus unionization." The Graduate Student Employees Union is presently trying to be certified as a collective bargaining unit by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission.

Students passing by the demonstration crossed through the picket lines or went around them. One student was overheard to ask a companion, "what're they picketing?"

UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin said security for the faculty demonstration was not as "tight" as it would have been if students had been demonstrating. He said a faculty representative called him Tuesday and assured him there would be no disruptions.

One particularly graphic sign being carried by a demonstrator read, "Whitmore on a pleasure cruise, faculty up the creek!"

The University Staff Association, which was recently elected, represents clerical, technical, and administrative employees. The Graduate Student Employees Union represents teaching assistants, research assistants, and teaching associates.

Medical school bills causing taxpayer ills?

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts taxpayers are investing from $25,000 to $35,000 a year for each student at the UMass-Worcester medical school.

This is the average per capita expense derived by dividing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' budget request for the school by the projected enrollment of 400, less tuition income.

In his $4.75 billion spending program for the next fiscal year, the governor recommended a $10.9 million allotment for the medical school, plus another $3.5 million as a state subsidy for the school's teaching hospital.

The discrepancy between the high and the low per capita concerns how much, if any, of the hospital's subsidy could be considered a cost of the med school. The hospital, whose room rates are $170 per day, semi-private, and $210 for a private room, operates under an independent budget arrangement.

Carole Cohen, public information officer at the Worcester school, said none of the hospital's expenses should be included in the compilation. She said the hospital provides clinical training for hundreds of other students and receives no payment for the care of some patients.

Dukakis backs commission

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis added his name to the growing list of officials calling for a special commission with subpoena powers to investigate the awarding of the UMass-Boston construction contract to McKee-Berger-Mansueto.

However, House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, both necessary supporters of such a commission, appear reluctant to join the rest.

McGee said he was opposed to giving subpoena power to any special commission. Harrington remained silent about the probe but said through press aide John Abbott, "We'll wait until the legislation gets over here."

Following the lead of Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti who said he would support creation of a special commission, Reps. Philip W. Johnston, D-Marshfield, and Andrew H. Card, R-Holbrook, announced Tuesday they would file a measure Monday. They were "calling for a single blue-ribbon commission with subpoena powers to investigate all relevant charges relating to alleged political payoffs and sweetheart deals with the commonwealth process," the representatives said.

"The governor supports the creation of a special commission," said Dukakis' press secretary Alan Raymond. Raymond added that Dukakis felt Deputy Secretary of Administration and Finance David Flynn "overreacted" when he said "a blue ribbon commission on this thing is a sham."

"I'll have to study it," McGee said. "In the past though I have been very, very opposed to giving away subpoena powers to a special commission."

[AP] — Is the Valley Advocate the proud flagship of the nation's only chain of alternative weekly newspapers? Or is it what one journalism professor calls "a counter-culture shopping news?"

The answer depends on who's talking.

"The paper has matured with the movement. Activism has been channeled into realism," said 30-year old executive editor Linda Matys.

The Advocate's boosters say it has become less strident and biased as its readers have aged and mellowed. It certainly has become a financial success.

But critics insist the paper has lost its way — sold out its idealism and principles in order to attract more advertisers. The Below the Salt literary magazine of the Collegian once dubbed it "The Valley Avacado: the Alternative Shopper."

> "The paper has matured with the movement. Activism has been channeled into realism." - executive editor Linda Matys.

The newspaper literally started underground in an Amherst basement in 1973 on an initial investment of $3,000. Founders and co-publishers Geoffrey Robinson and Edward Matys had met on the copy desk of the Hartford Courant, and they agreed most newspapers were not written with young people in mind.

Although many well-financed alternative weeklies in much larger metropolitan markets have died, the Advocate prospers. From the beginning, Matys and Robinson "spent as much time getting ads as we did news."

That first year one of the Advocate's Amherst editions had billings of around $50,000. This year the chain says its four papers — in Amherst and Springfield, and Hartford and New Haven, Conn. — are expected to gross over $2 million.

Now ad salesmen in three piece suits court bankers and jewelers as well as audio dealers and record store owners, telling them 165,000 copies of the Advocate are distributed free each week at locations ranging from campuses to factories.

The double-edged nature of the Advocate's commercial success has been confirmed by the appearance of Fresh Ink, a bi-monthly catering to an Amherst area college audience.

Its founders call Fresh Ink "the alternative to the alternatives" in Western Massachusetts.

> "There's one in every town, they're bland and don't offend anyone." - Fresh Ink co-founder Lindsy Gruson

Co-founder Lindsey Gruson compared the Advocate to a well-known hamburger chain: "There's one in every town, they're bland and don't offend anyone."

Is the Advocate dishing out junk-food journalism? Not so, according to Eric Benjamin, sales manager for the New Haven Advocate, who started out at the Amherst paper four years ago as a rock music writer.

"We sell the paper to advertisers as an outrageous editorial vehicle. They expect it. Good stories make people read the paper."

When Benjamin joined up, the paper was a struggling bi-weekly. But the Advocate's publishers knew their 18 - to - 35 - year - old reader bought milk, took loans and wore overcoats just like everyone else.

They carried this message to advertisers, who became enthusiastic converts.

Advertising director Mitchell Young admitted the paper is "pretty mainstream ... We're encouraging our readers to buy homes. But that's really more radical than writing stories about rent control."

The Advocate also has moved toward respectability in politics. "We're told that we're required reading at New Haven City Hall," smiled Christine Austin, Robinson's wife and the chain's business director. "It's nice to have a public presence."

Interviews reveal two major gripes against the Advocate: that it is not professional enough, and that it has become timid.

Anti-nuclear activist Sam Lovejoy voices both. The Advocate appears "to be more interested in running ads than news," he said, and the daily Greenfield Recorder's coverage of a proposed nuclear power plant in nearby Montague has been better than the Advocate's.

> "We sell the paper to advertisers as an outrageous editorial vehicle. They expect it. Good stories make people read the paper." - Advocate sales manager Eric Benjamin.

"The Advocate has lost its sense of purpose," said former managing editor Richard Asinof.

"I can read it in five minutes," said Howard Ziff, a UMass journalism professor. "Most of their articles are not the result of much work."

> "I can read it in five minutes. Most of their articles are not the result of much work." - UMass journalism professor Howard Ziff

Ziff's UMass colleague Ralph Whitehead, although describing the paper as "a counter-culture shopper," agreed with Ziff that it fills a need.

"I'd say the Advocate is partly responsible for the downtown commercial revival in Northampton. It provided a distinctive advertising medium for the short of shops that opened there," he said.

But the paper's strength with readers probably will continue to stem from its attractive layout, catchy pictures and headlines, explicit personal classified ads soliciting sex — and its price.

Bus financing argued

University administrators are leaning toward financing the UMass bus service by placing a semester fee on students' bills.

Unless student government officials agree to provide 85 per cent of the University's contribution to the bus system, the administration will probably approach the UMass Board of Trustees to organize a trust fund to hold student fees for operating the buses.

The operating budget of the bus system is financed by 65 per cent of federal and state subsidies of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority and 35 per cent of local monies from Amherst, Belchertown, Sunderland and UMass. The UMass share has been derived from student government fees and the parking office. The funding proposal for the current fiscal year would have the student government paying 85 per cent of the University contribution, and the parking office 15.

Student government officials claim that students would be paying more than 85 per cent because students also contribute money to the parking office when they register cars for campus parking lots. The student government leaders have proposed a ratio in which 70 per cent of the bus funds would come from the student government budget and 30 per cent from the parking office.

The 85-15 ratio had been derived from a ridership survey which found 85 per cent of the riders to be students and 15 per cent University personnel.

The administration does not agree with the "double assessment" argument of the student government and is pressing either for the 85-15 split or fee-based funding.

UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield yesterday said the University needs more stable funding system for the buses in order to contract with the local towns and the federal government on a multi-year basis.

The federal government has subsidized a multi-million dollar bus garage to be built on campus and is also financing new buses.

Theft costs high at library

The University Library spent an estimated $34,505 last year to replace stolen and mutilated library material. There are not many solutions to the problem, according to George Wright, assistant director of the library's Public Services Department.

"Our library is not worse than any other library but each year the replacement costs increase while our budget decreases," said Wright.

The library's total budget last year was around $3 million but the total budget for new acquisitions was only $930,000.

★ Medical school costly

a prior year is currently doing an update of this study which includes actual expenses and revenue offsets.

With the many intangibles considered, some experts place the annual per capita cost at between $12,000 and $18,000, Cohen said.

The closest per capita gross, again based on the maintenance budget request, appears to be the $4,000 at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy. Dukakis is seeking $3.1 million for the 800 expected MMA students in the next academic year.

The pending appropriation might be close to the permanent medical school cost because enrollment will be the planned maximum. The first class, in 1970, had 16 students and this has climbed gradually to 100 for each class in the four-year program.

Tuition next year will be $900, up $60 from this year. Fees are additional.

Cohen defended the cost. "If you compare the operating budget with other state medical schools — the amount of state support — we are not really out of line at all," she said.

The medical school has 180 authorized fulltime-equivalent faculty positions and the governor has allowed for another 20. The school has about 334 support personnel, Mrs. Cohen reported.

The teaching hospital has 131 beds in use and expects to have 170 by this June, she said.

Speaks for canal treaties

Carter defends himself

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter spoke to the nation last night in defense of the Panama Canal treaties, saying their opponents are misinformed and that Senate approval would be in the "highest national interest."

"The most important reason — the only reason — to ratify the treaties is that they are in the highest national interest of the United States," Carter said from the family library at the White House.

They will keep the United States out of a war "in the jungles of Panama," he said.

Carter said he did not believe the charges made in the accords this week by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee were necessary, but they were not enough to make the White House abandon the treaties.

The agreement with Panama, Carter said, "will strengthen our position in the world. Our security interests will be stronger. Our trade opportunities will be improved."

Carter, in his 20-minute fireside chat, ran down a list of questions opponents have raised about the treaties and provided answers. Once the details are understood, said the president, they will be accepted by most Americans.

Polls have shown, however, that at the present time, more than half of the nation remains opposed to ratification.

"It is obvious that we can take whatever military action is necessary to make sure that the canal always remains open and safe," the president said. He would not "hesitate to deploy whatever armed forces are necessary to defend the canal," Carter asserted.

"But there is a much better option than sending our sons and grandsons to fight in the jungles of Panama," he said, maintaining that the treaties would avert the need for military action.

The president acknowledged the treaties have numerous opponents, but said, "much of that opposition is based on misunderstanding and misinformation.

"I want you to hear the facts."

Carter spoke of the improving relations the United States has with its Latin American neighbors, and warned that, "if the treaties should be rejected, this would all be lost, and disappointment and despair among our good neighbors and traditional friends would be severe.

"Nothing could strengthen our competitors and adversaries in this hemisphere more than for us to reject this agreement," he said.

"The treaties will increase our nation's influence in this hemisphere, will help to reduce any mistrust and disagreement, and will remove a major source of anti-American feelings."

The speech, which underwent revisions only a short time before its delivery, was essentially a reaffirmation of the administration's argument for ratification by the Senate, where the accords will be addressed next week.

Although a spirited debate is forecast, Senate Leaders have gradually come to support the pacts, as amended.

To achieve ratification, two-thirds of the Senate must vote in favor of the accords. If 100 members participate in the vote, that means the number would be 67. A UPI poll shows 50 senators how committed to, or leaning toward, ratification.

"We do not own the Panama Canal Zone," Carter said, and stated he was "quite sure" Theodore Roosevelt would have endorsed the treaties. Roosevelt, said Carter, "knew that change was inevitable and necessary." It was under Roosevelt's leadership that the engineering feat linking the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans was accomplished.

The treaties would turn control of the waterway over to Panama by the year 2000.

But clarifications backed by the bipartisan Senate leadership, the Foreign Relations Committee and the State Department would ensure America a continuing right to defend the canal and give U.S. ships head-of-the-line passage in times of crisis.

Healey re-elected by board of trustees

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday voted to re-elect Trustee Joseph P. Healey as chairman of the board and reassigned other members to different committees in their annual reorganization. Also approved were renovations for the Boston central offices and for buildings and grounds on the Amherst campus.

Interim President Franklin K. Patterson said the major concern of the board this spring is the fiscal budget. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has recently proposed a University budget of $116.3 million, representing a six per cent increase from last year's budget of $109.2 million. There has also been a six per cent rate of inflation the past year.

The budget increase recommended this year for the University is a lower percentage increase than the increase for the other institutions of the state college and university system. Last year UMass received a larger percentage increase than the other schools.

The board approved preliminary plans for a $980,000 renovation of the UMass central administrative offices at 100 Arlington Street in Boston. Also allocated was $1,020,000 to upgrade roads and parking lots on the Amherst campus. The campus improvement plan is the first phase of a two-year program for buildings and grounds improvements.

According to Trustee Silvia K. Burack, a member of the Buildings and Grounds Committee, parking reserve funds will be used for parking lot repairs. The parking reserve funds will be used, Burack said, subsequent to the completion of the repairs, within the next two years.

Goodell Library will also be renovated with funds allocated by the board. $2.5 million were approved to renovate faculty and administrative offices as part of a five-year program for the renovation of older buildings on campus.

The trustees agreed to submit an application to the HEW to acquire 15 acres of property and eight two-bedroom apartments on Nantucket Island. The University hopes to receive the property free of charge from the federal government, and would use the land for field work by students studying natural and physical sciences.

The University now owns 115 acres on the island, including four buildings. "There are crude facilities for housing 12-14 students now," said Burack, "but the new apartments would house another 12 to 14."

Bischoff gets more physical - dumps a job

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Acting Provost Jerimiah M. Allen accepted the resignation of David C. Bischoff as expected yesterday, leaving the campus without a permanent associate provost.

Bischoff, associate provost since 1970, last week submitted his resignation to Allen, who early Tuesday indicated he would accept the resignation. Bischoff said he will continue to serve as dean of the School of Physical Education, a post he has held for six years.

"I've been wearing two hats around here for a long time, it's about time I had just one job. I've been spreading myself too thin for too long. This school (physical education) needs somebody full time," Bischoff said in an interview yesterday.

Bischoff said he stayed with the provosts office to insure a "comfortable transition" between the succession of three provosts and their associates over the past few years.

Bischoff was the only one of 10 academic deans who did not participate in the controversy surrounding the firing of former provost Paul L. Puryear last month.

Bischoff said he felt Allen's experience would smooth out matters in the troubled provosts office.

Bischoff's resignation leaves the provosts office without a permanent associate provost because Vere Chappell, the only other permanent associate is on sabbatical leave this semester.

Early last month nine of the academic deans requested the resignation of then Provost Puryear, who later requested the resignation of six of those deans. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who had left Puryear in charge of campus while vacationing in Mexico, returned and fired Puryear after conferring separately with the provost and the deans.

Allen, as dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts, took over as acting Provost late last month.

Israeli fruit poisoned

THE HAGUE, The Netherlands [AP] — Western Europe issued an alert yesterday for Israeli-grown oranges poisoned with mercury in a purported Arab-Palestinian scheme to sabotage Israel's economy.

The Palestine Liberation Organization denied that any Palestinians were responsible as claimed in a letter to the Dutch and West German governments from "The Arab Revolutionary Army Palestinian Commando."

U.S. government officials said there was no evidence that any of the tainted fruit had reached the United States, and the Israeli Embassy in Washington claimed none of the oranges were for sale in U.S. stores.

Five Dutch children were hospitalized for mercury poisoning last week after they ate the contaminated oranges and became ill, the Dutch Health Ministry reported. Doctors pumped out the children's stomachs and sent the youngsters home a few days later completely recovered.

In West Germany, police discovered a Jaffa orange containing "a pea-size quantity" of mercury. The fruit was part of a consignment sold to grocery stores in the central industrial city of Darmstadt.

The sale of Israeli oranges was stopped by trading companies or supermarkets in several European countries and as far away as Greenland. Britain, Belgium, Switzerland, West Germany, Norway and Finland ordered tests on their remaining stocks of Jaffa oranges.

"So far the problem is of a very small magnitude, said Isaac Lipkis, spokesman for the Israeli Citrus Marketing Board in Tel Aviv. "We don't think this really applies to a large quantity of oranges."

Health officials said about three cases of the large-sized, juicy oranges were injected with mercury somewhere in Europe and that all the tainted fruit had visible brownish markings on their broken skins. Mercury would give the fruit a bitter taste, they added.

The Dutch and German governments said they received identical letters pinning responsibility on "The Arab Revolutionary Army Palestinian Commando." A PLO spokesman in Beirut said he had never heard of the group and called the reports "a mischievous propaganda ploy."

Widow pleas to clear mate

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — The widow of the only officer sent to prison for aiding the enemy while a prisoner during the Korean War Wednesday asked Sen. William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, to urge President Carter to join the fight to clear her husband's name.

Mr. Ronald E. Alley asked Hathaway, in a letter sent by certified mail, to attempt to arrange a meeting between the president and herself when Carter comes to Bangor in two weeks to campaign for Hathaway.

"My late husband was a proud officer who loved his country, therefore I feel you would want to work with me to fulfill his dream to see justice," her letter said. "It may not be in his life, but I, my children and my grandchildren would like to see that justice has been done.

"I would deeply appreciate it if you would forward this letter to President Carter and hopefully you will be able to arrange a meeting for me with the president," she said.

Former Maj. Alley died of a heart attack last week at the age of 65. He was entombed in his uniform and battle ribbons with a folded flag at his side, but his 22-year battle to clear his name failed to earn him official military honors at his funeral.

Alley was convicted of giving information to the enemy, soliciting fellow prisoners for information, taking part in programs designed to indoctrinate POWs and furthering enemy propaganda efforts.

Criminal files now open

TAUNTON [AP] — A Superior Court judge has ruled unconstitutional a state law restricting public access to a court list of persons involved in criminal cases.

"In a democratic society," said Judge Robert J. Hallisey in a ruling signed Friday, but released yesterday, "open, robust examination is essential, not only to the health of the executive and legislative branches.... but also to the judicial branch of government."

The law on criminal offenders records information, known as CORI, prevented reporters and other members of the public from inspecting the index, an alphabetized list of all persons involved in criminal cases.

The measure was designed to protect individual privacy.

The state attorney general's office said it would move as soon as possible for a stay of Judge Hallisey's decision.

The index made it possible to easily find the records of individuals without having to check through a whole docket of cases.

Hallissey wrote restricting the list "would be bureaucratic red tape in the extreme.

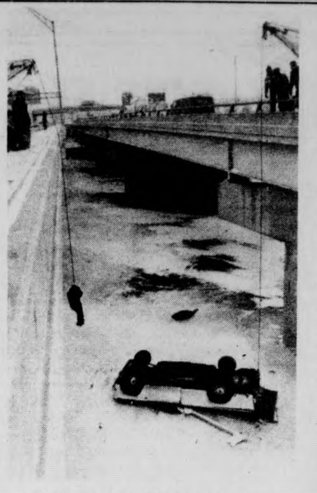
"Permissable public access to court records subsequent to proceedings in open court becomes meaningless if the public and the media cannot obtain such records in a reasonable manner," Hallisey said.

"The media has an absolute privilege to publish reports of public judicial proceedings and official court records available for public inspection. Some confidence must be placed on media's exercise of reasonable judgment and restraint."

Hallisey said the law prevented "the press from performing its traditional function of reporting on the operations of government to the public. The media privilege would be an empty one."

The judge objected to the legislature controlling court policy.

"The court, not the legislature, must control the records of the court, including indices ....lest its performance become hidden from public scrutiny."



Police Sgt. Pat McGarvey is lowered 60 feet to frozen surface of Scioto River near downtown Columbus to hook wrecker lines to truck which plunged off westbound lane of highway I-70 last Tuesday night. The driver was killed.

Buckley enters gov race

BOSTON [UPI] — Middlesex County Sheriff John J. Buckley says he will run for the Republican gubernatorial nomination this year.

In a news release, Buckley said he would publically announce his candidacy Feb. 6 in a series of news conferences around the state.

Buckley said the state needs better administrative leadership for "economic and tax problems confronting Massachusetts."

King nixes Thomson aid

BOSTON [AP] — A conservative candidate for governor of Massachusetts Wednesday asked New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson not to speak at his fundraising dinner Friday, apparently fearing the fallout from the governor's controversial remarks about South Africa.

Edward F. King of Boston said he withdrew the speaking invitation because he did not want "immorality connected with my candidacy."

However, King, who is seeking the Republican nomination for governor, added he still was a "great admirer" of Thomson's fiscal policies.

Thomson called King after the news conference and told him he would buy a $25 ticket and attend the fundraiser anyway, according to campaign director Donald A. Feder.

"He did not say why he was coming," said Feder.

King does not object to Thomson's attendance at the affair.

Later, Thomson sounded bitter in a statement released through a spokesman in Concord, N.H.: "He, King, has made his own stew. I hope his voters will make it palatable."

Many of King's supporters had urged him to retain Thomson as a speaker at the dinner, saying "don't waiver in the line of fire."

Thomson has come under fire for his remarks and praise of South Africa during his recent trip there. Thomson said blacks in South Africa, a country which practices a system of racial segregation known as apartheid, enjoyed "more political and economic freedom.... than in many of the new nations of Africa."

The governor said he found that South Africa's blacks live better than some of his neighbors in Orford, N.H.

King would not comment on the governor's statements, but he said he did not want to "become associated with the system of government which I find morally reprehensible."

King said Thomson's connection with his campaign created "just the sort of controversy I had hoped to avoid." He said he had tried to confine his campaign to domestic issues.

The speaking invitation was rescinded "to preclude further difficulties," King said.

King, who shares many of Thomson's positions on economic and social issues, said he hoped the incident would not "impede" potential support among blacks.

He also said he hoped his action had not "burned all bridges and friendship with the governor of New Hampshire."

Student election spurs fight

BOSTON [AP] — Police arrested five white and three black students after a fracas yesterday at Hyde Park High School sent four persons, including a teacher and a police officer, to the hospital for treatment.

The fighting erupted a day after a student election in which whites reportedly won all the contested positions although more blacks than whites attend the school.

The school was closed for the day, said the School Department. A spokesman said "there was a lot of damage to the school."

One of the blacks arrested was charged with kicking Police Sgt. Michael Cammarata in the groin, said the police.

"It was a donneybrook," said Al Nupis, police spokesman.

The road to more unemployment

The firing of Paul Puryear represents not a change in the way of academic priorities, but rather a change in political exigencies. Puryear was that rapidly disappearing species of administrator (compare Meldrim Thomson) that lack the all important bureaucratic talent of screwing people slowly and non-publicly, so that they resign on their own and cite reasons that are both hard to prove and at the same time old news. No doubt Puryear will be replaced by one of this breed. Bromery simply cannot afford to be embarrassed at a time when he is up for the job of President of UMass.

The central and all important issue of the direction of UMass is to take has surely not been affected by the events of January. Obviously, the governor and those that direct the course of higher education in this state seem to be directing the University and colleges of this state towards vocational training. This is probably the result of public pressure on those officials; pressure applied because the job situation for people graduating from college has not been as rosey in recent years as it has been in past years. Their programs will not be changed by the loss of one poorly adapted hatchet-man.

This is because they realize that the problem of college graduate employment is partly caused by their inability to tell the overwhelming majority of white middle class voters that may be their sons and daughters don't belong in a liberal arts insstitution, and maybe they should go to Junior College or Vocational school This inability caused the abherration of huge college enrollment with no corresponding college aptitude. An analogous situation would be putting students with no mechanical ability in well equipped automotive repair schools, and give them gut courses and easy marks for shoddy work. In a few years nobody in their right mind would hire someone from these institutions.

Some post high school study is necessary in this society especially since the grammar schools and high schools don't teach verbal skills as well as they used to. A university is not the place though. Something is simply wrong when the University of Massachusetts sends Hotel and Restaurant Management students on field trips to hotels in order to learn how to set up a banquet successfully. This type of thing can and is done by other institutions (sometimes within the companies that own the hotels) more efficiently and without making those who want this type of education suffer through academic disciplines they neither require nor wish to take in order to fulfill their Core Requirements.

What needs to be done, then, is to change the conditions that make going to college after high school mandatory if you are middle class. Politicians, though, are not ones to such conditions, but rather to feed upon them for political gain. They responded in the sixties with huge enrollments, and now that has soured they are trying to save themselves in a similarly disingenius way. This is not to blame the politicians totally. The middle class has to share the blame, along with business, but when a crisis like low college graduate employment has such obvious causes one might be naive enough to expect politicians would state the problem and its causes, or at least not make the problem worse.

Amnesty for Mexican dissident

To the Editor:

I would like to introduce you to an important political asylum case. Hector Marroquin is a socialist activist, a union organizer and a former student leader in Mexico. He has been indicted by the Mexican government on frameup charges of terrorism and guerrilla warfare.

Although not as well publicized as other Latin American countries, the Mexican government has an infamous record of brutality and oppression. Amnesty International, the Nobel Peace Prize-winning organization has issued a report expressing special concern "at the degree of violence used by the police and military when making arrests; it frequently results in fatal injury."

While still in high school in 1968, Hector — and thousands of others — were deeply affected by the Tlatelolco Massacre, where peaceful student demonstrators in Mexico City were attacked by government troops firing machine guns into the crowd, murdering at least 300.

Rather than turn himself over to the Mexican government and almost certain imprisonment and torture or death, Hector fled to this country. He has lived and worked here for three and one-half years.

In June 1974, Marroquin was accused of carrying out a guerrilla assault in Monterey. At the time of the alleged attack, Marroquin was hospitalized in Galveston, Texas, recovering from a serious auto accident.

In September, 1977, Marroquin was arrested in Texas as he returned from a visit to a lawyer in Mexico. At the time of the arrest, the U.S. government tried to "exclude" him — without giving him the right to take his case before the American people. Without giving him the right to wage a legal fight for his right to remain in this country as a political refugee.

Defense efforts co-ordinated by the U.S. Committee for Justice to Latin American Political Prisoners [USLA] forced the government to grant Marroquin a deportation hearing, set for January 17. The hearing was subsequently postponed indefinitely. Through USLA's efforts, $10,000 was raised to pay Marroquin's bail — five times the usual sum required in such cases.

Yielding to a national protest campaign, the Immigration and Naturalization Service has granted permission for Marroquin to make public speaking appearances around the country.

It is necessary to bring this case to the public because, according to Marroquin's lawyer, Margaret Winter: "None of us can forget for a minute that this case is not going to be won by lawyers. It will not be won because of the neutrality of the courts. It will not be won because of Jimmy Carter's crocodile tears about human rights in Latin America. This case will be won because and only because [of a] nation-wide movement for asylum for Hector Marroquin."

Petitions supporting Marroquin's right to political asylum will be circulated throughout the UMass campus in the next few weeks.

Persons interested in the Hector Marroquin case may address letters to: Freddi Very, 130 Gold St., Belchertown; or c-o Rees, 4 Adams St., Easthampton.

Telegrams or letters of support for Marroquin should be sent to: Leonel Castillo, Director, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, D.C. 20536. Send a copy to: USLA, 853 Broadway, Suite 414, New York, N.Y. 10003.

Smoke detectors a good thing

To the Editor:

Do you understand that the most deadly fires DO start IN dorm rooms, and that to put detectors exclusively in the halls could defeat their purpose? Yes, one could sleep more soundly without a detector in one's room. One could keep sleeping forever. It is not an overreaction which prompted individual room detectors. It is simply a logical step towards individual safety in the dorms.

There are four situations of fire within a dorm room. First, a room with an opened door. A hall detector would probably be able to sense the fire within a reasonable time, but it is obvious that passersby or the returning occupant would notice the smoke by then anyway. Second, an empty, closed room. Third, an occupied closed room, and fourth, an occupied closed room wherein the occupants are asleep. For the last instances, a hall detector is hardly suitable. By the time the heat or smoke reached a level sufficient to set off a hall detector, it would have built up in the room to a deadly degree, probably leaving the room demolished and perhaps those inside dead. The idea of the individual detector is to warn those in the fire's immediate reach in sufficient time for escape. Fires do happen, they happen in dorm rooms, and when they reach a dangerous level, they usually become fatal because there is not a warning device in the immediate area.

My brother's dorm room caught on fire. By the time it was discovered, it had reached a deadly level in flames and smoke. It only became evident when flames and smoke burst out the windows. That's the point. Sighting a dorm room fire is usually right at the beginning or at an advanced stage where the damage is intense. This is what the detectors seek to avoid. Perhaps they seem absurd for the waste can accidents, but they can prevent the unnoticed waste can accident from becoming a tragedy. My brother's room had no detection device. Neither he nor his roommate were there, the door was closed, others on the floor were at dinner. He was lucky to be out. The room was destroyed.

Sure detectors are a hassle. They take up a precious plug and can be set off by fools. So it feels like 1984, but don't risk your life, and God forbid, your stereo.

Enough of that. It'll be good, Bill, when you get out of the vacation doldrums and start writing some well-thought-out editorials. And it'll be nice to read about something new, instead of another recap on the same old campus center and crowded dorms drivel which you drown yourself in.

By JULIE MELROSE

Once in a while, because of the time period and society into which they happened to be born, certain groups of people become "victims of history". Contemporary American young women are such a group.

Born at a time when sex roles and societal expectations were clearly defined, we've found those standards becoming increasingly ambiguous as we've grown up. We are told that no previous generation of American women has had freedom equal to ours. It is true that we have a tremendous number of options available to us. But American society, for the most part, has refused to accept women who have chosen to exercise those options.

Our choice, then, comes down to this: we can live in a lifestyle that is "socially acceptable" for women in America, with all its inherent limitations and abuses, or we can step outside that traditional role and live as psychologically healthy outcasts.

Women who opt for a feminist lifestyle soon discover the price they must pay. To be a feminist in America is to be a person engaged in constant struggle, with no way to turn back after your consciousness has been raised and no concrete "victory" in sight.

Robin Morgan said at Hampshire College last spring that true liberation means not even having to deal with the fact that you have been oppressed. By this definition, women living now will never truly be liberated. We may change the laws, work at

Our Aim is True

Mass encounters of the hype kind

By SKIP TENCZAR

"Close Encounters is coming!" I think that I first heard this phrase from a hunchbacked "bo" sucking wine from a paper bag in one of Boston's garbage can alleys early in October. I didn't think much of it at first, but not before long, the saying would be known by almost every film reviewer in the country. You see; the Columbia Pictures National Publicity and Promotion Division was working hard at what they do best. The usual press releases were mailed to the newspapers, but on top of that, over 1500 journalists from throughout the country were flown free of charge to one of the film's dual premieres in New York and Los Angeles. Furthermore, they were given an elaborately designed publicity packet, a specially made Close Encounters cassette tape recorder plus six cassettes (to conduct interviews with the cast and producers), and hotel accommodations, all courtesy of Columbia Pictures. If I didn't live in a society where this is common practice, I might be tempted to use the term payola.

The motion picture was sure to be a success. It had an all star cast, the director of "JAWS", a 25 million dollar production expenditure, and an immense publicity campaign. As expected, shortly after the premiere thousands of articles were published about the film in the nation's newspapers and magazines. From Time to The National Enquirer, from The Phoenix to The Valley Advocate. The "bo's" whisper was now elevated to a shout by the wined and dined journalists: "Close Encounters is coming, just in time for Christmas."

Well, Christmas came and so did CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE THIRD KIND. When I arrived at the theatre I was greeted by long admission lines. It seemed that most everyone had heard the media's applause for the movie, and like me they had come to see what all the fuss was about. We were anticipating an unusual visual experience which

Below The Salt takes its name from the relationship between nobles and peasants at the medieval European dinner table. The preciousness of salt required that it be placed accessible to the lords and beyond the peasants' reach. Hence, the peasants sat "below the salt".

In an age where the tools of expression are like cultural salt, our paper is dedicated to the restoration of the participatory function of art, music and literature as well as physical culture.

Below The Salt is prepared to accept articles of diverse opinion on a variety of topics of cultural interest, as well as original contributions. Submissions can be made at the Collegian offices, 113 Campus Center; 545-3500.

Art against the wall

By STACY BELKIND

For American artist George O'Keeffe, the act of creating art is "filling a space in a beautiful way." Sounds nice enough. However, trying to define art is a near impossible proposition; there are no clear-cut boundaries to contain it, and it is impossible for rules to be broken because there are none. This can lead tc unnecessary trouble.

Art critic Leo Steinberg in his essay "The Plight of the Public", acknowledges the frustration experienced by the viewer when confronted by art that puzzles more than it pleases. Steinberg remains empathic as he recalls the time when friends of his were raving about an artist showing in New York that left him bewildered. The important thing was that the artist's work impressed him in spite of his not being able to come to grips with it at the time. Slowly, ideas began to click and the great mystery of the New York artist became unraveled. The point of recounting this story is to try to dismiss the notion that art is intimidating — it is only if you let it be so.

What the viewer brings to a work of art is more important than one might suspect. We all approach art through varying degrees of involvement, yet no matter how active or passive our participation is, we bring our experiences, ideas and imagination, without which, to approach any creative process would be intimidating.

During the coming months, there will be ample opportunity to become acquainted with works by local, student and visting artist. The following listing is a partial guide to exhibits being held at the five colleges.

The University Gallery is open Tuesdays from 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., Wednesdays through Fridays from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

On February 5, the gallery is holding a reception for the opening of a new show by Italian painter Sandro Martini and Greek-American photographer Philip Tsiaras. The reception will be from 2 to 4 p.m., and their show will continue through February 19.

More than 60 of Tsiara's photographs will be on display, showing the development of his technique and subject matter from his stark landscapes through his "motion series" and his more recent self-portraits and photo-pastels.

Tsiaras, a 1976 graduate of Amherst college, has used the Amherst area for many of his earlier photographs.

Martini is a young artist who has exhibited widely in Italy. This show is his first in the United States and also is the first time the University Gallery has presented a one-person exhibition of a European artist.

From February 28 to March 17, the gallery will be exhibiting sets designed by Rauschenberg, Johns and Warhol for the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, a portfolio of prints designed for the company by Cage, Johns, Morris, Nauman, Rauschenberg, Stella and Warhol. There will also be a few costumes by Rauschenberg.

From April 8 to May 7, the University Gallery will present "Eleven Contemporary Photographers". This exhibit stems out of a seminar on criticism of photography led by art historian Mark Rothskill. Six works from each photographer will be exhibited. The catalogue, written by Prof. Rothskill, reflects the discussions of that seminar.

Beginning May 16 and continuing through June 4, the gallery will present "Class of 1928 — Photography collection." The class of 1928 has donated a considerable sum of money to be used to establish a permanent photography collection.

The Smith College Museum of Art is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Sundays 2 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

From February 10 through April 2, a show of watercolors by Richard Yarde, contemporary figurative artist whose subjects are drawn from urban black life and recent black American history.

Beginning April 7, "Antiquities in the Renaissance" will be on display. A lot of work has gone into this major international loan exhibition of over 125 objects of great interest and value from museums and galleries from all over the world. This exhibition illustrates the remarkable ways in which Renaissance artists made use of the antique. The exhibits includes small bronzes, life-size marble sculpture, paintings, drawings, engravings, coins and metals. The exhibit runs through June 6.

Beginning April 20 and lasting through the summer, a retrospective exhibit of paintings by Smith College Prof. George Cohen will be on display.

The Mount Holyoke Art Museum is open Mondays through Fridays from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturdays and Sundays from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Now through March 12, "American Art" will be on display from the Mount Holyoke Collection. This exhibit is comprised of paintings, drawings, sculpture and some decorative arts.

From February 15 through March 12, a display of Contemporary Japanese Women Printmakers can be seen.

From March 27 to April 30 a show entitled "Silence and Slow Time" will feature works by four contemporary artists: Clement Meadmore; Salvatore Romano, with environmental water pieces on the Mt. Holyoke campus; Jake Berthot; and Robin MacKenzie.

A lecture by Dore Ashton in conjunction with the exhibition "Silence and Slow Time" will be held March 30, at 7:30 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium.

The Mead Art Gallery of Amherst College is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

During the month of February, "Drawings for Outdoor Sculpture" will be shown in the Main Gallery and the Arms Gallery. "American Genre Paintings" will be on display in the Basset Room. "French and Italian Prints will be on display in the Collins Print room and a display of Oriental Art can be seen in the Daniels Gallery.

The photographs of Philip Tsiaris will be on display at the University Gallery until Feb. 19.

This month's motion

By SHARON TRUE

If dance is your thing, then you'll flip this spring! (Oh boy, was that bad!) Seriously though, some fantastic performances that you won't want to miss are in the offing for spring, with five of them right off the bat in February.

Starting off the semester (Feb. 2, 3, 4) UMass dance faculty member Andrea Watkins will present a concert that she has choreographed entitled "Excursions: A Dance Concert in Two Acts." The concert will include singing and speech as well as dance in a wide variety of styles ranging from a light-hearted look at the musical comedy scene ("Paying my Dues to All Those Shows that Paid All Those Bills") to a compelling interpretation of the Shakespearean heroines ("Facets: Juliet, Ophelia, Emilia, and Anne"). Accompanying the dances will be Anthony Crescione, musical director for the University Dancers, who will provide live accompaniment on the grand piano, several electric pianos, and various percussion instruments.

Then, Feb. 7, 8, 9 the highly acclaimed Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater will be at the Fine Arts Center. Ailey's dancers are known for their exciting style of movement which is based on classical ballet, but with the sensuality and vitality that blacks seem to know best how to project.

dance

We are most fortunate to have a company the caliber of Contemporary Dance System in residence at Amherst College this spring. In addition to teaching dance at Amherst, artistic director Daniel E. Lewis and the CDS dancers are presenting a concert Feb. 10, 11, 12, including resident choreographer Anna Sokolow's masterpiece "Dreams."

The Bill Evans Dance Company of Seattle will spend a three-day residency (Feb. 13, 14, 15) at Mt. Holyoke offering workshops to dancers in the Valley in addition to their performance Feb. 13 at Chapin uuditorium. Using music ranging from Bach to Glenn Miller to Indian raga, Evans has been hailed by the Washington Post as "a dancer-choreographer with more disguises than Sherlock Holmes, all wondrously credible and diverting."

Last but certainly not least, Smith College will present its Student Dancer Concert Feb. 23, 24, 25. Student dance concerts deserve the support of the community fot the well-rehearsed, enjoyable performances they present.

That's February — watch the "Salt" for other happening in dance this spring (which includes a performance by the phenomenal "avant-garde" Merce Cunningham Dance Company).

The year ahead

Shared marquees

By MARIO BARROS

Now that the year 1977 is behind us and we're through celebrating it, we can take a serious look at what 1978 is about to bring us musically. There have been some solid developments already changing the face of the music; some startling, some not so startling. What I'm going to attempt now is to sort these developments out and try to pick out some of the patterns that they could well establish.

Already, the year has lent us a realization of one of last year's prospective marriages. Towards the end of last year, Bob Marley of the Jah world was touting the merits and possibilities of a union between — are you ready for this? — reggae and punk. This may or may not come as a shock to you because you may or may not realize that the possibilities for this "marriage" to happen and prosper are rather astounding. First of all, many clubs which feature "New Wave" bands also feature reggae bands and frequently they share the same marquee. The fans of one are very often the fans of the other. With this in mind, Marley has envisioned a "Punky Reggae Party" that would be the coming together of the more progressive people from Jah and the New Wave. This has led Marley to write and record "Punky Reggae Party", a single that is now charting very well in the United Kingdom.

Many folks feel that this is the natural order of things in that the development of punk and reggae are virtually the same. They proclaim that while reggae has become the promulgator of the Jah people, punk is the voice of the frustrated and exploited working class. It's often labeled a "working class phenomenon". With this as the common denominator, the union should be well-founded and strong.

However, this union could be borne of friction. As I mentioned before, many reggae followers have embraced the New Wave. Most of these followers are white and their weight is being felt on the charts and in the marketplace. The struggle for sales and airplay is being won at the moment by the punks. It seems to be a case of "You've got your struggles, I've got mine".

Is "Punky Reggae Party" a sign of things to come? Well, all indicators show that the seed is planted in fertile soil and with the song charting well in the U.K. (where the struggle/love affair is the most acute) it will be at least very interesting to watch. If "Punky Reggae Party" causes any real significant changes it will most certainly be one of the most important songs of the decade.

I hope that I haven't given you the impression that reggae is dying. On the contrary, 1978 will prove to be a big year for the Jah music with many new artists on the scene to liven things up a bit. Folks like DelRoy Washington (coming into his own), Culture, Reggae Regular and others will make a strong bid to take the limelite away the more established people like Peter Tosh, Soul Syndicate, Desmond Dekker and yes, Bob Marley & The Wailers. The band that could well come out of nowhere and shock everyone is Steel Pulse. This, from all reports, is a good reggae band whose avante garde approach and wild stage show will grab them many followers. Keep them in mind because they're aim is definitely true!

music

While these acts will dot the U.K. charts and occasionally chart here in the states, one group that will make a serious mark on the U.S. charts is Santa Esmerelda featuring the vocal talents of LeRoy Gomez. This group broke in the discos with a powerful version of "Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood"; the old Animals' hit of the 60s. The cut is catching on to pop radio and softening the listeners up for "Black Pot". The A side of the LP delivers a disco tour de force in the 15" version of the title cut while the B side contains some material that the pop people will have to deal with. 'Nuf Sed!!

While the predicting mood is upon me, I'd like to predict that this year will force us to banish the use of the term Soul/Disco. There are a couple of reasons for this. One is that we're seeing a return to traditional soul music. Overproduced soul is being phased out while simpler forms seem to be invading the scene. Cuts like "Back In Love Again" show that the people can still be caught with the simple hook. Also, some artists who went to extreme production have gone back. A good case in point is Eddie Kendricks who left Norman Harris and went back to Leonard Caston and Detroit to create his last LP. It will be interesting to see what Eddie and Arista have in store for us.

This separation hardly severs the ties between soul and disco. In fact, I'l say that without soul, we wouldn't have disco. Soul was the dance music of the '60s while in the '70s, dancing is now a business and disco has broadened soul's boundaries and taken it out of the house parties and into the discos. In short, Soul is tightening up.

This leaves us with the question; where is

Computer Careers at Amdahl

Computer professionals are aware that today's most advanced large-system technology was developed by a company that, not too long ago, was virtually unknown. It was during late 1975—when Amdahl delivered its first multi-million-dollar 470V/6 system following a 5-year, $50,000,000 effort—that the company first attracted widespread industry attention. Now, Amdahl is the most talked about company in the industry: a compact group of highly talented high technologists producing the world's highest performing general purpose computers, the V/5, V/6 and V/7. Over a quarter billion dollars worth of Amdahl systems is now working worldwide in every industry sector using large-scale computers.

The original design team is still virtually intact and working on future systems. Although we are growing at an extremely rapid pace, we are committed to retaining the same creative environment that yielded the V/5, V/6 and V/7. We are still small by computer industry comparisons. We are still friendly. We still enjoy attacking tasks because we think it's fun. And we still reward personal efforts with personal recognition.

We think Amdahl is a great place to work. There's still room on the ground floor for you if you are about to receive a BS or advanced degree in electrical engineering or computer sciences, and consider yourself a cut above your classmates in competence, enthusiasm and potential.

disco headed? The music of the dance will live on and undergo evolutional changes so it will survive the winds of change. This is no change as disco has shown the ability to do so. To satisfy this need for change (which is great as disco is the most exposed music to its immediate audience. The average disco-goer frequents his favorite club(s) about twice a week and a popular song usually gets played 2 or 3 times a night) DJs will look more to imports. This search doesn't mean just Cerrone and Giorgio Moroder anymore. We'll hear more of folks like Shiela B. Devotion, Belle Epoque, and the Gibson Brothers. These people haven't fallen to the rhythm ace (an instrument that only measures a perfect beat while the synthesizer is woven in and out of it.) thus they're music carries much more feeling and excitement. Also, with the success of so many imports last year, we'll get a hold of more debut acts as domestic labels feverishly seek out foreign tapes.

While on the topic of Disco, I see funk more of a force in '78 along with funk crawling into the pop spotlight a little more. We have groups like the Commodores, Mass Production and Slave taking their imitative funk to the stage and creating an appetite in the people to hear what the hell they're imitating. This appetite will be for more ParliaFunkadelic, more Bar-Kays etc. There may even be some funk reissues!!

One form of music that will be on the decline is fusion Jazz (Jazz-Rock) Fusion artists have taken the music relatively nowhere and people are looking are looking finally to the true innovators a la Ornette Coleman and Sun Ra. Also hot are reissues of folks like John Coltrane and "comeback" efforts by people like Dexter Gordon who have been thrilling the European audience so long. It's good to see Americans starting to appreciate it sown masters as much as the Europeans do. Traditional Jazz and its state of the art performances will show fusion's rockish abuse, over-crowded chords and confused riffs as stagnant and going nowhere.

In ending, I'd like to site the producers as they are the people who bring it to us and flavor it along the way. W. Michael Lewis and Laurin Rinder will have another great year and will finally get the recognition they deserve. This is for two reasons. One is their immense and diverse talent and the other is their strong ties and good work with Butterfly Records, a label that is rapidly becoming the next major independent label.

With that, I bid you good bye for now and a good year to come.

An interview with the Chancellor

Below the Salt Editor Ken Shain interviewed Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last week on a variety of topics. Among the subjects were Bromery's recent appointment to the Exxon Board of Directors and several campus issues.

Salt A lot of things have transpired since the August interview; what primarily have you learned and what do you consider your chief accomplishments during this period?

Bromery Well, several things have happened and I'll put them not necessarily in order of their impact on the campus or their significance to me; I'll just reel them off. First is that since the August interview, of course, is that President (Robert C.) Wood has stepped down and we have an interim president and I've had to go through the adjustment from the style of administration that President Wood had to that of Pat Patterson. I must admit that it's been a fairly easy transition because I've known Franklin Patterson for a good number of years; I was on the Board of Trustees at Hampshire College when he was at Hampshire College. The other adjustment was that when you change presidents like this, you also have a changing board as the membership of the board changes. So there's been a period of adjustment for the board too. Whenever you have a large number of a new member appointed to the Board of Trustees there is a certain period of time where they have to get themselves organized and used to each other and then begin to determine what are the things that are important to them that are different from the old board and also how they like things presented to them; in what depth, in what detail, and also what are the issues they are not interested in and what are the issues that are significant. So there's a period of adjustment both for the board in getting used to themselves as a new board and also us getting used to them as well as them getting used to us. In the meantime we've got this presidential shift that's coming.

I think the other things we have to look at is that we've had a fairer turnover. We had President Wood stepping out, we've had the Chancellor of Boston, Chancellor (Carlo L.) Golino resign. We have an Acting Chancellor and a search for a permanent Chancellor. We have a search for a new president of our own University. I have a change here on campus; two changes in fact, one about to take place and the other having taken place. I lost the provost and I have an acting provost in the interim and will be getting out the search for a new provost, what I consider the key administrative post on campus. I also have a search committee that is just about completed for a vice chancellor for student affairs. Therefore I am going to lose a person that I got very used to working with. I think the students worked very well with him. He's just a very good administrator, a very good choice, one of my few good choices, Bob Woodbury. I'm going to regret losing Bob. I wish he'd stay on, but he makes his own decisions. Then I have a new Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, Jim McBee. Jim is getting used to the way I operate and I'm getting used to the way Jim operates but I'm looking forward in a very positive way. I've lost my Director of Budget, Warren Gulko and I've gotten a new director of budget in. Fortunately, George Beatty was the associate director and it didn't take me that long to get used to George. But George operates in a different style from Warren so I have to make that adjustment.

I guess the other things that have had a significant impact has been the fact that for the first time I have come out fairly early in declaring my candidacy for an office. When I was up for the chancellorship here, I was also being talked to by the governor's office for the secretary of education. And so I was trying to decide which way I was going to go on that issue. Here I went through the difficult time of the discussions. Coming from Washington, was an offer for the presidency of the University of D.C. which was difficult to turn down even though I knew I was going to turn it down. Nevertheless, it was difficult to do because the challenge was there. But the other government jobs, I guess I've talked to people in Washington about four different administrative jobs in the federal government since last summer. In each case I knew fairly well in advance that I wasn't probably going to take them but nevertheless I figured I had to take a look at them because at that point I hadn't decided about the presidency here. So I'd say it's been a fairly active year for me.

The other thing that I think is important is that this is the second year of budget increases on campus away from our low of a few years ago but also this is the first year of a moderately reasonable increase in the budget. So now I find the campus is on what I hope to be the upswing. The trend is up. The state has turned around the fiscal problems it was facing and I'm looking forward to building back up what we lost. And I think by building it back up at this fixed rate that we're growing at I think we'll do a better job. So, except for my difficulty here four weeks ago with the deans and provost, I think it looks pretty positive.

Salt Shifting to your own personal prospects for the future, what kind of position did you receive with Exxon and how did this come about?

Bromery Well, I'm an exploration geo-physicist and so I've worked in mineral and petroleum exploration cn and off for almost 30 years. I'm not much of a vacation person. In fact right now, after my vacation in December, I'm not sure whether vacations are very exciting to me. I don't like to go on vacations because I get bored sitting on a beach or doing something like that. I think I could take a vacation where I was moving or doing something. In lieu of vacations, I usually try to take around two weeks a year and sometimes, distributing a couple days here and a couple days there. I've been doing consulting work. I've done consulting work for Kennecott Copper in Africa. I've been doing consulting work for Exxon and I've been doing consulting work for some private engineering companies, that is, dam sites and stuff like that. And I've been doing this now with Exxon for about seven years as a consultant, primarily to their mineral program and primarily trying to put together a good working relationship with, say, a company like Exxon and African countries. So for these years, I've been going into various countries in Africa, maybe a dozen or more African countries trying to find out if these African governments were interested in a joint venture. Now I haven't gotten involved in any ventures where the U.S. company is the sole owner. I've gone primarily for a joint venture type of thing where the partner in the venture is the African country. And so what happened was much to my surprise I got a call one day from the chairman of the board at Exxon asking me to come by and have a talk with him about being a candidate for the board of directors. It is very difficult to get on the Board of Directors of Exxon. In New York parlance, they call that one of the "blue-chip" boards. So I went to see the chairman, Cliff Garvin and also saw Howard Kaufman, president. He's a geologist. Tom Barrows, he's a senior vice president, is also a geologist. I met with them and talked with them and they said we had an opening on the board. They said that because of my geophysical expertise and also my expertise in running a large organization, though nowhere near the size of Exxon, but large management of a large organization making management decisions, um, so they had looked me over and they said they wanted me and I looked them over and said that I would gladly serve. So they put me on the board. I serve on two committees. One is the Nominating Committee, which reviews the criteria for new persons who may come on the board, but the other I'm on is the Contributions Committee of Exxon, and of course Exxon is among the larger organizations which impact with the universities in things like contributions. So about half of Exxon's contributions go towards higher education or some form of education and have a complete range of small programs in the cities. We have some programs here which I can't participate in here because of possible conflict of interest. But we did have an Exxon foundation grant here when Warren Gulko was here. And I'm also sitting up on the corporate board with all of the other people there. There is one other college president, a private college president, a woman, that is on the board from Beloit College, President Peterson. But most of the other board members are corporate presidents and to me, I think it's important, not only for me personally, for professional reasons, but I think its important for the University of Massachusetts, that the Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts serve on the corporate board because that's a phenomena that normally has been with the private schools, and the private schools like to get their presidents on these corporate boards because that represents, to move around the table there, a large chunk of corporate America. So, to me, I see a lot of positive spin-offs, not only for me professionally and personally, but I think for the University and the campus.

Salt Would you say that your ascendence to the board is indicative of a certain amount of racial progress that we've made?

Bromery Well the thing that's neat about Exxon, is that when you get on a big corporate board it takes you a long time to learn what it is you are supposed to be responsible for, and therefore it takes maybe a year or so before you become effective. With Exxon, I was able to land on my feet and get involved with the issues that the board was digging through. They have to make their money to satisfy their stockholders, that's why they are in business, but at the same time there is a growing concern in those corporations about, even if it's only for their public image in the petroleum companies, the utility companies, and all now are beginning to become concerned with their public image and they're bringing in people who can help them out. I feel free to say what I want to say. I mean I'm not the least bit reticent about bringing an issue up. And so here I am sitting up on a corporate board and I consider myself much closer to the average man on the street than those corporate presidents. I have also traveled enough and have enough concern for social concerns, much more than the average president up there. So the way I see it is that you're not going to make a 180 degree change overnight.

Salt Do you expect any reaction to your acceptance of the job? Will it diminish your effectiveness as an administrator on this campus?

Bromery I have a published telephone number and I have an open line and I have talked with some people and the concern ranges from those people that say that that'll lead you away from campus. That won't wash. The board meeting is once a month and out of those 12 meetings, they hope that you could make 10, but you could make as many as eight and still stay on the board. Even if I go to every board meeting, I go down in the morning to New York City and go to the board meeting and be back on campus within six hours, and most of that time is spent traveling. So I don't see that as being an issue. It meets once a month and it's fixed. So we know where it is. It isn't like it's going to interfere with anything. I wouldn't have taken it if it did. The first thing that I considered is whether it impacted with my responsibilities to represent the University on, say, the Board of Trustees. I wouldn't have taken it if their board meetings were going to be on the same day our meetings are held. So there is some concern for that. But I don't think it'll hold water.

As far as my selling out, sure, I mean how can one say I haven't sold out because I don't know what I sold out from. I figure I represent one of the large institutions in the country, and this large institution in the United States of America can't be separate from the corporate structure of America. You know, we are in a triangle. What I see is that it is much better to have me sitting on the board than another corporate president. So, I may have to put on a suit and tie and go down and conduct myself in a dignified manner on that board now. But on the issues, they will listen to me. And I figure that when I say something about an issue, because of both my position and my race and my experience, they will listen to me a lot more than they would listen to somebody else. They will listen to some of the other guys on the board when they discuss those corporate issues, profits and losses, but when they talk about human relations, concerns for people how much are we as a corporation giving to social causes and how is this money being used, how effective are these programs. And we get into talking about corporate policies. And when I talk about how corporate policies are being developed that are going to have an impact on the average person, I can articulate that because I'm not making a quarter of a million dollars a year or so like some of those other guys, where if the oil bill went up, it wouldn't both them. They don't even know what an oil bill is. Whereas I can say, I know. Not only do I know from my personal life, but from my sons and daughters who own their homes and get stuck trying to pay the bills. When I am buying the oil here, I know what is happening to the oil prices. I can also get an idea because when I sit down here and try to make plans for the University I have a better insight into what it looks like next year regarding the availability of oil and the prices in the world than anybody else.

Salt You seem then to be in a direct advisory position to this corporation as far as matters in Africa....

Bromery That's right. In fact that's probably one of the more significant things that I feel I can do. See, I'm looking forward to the fact that the United States is slowly becoming aware, moving closer and closer to recognizing the fact that in the world today, our allies are not our traditional allies. We have new allies. African countries, Latin American countries, Asian countries, developing countries. For these developing countries it is to our advantage to participate with them in the development of, but not to exploit, their natural resources. We're going to have to do it in a partnership-relationship. We learned the hard way in South America what that kind of exploitation can do. It runs out. It doesn't have any kind of payoffs. Short-term, yeah, you'll get some kind of payoff. But long-term it doesn't pay. The new African nations are growing as a result of their independence, and we need each other. But instead of us going in their for what we can gain from them in the short-term, we should go in there for what we could both benefit from.

Salt Have you been approached to join the Trilateral Commission or been recruited in any way?

Bromery No, I haven't been approached.

Salt Last year you took a trip to Japan, a vertex in the Brzezinskian triangle, to strengthen ties with a UMass sister school, Hokaido University. Was this not also strenghtening ties, Trilateral ties, with Japan as well?

Bromery With Japan? No, I didn't get that. I went to Japan, you know as a guest of the Japanese government and the University of Hokaido for their hundredth anniversary. And that's been my only trip. Also at that time I was invited down by the Government of Korea, to go into Korea and view their educational programs. I didn't happen to have the offer you were pointing to.

Salt Being a geo-physicist, it must give you a funny feeling when you go to another country to confer with its leaders and you know more about that country's mineral resources than they do.

Bromery It's a good talking point. What I usually do is sit down, and it's always surprising to me because particularly in Japan and in Korea, I arrived as the Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts. They had difficulty figuring out what a chancellor was. They kept calling me president. The University here had two presidents there; there was President Bromery and President Wood. Hah! But once I sat down with them and I started talking with them about the geology of Korea or the earthquake belts in Japan or something, it was always good.

Salt Why the controversy over Dr. Puryear?

Bromery As I have said earlier, and I'm just sort of repeating what was said earlier, is that I think that one has to take a look back in retrospect at the environment, all the parameters of the environment. One is that about the time that Dr. Puryear came, we were just coming out of a very difficult economic squeeze. The budget was cut and we were just in the first year of a very small let up with a very tight budget. So there were all kinds of frustrations and fears about the future of the University. At the same time we had a new governor and there was the perceived and sometimes real differences that existed between the governor and President Wood. The board was changing membership, the faculty finally voted to unionize in the hopes that that was going to be something better for them. In other words, we were in an environment that had all the negative impact factors. So, here we came and at that time the board which was going through a transition had decided that they wanted to do some long range planning. And we had been getting requests from the president's office and from the board's long range planning committee that they wanted some kind of long range plan for the campuses. About that time, you remember, about a year before, just before the Provost, Puryear came, I set up a commission to set up and obtain goals because I knew we wanted to put that on a piece of paper prior to when I expected the planning to come along, because if we didn't state where we were going to go, then the planning would end up without any kind of thrust or any kind of philosophical direction. So, here the president requested this long range plan and I ended up with a new provost who had to make the regular adjustments to the campus but also in the environment of all those negatives. The Faculty Senate was changing too because the Faculty Senate was concerned about how was it going to exist, what was going to be its relationship with this new union. So there were a lot of ambiguities. There was a lot of fear. Alright, so what happens is at the request of the president's office, the plan was developed for the campus and somehow or another it didn't take very long before that plan was identified, not as a document that was done at the request of the president's office or the Board of Trustees, but almost like the provost himself decided that he was going to do some long range planning and develop the five year plan in a complete vacuum, you know, himself. And so what happened is at that moment, for some strange reason or another and I don't understand that phenomena, the people were able to detach that plan from outside the campus. There was never or very little discussion of the fact that it was requested by or asked for by the president's office. You know, there are people who could simply say you stand up and say no, and you say that one time and they pat your back and go. So, I say this along with that, the adjustment period that a new provost would normally go through which this provost never had a chance to go through, was thrust into a controversy within a couple of months after he had arrived. He arrived in October and by February he was against the wall. And so my feeling is that it got so I watched the Provost from time to time no matter what he said. And I rooted for him. Now if he went out there and said the sun was going to come up tomorrow, there would be somebody who was going to object to it and would say you're trying to force it on us. And so it was just an environment where it was very difficult to operate.

I believe in consulting the people so that nothing comes as a surprise. Now you may not agree with my final decision but you can't ever argue that you didn't have a chance to hear about it or discuss it. and in a large, significant percentage of the time, I would modify my decision because I had input in there that I had factored into my decision making part of it. So there is an advantage. I'm not saying that in consultation that the advantage always accrues with the other side. In at least half the cases the advantage accrued with me because I make a better decision. So I've always said that if you do enough consultation, and in industry terms, package up what you want to do, and deliver it properly, I find you don't have a lot of problems. People will accept if they have listened to you.

I believe that you're just going to have to create an atmosphere or an environment where everybody, to the best that you can do, understands what's going on. They may not agree with you, they may not like where you're going to go, but at least everyone has a chance to say something about it. Some administrators don't operate that way. There are some institutions that operate within a complete spectrum from what I think is my position. There are those institutions where not only the administration there can serve the campus community, but the campus community sort of runs everything, sort of like a cooperative. But we don't have that because the state won't allow you to do that. My responsibility is to the state. I can't let that happen, but I can carry it as far as I can. But you can go all the way to the other end where it is very autocratic. The president makes a pronouncement and then it goes all the way down to where the people implement the pronouncement. I can't operate in that kind of way. I can operate in that kind of matter, but I don't think the University operates that way.

Salt After all has been said and done, where do you think Dr. Puryear will wind up? Where would you like to see him go?

Bromery I don't have any idea. Right now all I know is that he has a tenured professorship in Political Science and our responsibility to him is to offer him that. His resposbility to us is to go back in there and teach classes.

Salt I understand that Dr. Bracey has offered to resign the chair over at Afro-American studies so that Dr. Puryear may take his place.

Bromery Yes. I have a copy of the letter that Dr. Bracey has sent out saying that he would resign as chairman of Afro-Am, offering the job to Dr. Puryear. There would have to be a lot of steps taken. Dr. Puryear is a tenured professor in Political Science under a different faculty and a different dean. Dr. Puryear has no relationship with Afro-Am now so it would have to be a transfer of positions from one faculty to another faculty. Those steps have to be taken; its not automatic. If one wanted to do that, he could do that, but its a process.

Salt Doctor, what is your position on collective bargaining?

Bromery Well, What I believe is that, uh-uh, My only concern with collective bargaining is that the expectations of the people involved in collective bargaining probably exceed what they can do. I hope the people adjust because there's nothing worse than to be frustrated when you thought you were going to get something that you didn't get. The faculty wanted a union, they voted for a union, and so therefore they have a union. Our hope is that we're going to have a contract that's going to have to be bargained and contract bargaining follows a standard procedure, you know, where you have all the appearances of adversary relationships. But that's part of the game or whatever you want to call it. That's a part of the process of arrving at a contract. There is a process that is done nationwide. Some schools have decided that they were not going to go through that process; we're going to come to a quick fix on a quick contract and they've regreted it, both sides. They regreted it. I feel that my primary responsibility is to the faculty, and the students, the staff, the Board of Trustees, and the University as a whole; in other words, the State. I have an obligation to the state. I have an obligation and a responsibility to have a university that's alive and that's educationally sound that I'm going to leave to somebody else. So I can't give away parts of the institution that would have a long range impact on it. I feel that we have to bargain a contract that protects the instituion and also that is fair and reasonable to the faculty and their expectations. And that's what the process is all about. There are certainly going to be some visible feelings of adversary relationships, but that's part of the process. The first contract is always the most important, because once you put something in a contract, it is very difficult to change it. I think that the language of the contract is the most important aspect and the economic part is secondary.

Salt It seems that the way it is shaping up, at least to the students, is that the faculty and the administration are in combatant positions, a mood of "combatant professionalisms" of sort.

Bromery But, you watch the combatants when they step outside and light up a cigarette or something. They're friendly and willing and then when they go back to the table, they go into the process mode and you start negotiating. Because that's it, you know, a ritual you have to go through. It would be neat if one could have an ideal contract that would be worked up by some agency in HEW or in the state that say here's one that all universities get like it or something like traditional universities are. I think that there is a tremendous difference between the public statements that are made during collective bargaining and what actually occurs in the relationship between the bargaining parties. I think that both of us are learning. The only experience that higher education has had, in collective bargaining is the industrial model. And so what we've been doing is trying to modify that model to fit the university relationships, but nevertheless, the law is the law.

The other thing that I believe is that it is important at least from my perspective, at this University, to protect the quality of this institution. Unions, by their very nature, begin to homogenize and level things so that everybody gets treated equal. No matter where you are, you're going to have to be able to reward people for something that's a little more than the average. Even if it's a janitor. The guy that does a better job than the other guy somehow or another has to get some kind of indication. It's very hard to do in a lot of unions. The University is very distinct in that we are based on some kind of merit principle. It has to be. You take some of the courses you have there with the faculty with an associate professor, all with the same salary and some of them are just superb teachers and some of them are superb researchers, and some aren't so good. Some of them are average, and some of them aren't so good at all. I think it would be a distressing thing for the University, for this University in particular, if you homogenized it to the point that regardless of how competent or how professional an individual is, it is his rank or his classification that judges what his salary is. That would be a mistake. Because once you do that, you start heading for a lower end of the spectrum. It never homogenizes up.

Salt What about tuition waivers? A lot of students would still like to see tuition waivers. Whatever happened to them?

Bromery Well actually what happened was that it was unfortunate that it got focused on the football team. That's what happened to my tuition waivers. Because what I was hoping to do was to come up with a package of tuition waivers which we could use on the campus, since all the tuition money goes back to the state anyhow. This year, we're taking some $12 or $13 million back to the state, directly back to the state. We don't even collect anything for handling the money. It goes back to the state and so therefore I was hoping for a group of tuition waivers that could be used for cases beyond need, not necesarily based on need, but to pay students for service to the campus community. I'm talking about a variety of services ranging from dorm counselors all the way to the band, the football players, or the basketball player, the woman gymnast, the woman basketball player. In other words, I'm saying that these people are out there playing football or playing concert piano or doing the dorm counseling because they enjoy doing that, but they're also providing a service to the university. When the concert pianist plays over at the concert hall, and the students and faculty and anybody who comes to that concert doesn't have to pay; its a free concert. That student is providing a service to the University. It is a contribution to the betterment of life and to the educational process. That's the environment we're in. We are a self-contained thing, you know, and to me, it's the people here that make the place exciting or beautiful or ugly or whatever. I think that there's a lot of students here that provide a service. When I watch that marching band out there in the stadium and it's pouring down rain, you know, that's a service. I'd just like to be able to have a package of tuition waivers so that we could pay students for their service to the community ranging from football to concerts to counselling. But what happened was that it became uncoupled and the first thing that came out there was that it was specifically for the football team. We spent so long discussing it and I figured we could be saving the students some money. It would be a way of keeping the fees down. Right now we don't want anymore fees. The students pay athletic fees, Campus Center fees, but it got twisted around. It's going back in now, and I'm hoping that we'll be able to get it through.

Salt This then would ultimately seek to re-emphasize the participatory function of culture on this campus, I imagine. It is of particular importance to the people in the arts, than isn't it?

Bromery The tuition waiver is a way of us saying thank you; it's a way of us creating an incentive, and encouraging the people to become more and more involved with doing things to make it a better community. And that ranges from the dormitory counselor to the fine arts people to the marching band. But also, don't let anybody kid you, the events in fine arts, the events in that stadium, in gymnastics, are P. R., good P.R., because we are seen outside the campus through that. We are seen in Boston. If we ever lost the attraction that we have here for the things that the students participate in. we'd disappear from sight.

Salt Are there any other ways of accomplishing the same thing? What are your recommendations?

Bromery Well, uh, first, I think we need it desperately here. We need it probably more so than the say a smaller college. Primarily because we're so big. I really worry about the large numbers of students here that don't participate in the University at all. They're just out there. But by the nature of people, people are made up into two types; there are the participants and there are spectators and the participants are not doing what they're doing for the spectators. Perhaps it works out that way, but most participants in the fine arts are doing that for themselves. That's their thing. The spectators are in the fine arts auditorium and they're doing their thing, too, you know, because thay's what they enjoy. There are people who can play great music and can enjoy playing it, but don't get too much turned on sitting up there listening to somebody else play it. They enjoy doing it themselves. And then there are people who sit up there and don't even want to get involved in playing music. I'm fortunate because I like to do both. It just seems to me that the thing we have to do with this University is to get more and more people involved in a wide variety of ways; either entertaining, or participating, or something that makes this a better community to live in. It doesn't do any good to bitch about it, because bitching leaves at the speed of sound; it goes out as a signal attenuates and disappears. But if you get out and do something, you get involved, and I don't necessarily mean marching or protest. That's fine if you want to get involved in that too, but there are so many positive things that we can do that we don't have vehicles for.

A good example of my tuition waivers is the federal government now has begun to recognize the problems in our cities and towns. Now this CETA program where they hire young people to do certain things. That's not just a gimmick to give people jobs and a little bit of money to keep them off the streets and keep them out of trouble. It also gets them involved with the community. And to me that pays off because you end up with better living for particularly young people and particularly in urban areas because a lot of them just feel shut off because nobody wants them, they're a nuisance and they don't have any gainful employment and life is tough on them you know? And so they're angry. So they take it our on society, the very society they're going to have to grow up and live in. So I see our tuition waivers as a sort of on-campus CETA program, except the

Aerosmith
Draw The Line
Columbia

Reviewed by Ross Nerenberg

As melodic as an electric chainsaw convention, Draw The Line doesn't hold a candle to Aerosmith's past efforts. Steven Tyler's voice is overwhelmingly raspy and grating, Joe Perry's lead guitar lines (and lead vocals on "Bright Light Fright") are tediously unimaginative, and the group's prevailing attitude throughout seems to be amazingly similar to that of several other successful groups — another victim of the "anything we bother to put out will sell anyway, so who cares about quality?" snydrome. Only the rhythm section, bassist Tom Hamilton and drummer Joey Kramer, play with any degree of determination and resolve.

Draw The Line winds up as stale rehash, nothing more. If you haven't yet outgrown this sort of heavy-metal madness, at least stick with Teddy Nugent and Foghat; they're a wee bit louder. So, this time out for Aerosmith, it's a "same old song and dance" C-.

Here we have another dumb assault on th aural cavities by the uncontested runts England's sock-o-delic litter. I guess yo can't expect too much more from a bunch dumb limey fops who've been pullin' th crap since I was wettin' my bed. The albu reeks of stupidity, from the ludricrous Mooc Blues cops to second-rate Nektar steals.

In case you didn't know, before there we punks, the British Isles were teeming wi middleaged hippies with hair streamin' dow to ther unwiped buttholes. At this tim Dorkwind used to pack 'em in at th Roundhouse with their two nudie dance and sonic sloth, worthy of the Goc themselves. Well, America never fell for th crap, and for once I can be proud of the o U.S. of A. Look in any outout hip and you see half a dozen of this useless bands' LP yours for the askin'.

I don't know, if your idea of fun is goir over to Hampshire College and picking u one of those screwy misters/misses, plyir them with quart after quart of Romilar, the thrilling them out of their tie-dyed boxe with the latest cosmic album release, the this might be for you. I mean, why don't yc buy the new Iggy or Devo records, f Christ's sake.

Ailey, Rampal, Marceau on FAC agenda

The return of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater on February 7, 8, and 9 heralds the start of the spring semester Concert Series at the Fine Arts Center.

Internationally renowned flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal and his keyboard partner Robert Veyron-Lacroix will perform on February 11 as part of the Celebrity Series.

The Canadian Opera Company, a company of 45, including the 25-member Canadian Opera Orchestra will perform the Barber Of Seville, which will be sung in English on February 16.

A recent addition and special attraction in February will bring Marcel Marceau to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall for two performances on Friday and Saturday, February 24 and 25.

Merce Cunningham and Dance Company will perform at the Fine Arts Center on March 3 as part of a five week Massachusetts residency.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, with Sixten Ehrling as conductor will be featured as part of the orchestra series on March 10.

'The World's Greatest Jazz Pianist', Oscar Peterson will present a solo performance on March 12.

Peterson was originally scheduled to perform as part of the Concert Hall Series in February. Tour adjustments have changed his performance date. All tickets for the February date will be honored for the new date, March 12, 1978.

Woody Herman and the Young Thundering Herd will return to western Massachusetts on April 13.

Last year Woody marked his 40th anniversary as a bandleader, a milestone in jazz he shares with only Count Basie and the late Duke Ellington.

His new 14 piece Young Thundering Herd features musicians from the most notable music schools in the country. Although many of them were not born when Woody first became a bandleader, he has developed a touring Herd which has audiences throughout the nation calling for more from Woody.

Broadway's funniest comedy hit, Same Time Next Year, starring Kathryn Crosby and Tony Russel completes the scheduled events at the Fine Arts Center on April 14.

Tickets for all performances at the Fine Arts Center are on sale two weeks before the event at the Fine Arts Center box office, open Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and all Ticketron locations. For more information, call 545-2511.

ELP blisters pop

Emerson, Lake, and Palmer at the Springfield Civic Center, Jan. 29

By KEN SHAIN

Climaxing in a dramatic torchlight display of 10,000 waving BIC lighters, ELP and their fans attempted to exonerate their name and good reputation with a blistering exhibition of publicity and circumstance. Playing to a capacity crowd, Emerson, Lake and Palmer showcased abbreviated renditions of almost every tune in their rock-classic repertoire, astounding many with, not only their instrumental virtuosity, but with their flair for theatrics. Gerry Nathanson provided the mood-setting and histrionic-highlighting light show while Michel Léveillé assisted the boys with their sound, supplementing the troika with pre-recorded tapes.

Emerson, Lake and Palmer's popularity has started to slip lately in England due to certain controversial opinions quoted in the British press and this current tour will give them an opportunity to head their image off at the pass. Not yielding to demands for retraction of the offending remarks, ELP have embarked on one of the largest rock-canonization programs of all time. Still and all, I'd still rather see ELP than a bunch of freaked out acid-heads standing around all night on stage with their axes acting esoteric.

Hot Tip: ELP will be in Boston on the fourth of February. To get backstage at the Garden, tell 'em you're with the "Flight Crew." It works every time...

★ Encountering hype

according to many of its praisers was to be a landmark in film history.

As many of you already know, much of the audience, myself included, found Close Encounters worthy of only a fraction of the praise which it received. The film began impressively with its title displayed on the screen accompanied by the soundtrack reaching a crescendo. The initial scenes were interesting also; lost World War II fighter planes discovered in a wind swept desert after 30 years, and then a sensitive involvement with a charming little boy whose toys come to life as the U.F.O.s pass over his Indiana home. After this comes the best section of the film where Richard Dreyfuss once again brilliantly displays his talents as one of the best film actors in America today. Dreyfuss played the part of an electric company lineman who was sent out to help remedy a massive power outage. In the middle of rural America, his first close encounter was a powerful segment of film where Spielberg's Hitchcockian use of the unknown captures this small town worker's simultaneous fear and awe at the moment. The remainder of the film can only be described as a boring, poorly contrived mystery. The weaving together of many characters to a common end and setting is an old formula. Nashville, for example, used this as a vehicle which much more success and meaning. Ultimately I can only say that Close Encounters is an average American commercial film which was made for box office receipts rather than meaningful entertainment.

Then why all this fuss, I can only attribute it to the recent media engineered science fiction fanatacism. It seems Columbia bought a lot of minds in New York and L.A., and it makes me question the influence that huge, well organized publicity campaigns have on our judgement of the popular arts today. By the way, I saw the "bo" at my visit to the theater, at the end of the film he screamed to me "Close Encounters is Coming? Ha! I wish it never came."

★ Bromery interview

compensation is really not that important. The most important thing is to get involved.

Salt Do you see any limits to growth on this campus? Are there any limits that you foresee on the horizon?

Bromery I think there's two things. The trustees have already mandated the ceiling. Therefore, I don't think the size of the campus is going to grow. I think the population is going to change though. I think that not only is the population going to change, but we'll have more older people, minority people, more women, transfer students. Traditional freshmen will probably stay the same or get smaller. I also see population shifts. In fact this goes back to the five year plan, when there was almost a fear that if you shifted over to meet the enrollment pressures in the professional schools, you were taking something away from Arts & Sciences. That's not so. My theory is that we should be flexible enough-that we can shift our resources staying overall within our mission to meet those pressures. Because it may shift the other way around. It could shift from professional students back to arts and sciences. And then the shoe will be on the other foot. My responsibility is to the Commonwealth to provide low-cost, high-quality education for the citizens of the Commonwealth. That person is a citizen whether he or she comes here to study philosophy or to go into business.

Salt How about Continuing Education and the non-traditional students?

Bromery My feeling is that this is where we have real untapped potential. Bill Venman has worked very hard to keep the program going and to make it grow. But I think the real potential for that program has remained untapped. It also gives us visibility and provides access to people and it also, in a lot of cases, takes the education to the people. That's going to some of the trend of the future. Not everybody has to come to Amherst to the north end of North Pleasant street to get involved in education at the University. We sometimes deliver an education out there. But then when you do that, you're creating political problems because you're treading on areas that are other people's turf. The private colleges and the smaller public colleges in Springfield and Worcester are concerned. It becomes a complicated problem but not an insurmountable problem in working out the relationship of the public and private schools out there so that we don't walk into each other's territory.

Salt How can we encourage the development of this program? Many of the students in Continuing Education are among the most serious of the students on this campus. They usually work full time, pay by the credit, and commute from anywhere from Holyoke to North Adams. But a lot of times, the teachers they really come for-our galaxy of stars-aren't teaching night classes, their assistants are, who often times are younger than their students. How can we upgrade the quality of the program?

Bromery I don't think age is any criteria. Somehow or another, though, we haven't integrated it into the University system and the reward structure needs to be developed. I think that once we integrate Continuing Education into the University system in the proper way, then ideally you would not be able to see the difference in the quality of education that you get in Continuing Education from the regular University.

Salt So then the reward structure might be the key to improving the quality of education at the Continuing Education level?

Bromery I think that we're doing a lot better than we were before when Continuing Education was completely self sustaining and it'd sit out there and it would have to pay for itself. Two or three years ago we decided that we were going to pick up the administative costs and now it is beginning to move into the University system. And I think that in the future down the road, we're not going to be able to see any difference in the courses. Maybe the numbering of the courses will indicate which is a Continuing Education course but other than that, you won't be able to see any difference.

Salt Just a couple more questions before we wrap things up. What can we expect, what can we work for in the coming year?

Bromery Well, the thing I think we've got to work for is to get rid of the apartheid, the growing apartheid on campus. When I say apartheid, I mean that there is a tendency at a university that is somewhat unique to develop differences or categories of people, You know, the administrator, the faculty, and the students. And of course the people that are left out and are forgotten about are the staff. We forget them, but they're an important part of the University. The janitors, the people who plow those roads out there, mow the grass, wash the windows, fire the boilers, you know we sort of take those people for granted. And I'm very sensitive to those people. You see, my father was a janitor. He worked for a county library and he was an invisible man. They had the heat come on and warmed the people every day when they came in the door, the floors were clean, the wastebaskets were empty and you go up to somebody and ask; who do you suppose the most important person in the county library is? They'll say, oh, the librarian, or the cataloguer, or something. Well, they couldn't have catalogued or couldn't let books out if they didn't have him. So I know what they mean by the invisible man. I'm very sensitive to the staff. Very sensitive. The one thing we're really going to have to do is that we are a community, we're going to have to exist together whether we like it or not, and the better the environment on this campus, the better the quality of education. Because we can't develop a high quality of education in a hostile environment. We are a public university, a state university, and the large percentage of students that are coming here come from average homes. I would say that the kind of environment we should have here should expedite the process of education. The most important thing that takes place on this campus is the educational process. Within the contraints and the fiduciary responsibilities to the state, our responsibility as administrators is to serve the process on campus, the educational process, which involved the students, the faculty, and the staff.

Salt For a final question, what do you think is the number one issue in the world today? In the nation? On the campus?

Bromery The tremendous gap, the growing gap, between the haves and the have-nots, in terms of the economy. In our nation, we're way ahead of the rest of the world in all of the disillusionments and frustrations, because I see in this country a gap between the affluent people and those that don't have anything is even greater than anyone else. I think that the one thing that might save us is that we have had the largest growth in the economy in the middle class. Therefore, something drastic is going to have to be done. And I think we have to stop approaching our problems in a stop-gap manner. All the federal, state, and city approaches to problems have been band-aids, the old band-aid approach. How can you stop the blood without healing the wound? Somehow or another we are going to have enough foresight and a gambling spirit. That's what it really takes, a gambling spirit to try something drastic in our approach to these problems. We've got to make fundamental changes in the country in order to tackle some of the big problems. Nobody in this country should sit down and miss one meal, nobody. We have to become active-active spectators or active participants. The other thing is that we are going to have to live our lives on this planet and we're going to have to live our lives somewhere within this system. And I for one plan on spending as much time as I can in changing the system in ways that I think it needs it.

Salt Certainly, as evidenced by your ascendence, a lot of people share with you the same vision of the future.....

s duo role

nontraditional careers and adopt alternative lifestyles. But few of us have found ways to totally shake off the ghosts of our socialization; they are there to punish us every time we exercise our newfound freedom.

We can assert our right to go out alone to restaurants and theatres, but our own ingrained feelings about being alone in public and the behavior of those who assume that a woman out alone is looking for company often detract from our enjoyment.

We can demand (and sometimes obtain) fair treatment on the job, but we are likely to pay the price of alienation from our co-workers.

We can learn to express ourselves loudly and intelligently, but all too often the little voice whispering "don't be too smart or men won't like you" renders us deaf to the beauty of our newly discovered strong voices.

We can choose to remain single, childless and autonomous, but the thought of being left alone later on in life makes independence a courageous choice.

Women in America have been socialized to seek approval from others; to look for visions of themselves in others' eyes. To choose feminism is to declare, once and for all, that no one is in a better position to decide what is "right" for a woman than the woman, herself.

Despite historical victimization, young women are finding ways to exist with dignity. We can take control of our personal lives and refuse to be further victimized. We can work collectively to end the double bind; to make feminist way of life the "traditional" lifestyle for future generations of women in America.

But as long as we must invest energy into dealing with the "deviant" label society slaps on women who choose to live as full human beings, our own liberation will be incomplete.

Breaking the Ice

By PETER GOONAN

The Five-College bus pulled up in front of my solitary figure at Mount Holyoke College at precisely 8:13 a.m. No problem there, except that it was the 7:15 bus, precisely 58 minutes late. Standing in two degree weather (minus 46 degrees windchill) can only be compared to standing naked inside a popsicle. The bus driver was kind enough to wait three seconds for me to board.

The sight of an eight-inch long icicle breaking off from my right nostril brought on hysterics from the other passengers.

"Hey, where are your shoes?" asked one.

"They froze to the sidewalk," I replied through purple lips.

The bus driver, a derelict with bloodshot eyes and trembling hands, asked if there was anyone on the bus who knew how to drive one, because he was experiencing double vision. I quickly moved to the back, where I figured I'd be safest if we hit "two" trees.

And then I saw her. She was the most beautiful girl I ever saw on the 7:15 bus. Not many people are beautiful at 7:15 in the morning, even when it's really 8;14. I flashed her a chattering smile, the warm air from the heater instantly cracking three teeth.

She blushed and turned her head towards the window.

It's an unspoken rule that you don't speak to strangers on the 7:15 bus. They're trying to sleep. But I slithered over next to her anyways. We looked at each other, and then looked away, embarrassed. Five minutes passed.

What should I say to her, I asked myself. Maybe tell her my name, and that I go to UMass. I cleared my throat and spoke.

"My name is UMass."

Sensing a mistake, I turned away. Soon I regained confidence.

"I... I... I'm a Journalism Major. I hope to be a newspaper boy when I grow up."

Still no answer. Boy, was she shy. I tried again.

"I take the bus everyday because it's free. How about you?... Actually my car couldn't make it all the way to UMass. It'd have a cardiac arrest half way!"

I laughed. She didn't.

"I don't mind breathing carbon monoxide," I added. "It hasn't affected my mind. And it doesn't bother me when the bus hits a twig or stone in the road, causing the bus to take a bounce, and my pen to make a blue streak across my homework."

Her head remained turned to the window.

"You don't talk much," I said to the goddess seated next to me. "But you sure listen good."

She answered with a snore.

Skiing - the ultimate sport

kevin knobloch

My introduction to downhill skiing came but two years ago on a tiny hill in a town on Boston's North Shore and I have been in love with steep inclines since. Subsequently, I have discovered skiing would be the ultimate sport, assuming price wasn't a factor, if the ski resort regular could somehow disappear. These annoying groupies feign virtual ownership of the lodge, lifts and slopes, while making life miserable for those adventurous enough to learn the sport.

Skiers, as a group I found out, are quite boorish. Among such company, it is apparently acceptable to discard one's manners the minute the boots are fastened. More than once, while on the slopes, a speed demon clad in a brightly colored vinyl ski-jacket has rudely buzzed past the lift line, cutting into a spot at the front, only to ascend the mountain for yet another rowdy trip down.

A most characteristic scene occurs when a novice is unlucky enough to have an accident in full view of those riding the chair lift. At least half of the couples sitting above in the dangling chairs, regardless of their own skiing proficiency, led out loud guffaws, while the more shy segment turn and quietly snicker. The unfortunate victim receives relief from such open crudeness only when the witnesses are carried away by the churning lift motors.

Hard-core skiers are congenial enough, even if you get stuck on a long chair-lift ride with one. However, the conversation is awkwardly limited to topics such as the snow conditions further north or the latest in sensuous long underwear. I recently surprised one unsuspecting chairmate by bringing Iranian politics into our discussion of skiing injuries. Whether or not he heard me, I'm still not sure, but I found my comments being ignored and a potentially charming debate remaining in its dormant state. My partner simply continued hypothesizing what would happen to our heads if the lift mechanism broke and we plunged to the snow and ice-packed earth below.

There always seems to be at least one expert on the intermediate trail, or an intermediate on the novice slope, causing mayhem for those who spent half the morning summoning the courage to allow the T-bar to grab their buttocks and escort them to the top. Speed in skiing, of course, is half the fun, but it can be most unruly when put on the same slope with the slow snowplow turns of an over-rigid beginner.

To reverse the situation and put a beginner on an expert slope would be more foolish than rude. While still a "bunny", I inadvertently started down an expert slope at Jiminy Peak in the Berkshires one icy evening. What followed seemed to please the regulars who hung out on this cliff and I received a warm round of applause for my fall down the mountain.

It was during those beginner years that I first witnessed the upsetting scene in which a 5-year-old Jean-Claude zooms past a skier five times his age. As the adults shakily descend the ice patches in a prone position, it is disconcerting for a pint-sized professional to speed by. Truly understanding parents who are experienced skiers would attach a harness to their child, thereby eliminating this embarrassment.

The absolute conformity of the ski crowd is remarkable. The green, blue and orange waist-length parkas combined with those humorous looking three pointed ski-hats make any large group of skiers standing together look like an advertisement for Fruit of the Loom underwear. Modern equipment needs little comment, except that I'm consistently amazed at the ability of most skiers to own the latest in up-to-date gear, while I still use skis that were brand-new in 1959.

And I could have sworn that I have received a few chuckles from downhill veterans as I waded through the moguls wearing my tattered fall jacket lined with my favorite hooded sweatshirt. If nostalgia was in vogue on the slopes, instead of the current emphasis on sleekness, my wooded poles with leather grips would be the hit of the season.

But despite such snobbish treatment at the hands of the "in" ski crowd, I shall not be deterred from playing on the snow covered trails of Maine, New Hampshire and the Berkshires. After all, it's so much fun!

Hoopwomen hit road to battle Providence

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team will ber shooting for its third straight win tonight when it travels to Providence College for a 6 p.m. game against the Friars.

The Minutewomen, 11-4 and ranked second in New England in the latest coaches' poll, will be hoping to gain a win over Providence, which is 8-3 and rated third in New England.

Both teams trail perennial power Southern Connecticut in the ratings.

"It's gonna be a heckuva game," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "If we play like we did last night, we should win."

UMass defeated Springfield, 67-54, Tuesday night at the Cage, which Ozdarski said was one of the Minutewomen's better efforts this season.

"The kids played good ball," she added. "It was a pleasing win, and the players feel very satisfied."

Ozdarski saw the Friars play Old Dominion, one of the better teams in the nation, and picked up some of their strategy.

"They play a 2-3 zone," she reported. "As a result, we'll have to work our offense against a zone.

"We'll use full-court pressure," she added. "They're a tall team, and hopefully we'll pressure them into committing some errors."

Providence's leading scorer is Lynn Sheedy, who averages 12 points a game. The 5-6 guard also tops the Friars in assists.

"She's probably their best ballplayer," Ozdarski said. "She controls the offense, drives well, and moves without the ball."

Mary Ellen Buchanan, a 6-1 center, hits for 11 points a game and also is tied for the team lead in rebounds with nine per outing. Marianne McCoy, a 5-11 forward, also pulls down nine boards and pops in 10 points a game.

Carmen Ross, a 5-10 forward, and 5-8 guard Paulette Hassett (younger sister of former Friar and current Seattle Super Sonic star Joe Hassett) round out the starting lineup.

Providence most recently defeated Boston College. The Friars also count wins over Springfield, UConn, Bridgewater State, and Northeastern among their total.

Providence suffered a 20-point loss to Old Dominion in a holiday tournament earlier this season.

The Friars' coach is Tim Gilbride, currently in his second year at the Providence helm.

The game tonight marks the last away contest the Minutewomen will play until Feb. 28, when UMass plays Southern Connecticut in its last regular season game.

Ozdarski plans on making no changes in her starting lineup, which meshed together so effectively against Springfield.

"That was a sweet win," Ozdarski the coach said, referring again to the Minutewomen's triumph over the Chiefs. "They put 100 per cent into the game."

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2 — Born today, you show an air of timidity that encourages others to parent you. Strangers too find themselves drawn to you in a motherly or fatherly way and wish to assist you. What may not be clear is what that aid should entail. You may find it constraining to be surrounded by people who refuse to let you work on your own. You may become rude at times in trying to exert your independence while everything is discouraging it.

You have tremendous vitality, though you do not impress others with your energy and stamina. Others are often surprised by your achievements; your image is of langorous activity, not forward motion. The fact that you have the kind of determined vitality that enables you to reach goals without apparent effort is a constant source of wonder to others.

You are eager for responsibility and authority. Unfortunately you do not strike your seniors as having the necessary attributes for the position you want. You will have to achieve on your own at first; then those who can make the assignments you wish will be happy to do so. In short, you must prove your mettle before being assigned a test of it: a paradox, but not an impossibility.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Trust may cause introspection today. You will succeed with a new responsibility.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – Determination makes all the difference. Relax; begin over if you must; you have time.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- Professional success may surprise you, but it comes with hard work. Tell another your story.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Partnerships should flourish. Don't anticipate failure; work toward success.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Don't let trivialities take time necessary for a new phase of an old project.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – There is danger early today. You can avoid it by refusing to progress, but you may regret doing so.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Plan your entrance into a new social field. Be subtle, not overbearing.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – Your business or another's takes more time than you planned; shelve career matters for a while.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – Management troubles you thought over return this morning. Consult others involved.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – Practicality guarantees success. Don't let fancy overwhelm reason and intellect.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) – Your excitable nature is contagious today, especially to the young. Try to check fears.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Humanitarian efforts are appreciated. Do what you can for those less well off; time repays you well.

Swimmen take Tufts

The UMass swim team improved its record to 3-1, upsetting a highly regarded Tufts squad yesterday at Boyden Pool 58-55.

Minuteman coach Bei Melamed was especially pleased with the outcome, exclaiming, "the best team didn't necessarily win. But, we came in well prepared and caught them by surprise."

UMass began the meet with an eye opening performance in the 400 yard medley relay, exploding off the block in the school record time of 3:44:7. This was the first of many outstanding efforts for the Minutemen.

Russ Yarworth, who won the 200 yard individual medley, also captured the 200 yard butterfly in another school record time of 2:01:7. Yarworth currently holds six individual UMass records, and is the co-holder of another Relay record. Despite Yarworth's heroics the meet was in doubt until UMass' Fulford won the 200 yard breaststroke equalling a school mark of 2:15:6, and improving his personal best time by eight seconds. Fulfords clutch win allowed the diving duo of Antonino and Anthony, who finished first and second respectively, to ensure the teams triumph.

Even taking into account all the record times, the highlight of the meet came in the 500 yard freestyle. The grueling 20 lap race was decided by the touch of a hand as UMass' Tyler made a tremendous come-from-behind bid to catch the Jumbos 500 yard specialist. With a lap to go Tyler was a full length in 2nd but ended up battling to the wire. Though he eventually edged out it seemingly created the inspiration the team needed to win.

Women swimmers romp

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Led by many double victories, personal best performances, and a team-record setting performance by Deb Schwartz, the UMass women's swim team swamped Bridgewater yesterday, 112-19 in a home meet at NOPE.

UMass led throughout the entire meet, taking first place in every event.

Schwartz's record came in the 200 yard freestyle, which she won in 2:04, knocking .7 second off the previous record. That time, her personal best, also qualifies her for the Easterns which will be held March 3-5 at Penn State. Schwartz also won the 100 yard backstroke, swimming it for the first time this vear. with a time of 1:10.2.

Other double victors last night were Kathy Jurcik, Lise Hembrough, and Nancy Wang.

Special Olympics

This Saturday, February 4th from 8:30 to noon, 250 athletes from western Massachusetts will converge on Boyden Gym to participate in State Run, Shoot, and Dribble meet.

The meet will last four quarters and in each section, each athlete will compete in dribbling, foul and perimeter type shooting events and a special bonus shot section. Athletes are broken down into age and ability levels.

Athletes from Monson, Belchertown, Wrentham, Springfield, Tauton, and Shrewsbury will compete in the meet put on by the Massachusetts Special Olympics Association.

Sports Notices

REMINDER — Racquetball entries are due in the Intramural Office (Boyden) by February 2nd.

Wrestling entries are due in the Intramural Office by February 2nd.

Water Polo — There will be a meeting followed by practice for anyone interested in playing intercollegiate water polo this spring, Thursday night at 6:00 p.m. at Boyden pool. No experience necessary. There will be both men's and women's teams. Any questions call Bill at 549-0779 or Bob at 549-2662.

Scuba Club goes South

For UMass and the 5 college community there are yet more scuba opportunities at the university this spring. The lid has been opened on enrollment in basic scuba courses so that those who want it should now be able to get it.

Since UMass Scuba merged with Holyoke Underwater Supply, more equipment is now available for instruction and it is possible to serve more people. Cost is $87 for 10 weeks of instructing leading to two GPE credits and NAUI certification.

Interested? Come to the first meeting of the class you wish to attend — Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday at 7:00 — Curry Hicks Pool starting next week February 6. You must demonstrate swimming proficiency so bring a swimsuit and towel and be ready to swim.

The hot news is that a sport scuba course is being offered in Key Largo, Florida during spring vacation. $155 buys one week of outrageous diving in sunny, Carribean blue water as well as advanced instruction, sport diver certification and a potential of two GPE credits.

The course is restricted to certified divers, however, if you are a non-diver and want to get certified and dive in Florida, all this semester, you can enroll in the Wednesday night basic class and plan on making your open water dives in the Florida Keys.

The sport diving course is informative, challenging and refreshing. It is a great way to get some solid, advanced dive training, to break out of the winter blahs and to earn credits at the same time. # SoConn pins loss on Matmen

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

Southern Connecticut State College took a heartbreaking 20-16 meet from the hands of the UMass wrestling team last night before a packed house at Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The Minutemen jumped out to a 13-6 lead after six matched, but SConn, ranked second in New England, took three out of the four final bouts for the eventual win.

Freshman grappler Dana Rasmussen started the UMass scoring with an 11-9 victory at 118 pounds, putting the Minutemen out in front 3-0. In what must be one of the most memorable matches in the young grappler's career, Raz picked up three points with just two seconds remaining in the contest to defeat a frustrated John Rocco.

In the second match it was SoConn.'s turn to win a seat-squirmer as their 126 pound wrestler, Percy Watson, defeated Tony Perry 3-1 to tie the team score.

Larry Otsuka won 3-1 at 134 pounds, but UMass lost a 12-7 tilt at 142 pounds. Minutemen wrestler Charley Rigoglioso had an early lead in the match, but the New Jersey freshman fell victim to recurring cramp attacks and was barely able to finish the match.

Wrestling at 150 pounds co-captain Timmy Fallon bombarded his opponent 12-3, as SoConn.'s Bryan Uvena spent more time stalling and crawling for the sidelines than wrestling.

The Minutemen pulled out to a 13-6 lead when Monty Payette broke a tie score with 37 seconds left in the match; taking down Cliff Verron for a 7-5 triumph.

Then Southern Connecticut went to work.

Don Curry shut out Fred Rheault at 167 pounds, and former New England champion Sean Bilodeau pinned Bob Radiwitz at 177 pounds to give SoConn. a lead that they were not to relinquish.

In the 190 weight class Bob Clark valiantly tried to put UMass back into the contest but he fell short 7-1, and SoConn., with a 20-13 lead, clinched the meet.

However, heavyweight John Allen was in no mood for losing. Allen bested Jim Kavaliauskas 8-2 for three team points, putting the final score at 20-16.

The Minutemen also hosted Union College last night, as part of a scheduled tri-meet. In the first meet of the evening, SoConn. pounded Union College.

At press time, UMass had a lead over Union College after three matches.

Hoopmen in shootout before sellout crowd

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Ok, folks, it's time again for the Holy Cross -UMass war and talk of who should be rated number one in New England.

Tonight, at 7:30, at HOly Cross, the (15-3) Crusaders take on the (9-5) Minutemen, just four days after defeating them 76-63 for the Colonial Classic title.

A few weeks ago, Holy Cross was riding high, ranked somewhere in the top 15 since the start of the season, but suddenly they met Providence and Providence blew them off (90-64). A few days later Fairfield dismantled the Crusaders 123-103, and then they had to struggle just to beat Boston College 82-76.

But since weeks ago, the Crusaders came back on the track, easily defeating UConn 78-63 and then defeating UMass just last Saturday.

However, the consensus around the UMass team is that Saturday's loss by 13 points was not a blowout and tonight's contest won't be an easy victory for either team.

"We were beaten by a better team, Saturday, but that doesn't mean Holy Cross is a better team than we are overall," said UMass coach Jack Leaman.

"There isn't too much of a difference, in overall talent, said UMass center Mark Haymore. "Holy Cross plays very much a fundamental team and are very opportunistic."

Leaman said the critical factor in Saturday's win was the overall quickness of the Crusader frontcourt namely Chris Potter, Mike Vicens, and Charlie Browne.

"For four years, Potter and Vicens have been our achilles heal," Leaman said. "They have always been a thorn in the side and for four days, we have been practicing on working against them. In order to win, it's not Ronnie Perry we have to worry about but those two."

Potter, 6-8 senior forward, scored 16 points but had nine rebounds, shot 7-11 from the floor and a ten assists. Vicens, his 6-9 counterpart scored 14, rebounded six times, and had five assists.

The guard who everybody in New England has been raving about, Ron Perry, was not too much of a factor in the last game. UMass's Alex Eldridge andDerick Claiborne held him to 11 points as the 6-2 Cruasder guard sho 5-18 from the floor.

"There's no doubt that Alex and Derick can control Holy Cross's backcourt but we have to get better defense on their forwards and center," said Leaman.

Leaman said that forward-oriented teams have given the 9-5 Minutemen trouble all year, citing examples of previous defeats to Rutgers, UConn, Villanova, and Holy Cross.

"We get into foul trouble playing against those kinds of teams that might be overall quicker in the forward position. What we want to do is to stop committing so many unnecessary fouls and to be in a better position for rebounding," he said.

"The Minutemen, winners of only one game in the month of January are anxiously awaiting the return to the Cage this coming Saturday night against West Virginia.

"We've coming off a very hard intersession and overall we never played all that bad. We played several tough teams, four of which were, or in my opinion will be, in the top 20 and we held in there quite well," said Leaman.

But tonight will be no picnic for the Minutemen if they expect any fan support. "Holy Cross is an extremely hard place to play because in many ways it's like the Cage. Their fan support helps them tremendously," said Mike Pyatt.

"I expect the refs not to be on our side tonight. It might be even worse than Boston," said Haymore. I think all that talk about Holy Cross in the top 20 affects some ref's decision."

Second season starts now

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The question basketball fans are asking as they are coming back from the intersession break is "what is the matter with UMass? How could they lose to UConn, and how could they come so close to Providence, but yet so far from defeating Holy Cross?"

At the season's midpoint, it's time to review this team — its strengths, weaknesses, personnel, and outlook for the rest of the season.

First off, this is not an easy team to predict. There is no doubt that it is a team loaded with talented, proven ballplayers. Even so, no one would have predicted this team would go undefeated for the month of December with an 8-0 record.

No one, again, would have predicted they would come so close to Providence College, losing 70-69 in the last seconds. But, on the other hand, no one would have said UMass would lose to a dreadful UConn team, or fail to Holy Cross by 13 points. There is no way that a betting man could make a living from UMass basketball. So what gives?

Team captain Claiborne put it best. "Sometimes we give away garbage points and it hurts us. Instead of other teams beating us, we beat ourselves."

At times, the starting five of Mike Pyatt, Len Kohlhaas, Mark Haymore, Derick Claiborne, and Alex Eldridge can look awesome; scoring points against any defense and likewise looking quite impressive on defense themselves. But at other times they can look disorganized, easy to defend against, and error prone.

Pyatt (15.8) and Claiborne (9.6) are the team's best outside shooters. Haymore, the center, is absolutely immense around the basket. Kohlhaas, despite what the critics say is a good shooter, and for a five game stretch in late December averaged 13 points and 12 rebounds a game. Eldridge, although not the best jump shooter on the team, has the uncanny ability to control a game and pass out assists, and still averages 10 points per contest.

The problem I see with the offense, though, is that sometimes the whole unit stands around, and doesn't make use of its varied talents. It's an easy offense to defend against because if the shooters are not hitting at the perimeters, the defensive man gets the rebound, and the offensive rebounding doesn't exist at all.

I think the team could benefit more from a running, fastbreak offense — an offense that makes more use out of Haymore and Claiborne. Sometimes Haymore goes stretches of seven or eight minutes before he sees the ball. The same goes for Claiborne. Yes, the team needs the points from Eldridge, but if Claiborne can provide the offense from the outside, the offense will flow that much better.

The second best strength for the Minutemen is the bench. The best move Coach Jack Leaman made all intersession break was to start Billy Morrison at guard against Providence. In ten minutes of play, Morrison scored six points, gave out two assists, and rebounded three times. He is definitely a better shooter than Eldridge and should be given more playing time when the need for an outside shooting guard arises.

The team also would benefit if Eric Williams got more playing time. Williams is a dependable, smart, shooting forward, who almost single handedly won the Providence game as he entered that game for the first time in the closing minutes, and tossed in a key jumper and assisted on the Haymore hoop giving the Minutemen the lead with 27 seconds to play before Providence won it.

The single biggest defect of this team is not the defense, but the rebounding. The Minutemen have proved they can stop great shooters from Providence, Holy Cross, and UConn but have still been beaten by them. The reason: they have not rebounded the way they should.

There are three reasons for this. One, Haymore and Kohlhaas have each fouled out of four games and have been in danger in many more. Against a Providence, Holy Cross, and Rutgers it's easy for opponents to rebound against a UMass frontcourt of 6-7, 6-6, 6-5.

Secondly, the Minutemen do not sustain the needed concentration to effectively box out its opponents. What killed them against Holy Cross was giving up the offensive boards, giving the opponents, two, three attempts at the basket.

Last but not least is that too many substitutes have killed UMass. UConn beat them without Joey Whelton and Holy Cross deeply hurt the UM defense with reserve Charlie Brown scoring ten points, UMass shut off Providence's super guard Dwight Williams in the second half, allowing him two points. But unfortunately, his two points was the game-winner.

The Minutemen, now at 9-5, start the second stage of the season tonight against the Crusaders of Holy Cross. From that point on, the Minutemen play six out of the next 11 at home. A win tonight would be unbelievable. But more realistic, what's needed for the Minutemen is "some home cooking."

It's not a question of Jack Leaman needing more talent but a matter of much more needed consistency, and concentration from the players. An NCAA berth is not out of the question but it's going to take an awful lot of hard work and some "fast" breaks to do it.

SGA opposes fee

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Student leaders are strongly opposed to an administration proposal to fund the UMass bus service by placing a $5.00 semester fee on student bills. Student government officials will meet with the Administration on Tuesday to negotiate on the means of funding the bus service.

Sixty-five per cent of the bus service operation costs are from Federal and state monies granted to the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority. Thirty-five per cent is from UMass and surrounding towns.

The fee-based proposal would create a student fee to pay for 85 per cent of the UMass share. The remaining 15 per cent would be from parking office funds.

The fee based proposal is an option to the original plan. Under the original plan the 85 per cent came from student government monies while the remaining 15 per cent would still be from the parking system. Student government officials were opposed to this plan. They claim that student monies in parking fees contribute to the parking fund. This plan would mean students would also be paying a portion of the 15 per cent parking share.

The response by student government officials to the fee proposal was largely negative. "There is no place for student input," said student treasurer Priscilla West.

Senator Alfred Drewes said, "It would be Whitmore's bus service but the students would have to pay for it."

"They can just ignore anything we say," said Student Senate Rents and Fees Chairman Bob Dion. Dion added a fee would be an advantage since it would "provide a firm basis of fudning" for buses in the future."

West said that the student government-supported plan would also provide this base. The student government plan calls for a 70-30 ratio. The 70 per cent would be student government funds. The 30 per cent would be from the parking system.

Student government officials estimate that 15 per cent of this money is student money and the other half is non-student money. The students' 15 per cent with the other 70 per cent would equal the same 85 per cent in the original plan.

Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance James L. McBee said the fee proposal would not change the control of the buses. "Control of operations would stay as it is now," said McBee.

Student government co-President Jon A. Hite said "We want to come to an agreement yesterday." He added, "we want to negotiate. We don't want to negotiate when we have the threat of a fee hanging over our heads." Hite said, "If Jim McBee wants a fight we'll be more than happy to give it to him ... They're trying to sleaze us."

"It's like negotiating for a wage," Hite added. "They offer $4. We refuse, asking for five. They come back and offer $3.50.

Officials look at tax proposal

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Amherst town officials are cautiously reviewing a tax proposal which would eliminate security deposits for persons living in rental housing and would ask tenants to aid in payment of water, sewerage and property taxes.

Instead of tenants paying the traditional security deposit to cover damages or non-payment, the proposal suggests that tenants be considered separate entities for tax collection. They would be asked to provide a year's tax payment prior to rental of a house or apartment.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward yesterday stressed that because the proposal has no precedent in the town, the review is still at a "very early stage" and said the town hall staff has just begun investigation into possible legal and administrative implications.

Besides trying to identify other communities involved in similar programs for comparative analysis, Hayward said the staff will also review similar alternatives.

"The administrative implications could be dramatic," he said.

The proposal was presented to the town last week by Amherst realtor Raymond W.J. Campbell, who since January 1 has asked his tenants to pay the first month's rent before moving in, plus a year's tax payment (18 per cent of the rent) and a year's water and sewer charges (two per cent).

After making the initial pre-rental payments tenants are then given a reduction in rent for an equivalent amount for each month.

For example: If rent is $300 per month, or $3,600 a year, the combined tax payment would be 20 per cent, or $720, payable before occupancy. The tenant's rent, after the payment, would be reduced to $240 per month.

The once-a-year collection would be paid directly to the tax collector and credited to the property owner.

Campbell yesterday said since Jan. 1 he has collected over $2,000 in taxes, which the town has so far refused to accept.

Sending tenants' checks to the town without first depositing them in a private bank account eliminates unnecessary bookkeeping for the owner and provides a more accurate view of profits, Campbell says.

Because a substantial part of rent now goes for the payment of real estate taxes, Campbell said under the new system tenants now have some legal justification to deduct this charge from their income taxes.

At present, owners may deduct property taxes, while tenants, lacking a specific figure in dollars, may not. Although an Internal Revenue Service ruling would be required for deduction by tenants, Campbell said the plan provides some justification for the request.

Should the proposal be adopted as town policy in the future, all security deposits — generally one to tow months rent in advance — would be eliminated.

Four dorms run on own

By HERB BRODY
Collegian Staff

About 1000 UMass students are living in dorms that have no heads of residence, but floor counselors in these dorms say things seem to be running fairly smoothly. The dorms without heads of residence are Brown in Sylvan Area, Mary Lyon in Northeast, and both the North and South sections of Van Meter in Central.

The duties of the heads of residence have been assumed by floor counselors, heads of residence from neighboring dorms, and residential area administrators.

"We're putting in a lot of hours, doing maintenance jobs that heads of residence usually take care of," said Mary Lyon floor counselor Donna Rhodes. This is the second consecutive semester the dorm has opened without a head.

The situation in Van Meter North was "a bit hectic at first," according to counselor Kathy Hakes. "This was a really heavy thing to lay on us, especially since we didn't know about it until two days before we got here."

The counselors will probably receive no extra pay for their extra work, according to Central Area Assistant Director Joe Battista. Floor counselors are paid $17.49 a week, and must pay their own room and board.

All four dorms can expect to have a new head of residence by February 19, according to Anne Hardy of the Community Development Center. Interviews with 23 candidates will be held the weekend of February 10-12, and job offers may be made that Sunday evening. Salary for a head of residence is about $6600 a year, Hardy added.

The terms of the contract stipulate that the new heads of residence move into their dorms by Sunday, February 19.

The reason for the departure of the four heads of residence are largely unknown. Laura MacDonald, former head at Van Meter North, apparently bought a house that she and her family had to move into immediately; according to counselor Kathy Hakes, MacDonald had originally planned not to move out until after this semester ended.

Nina D'Aminco of Brown and Ellen Mulato of Mary Lyon both departed without making public their reasons for doing so. The Northeast-Sylvan Area officials said only that they left for "personal and professional reasons."

Both the Central Area administration and dorm floor counselors were unwilling to comment on the resignation of Elizabeth Williams as Van Meter South head of residence. Williams last year was involved in disputes with floor counselors and other dorm residents in her first two semesters as head of residence.

State probes own staff

BOSTON [AP] — A legislative probe of a state consulting contract could eventually zero in on the committee's own staff and its failure to issue a report on the same topic in 1973.

The Committee on Post Audit and Oversight is once again investigating a contract held by the New York consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto. The firm was paid some $6 million by the state to oversee construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus.

But the committee also wants to know what became of a similar study begun in 1973.

"We're not going to avoid that issue," said Rep. Gerald M. Cohen, D-Andover, who heads the subcommittee assigned to the MBM investigation. "We're going to follow up on everything contained in those earlier papers, and we're going to make a judgment on whether a report should have been issued."

The committee will look into just how the work of MBM and payments to the firm were supervised by the state Bureau of Building Construction and why the cost-plus contract was written the way it was.

The committee will hold a hearing Tuesday and is expected to interview at that time Walter Poitrast, director of the BBC.

Cohen confirmed that the work done in 1973 by an auditor employed by the committee found that some $457,000 in change orders were "questionable." He said that doesn't, however, mean that the $457,000 total was an overpayment. It could be that any actual overpayment might have involved a much smaller dollar figure, he added.

Cohen maintains that there was no actual draft report prepared on the subject.

"We had a man here in 1973 who was working on the BBC," Cohen said. "He wrote up a lot of what he found, but there was never a report. It was just his work product.

"In fact, now we're trying to return to 1973 and look at everything," he added.

The work was done by Joseph Davey, a former member of the state auditor's office and an investigator for the committee. Some sources close to the committee insist Davey was fired after he made his report to staff director William Finnegan.

Weather

Clear and mostly sunny today and tomorrow with high temperatures 15-20. Lows tonight 0-10 below. Zero chance of precipitation tonight and tomorrow.

A typical way to relieve the tensions that go along with starting a new semester. (Staff photo by Dan Vullemier)

Snow funds increased

By PAUL GILROY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The city council here last night approved a $150,000 appropriation for police overtime and $17,000 in additional funds for the snow removal budget.

The council also approved a request by New England Telephone to relocate a telephone pole on Meadow Street, but tabled until Feb. 16 action on real estate assessments.

Mayor Harry S. Chapman Jr. reappointed fire chief James C. Murray, who will retire in July. Chapman also appointed three police officiers as sergeants and named members to a commission.

The original allocation for the snow removal budget in this fiscal year was $112,000, but the snow storms last month ate up most of the funds.

Murray announced his July retirement after disagreements between him and Chapman, who is serving his first term as mayor, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

The 62-year old Murray has been chief since 1969 and a member of the fire department since 1943. The mayor appoints a fire chief every January with the approval of the city council.

The Gazette reported that Murray was supported by several city councelors during the dispute with Chapman. The Gazette also reported that Chapman had given Murry three choices: retire, be demoted or be fired.

Chapman appointed two acting police sergeants to permanant positions. Leonard Helems and William Arnold were named sergeants.

Lowell murder

LOWELL. [UPI] — Lowell police yesterday attempted to identify an apparent murder victim whose body was found about 6:30 a.m. with a bullet wound in the throat.

Police said the body, a white male, was found partly covered with newspapers near the intersection of Tanner and Hale Streets. The victim's hands were tied behind his back and his feet were partially bound.

Police received a call from a taxi driver who noticed the body at dawn. An autopsy was performed last night to determine cause of death.

Allen has not named replacement

Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen yesterday said he has not named a replacement for former Associate Provost David C. Bischoff, who resigned Tuesday.

Allen said he will not make an appointment right away, but will wait to see what if any other vacancies develop.

Allen said he would like to fill vacancies on a "pattern basis."

"I want to make a systematic rather than a piece-meal replacement of staff," he said.

Allen said Bischoff's resignation was normal procedure when new appointments were made.

Bischoff's resignation followed the appointment of Allen as acting Provost after Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery fired former Provost Paul L. Puryear last month.

Vere Chappell, the only other permanent associate provost, is on sabbatical leave in Paris, this semester.

Allen said he expects to be putting in some long days and nights without an associate provost.

Bus lines changed

Western Mass. Bus Lines has proposed to alter bus routes in the Northampton-Amhers, enabling passengers to remain on the same bus between the two towns instead of making a change in Northampton, has been suggested. A new bus run will be added from Northampton to Amherst leaving the city about 7 a.m. in order to make commuting to jobs easier.

The company is also proposing to eliminate the two-hour gaps by instating a one-hour bus run schedule between the two communities.

Pioneer Valley Transportation Authority officials will decide on these changes on a scheduled hearing next Thursday.

The route changes are the first stage of an effort by bus company officials and the planning commission to improve bus service in the area.

Book exchange operating in Student Union

Over 400 books have been collected for the textbook exchange operating in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. Today is the last day for owners to bring books for the exchange, and the sale continues until Feb. 10.

The exchange, managed by the service sorority Gamma Sigma Sigma, allows students to sell their used books without being directly involved. Members of the service sorority sell the books at the price requested by the owners with a small service charge to pay for operating costs.

The Service sorority then holds the sales money for the original owner. Books not sold are returned to the owners with no service charge.

State-wide consortium saves money

State colleges and universities in Massachusetts have been purchasing their supplies at bargain prices and saving as much as $400,000 a year because of the year-old Massachusetts Higher Education Consortium, an idea originated by a UMass administrator.

The consortium is a cooperative effort of the purchasing departments of the 34 state colleges, community colleges and universities to combine their purchasing powers in order to gain large discounts for commonly — used items from the businesses which supply their needs.

UMass is already involved in a Five College Buyers Consortium and Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, and Hampshire colleges are involved in the state-wide organization.

The idea for a state wide consortium was originated by Jake Bishop, director of procurement for the University and contracts coordinator for the consortium.

Activities slated for women's week

Holly Near will perform at the opening concert for International Women's Week March 5-11, in the Fine Arts Center on March 5. The singer-songwriter is known for her humanistic, consciousness-raising lyrics. Near's last appearance at UMass on September 30, 1976 was a sell-out. The Union Program Council is sponsoring the concert.

Wilma Rudolph will make the keynote address for IWW in the Student Union Ballroom on March 6. Rudolph was the winner of three gold medals in the 1960 Olympics.

Other speakers for the week include Paula Gold on March 7 and Nora Ephron on March 8. God is the Assistant Attorney General in Charge in Consumer Affairs for the State of Massachusetts. Ephron is the author of "Wallflower at the Orgy and Crazy Salad."

The coordinating committee for IWW has also announced the The Little Flags Theatre will perform "The Furies of Mother Jones" in the Student Union Ballroom on March 7. Bernice Reagon and Sweet Honey in the Rock will close IWW with a concert in the Fine Arts Center on March 11.

IWW will also include workshops dealing with subjects such as rape, women in work, sterilization abuse and self-defense. The IWW coordinating committee has slated 40 workshops already, but they are still looking for more. Last year during IWW over 100 workshops were held.

There will be a meeting for IWW on February 6 at 9:00 in room 903 of the Campus Center. Committees will be formed to work on publicity, child care, fund raising and workshops.

Employees sue Westfield Evening News

WESTFIELD — Five former staff members of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian are among seven employees suing the Westfield Evening News for alleged violations of the state labor laws by refusing to pay overtime to reporters and photographers.

The suit filed last December in the Hampden Superior Court in Springfield seeks "approximately $35,000 in unpaid overtime, an equal amount in damages and the cost of legal fees," according to Michael E. O'Connell of Westfield, an attorney for the plaintiffs.

O'Connell said the final payment sought could rise to $90,000.

O'Connell and Atty. William J. Coulter are representing reporters Peter C. Swanson, Kevin Claffey, James J. Fitzpatrick, and Robert Ferri Jr., photographer James A. Higgins and former reporters Galen M. LaFrancis and Steven G. Tripoli. LaFrancis and Tripoli have both left the newspaper.

The complaint named the Westfield News Advertiser Inc., publisher of the paper, as the defendant. The Washington Star last year bought the paper from John Nash.

The suit alleges the company "willfully failed to compensate the plaintiffs" for any overtime work beyond 40 hours per week, and the plaintiffs worked "in excess of 40 hours a week each and every week since the date of hire."

Coulter said last night the suit is in the process of being moved to the Federal District Court in Boston, an option of the newspaper's lawyers since the suit was filed under both state and federal statutes.

According to a souuce at the newspaper, the suit was filed after new management allegedly went back on a promise to pay for overtime at a rate of time and a half.

The source also said that following a recent in-house election, staff members are now free to choose between joining the existing Retail Clerks Union or remaining non-union.

"Hell," the source said, "Six of the seven plaintiffs were in the union, and the union never did anything for them."

The source also said that one of the plaintiffs was fired last month in what appeared to be a suit-related act, but was then rehired to his position when he contested the firing.

Video variety show planned

The Student Video Project plans to broadcast a new variety show in two weeks.

The "UMass Variety Show", will be a half hour production consisting of short skits, singing, interviews, and satirical commercials.

The video project has a new studio, and new facilities in the former commuter lounge in the basement of the Student Union. Producer and Director Ed Guiliani, a math major, said the show uses a three camera format and has the benefit of a sound proof studio.

The video project is now interviewing people for positions on the show and plans to begin taping sessions in about two weeks, according to Guiliani. Two to three credits may be available for members of the project.

Women workers organize

12 to 1 is an organization of UMass women office workers. It began as a group of clericals meeting over lunch to discuss job-related problems and has grown to a support and action group with a membership of several hundred.

"12 to 1 is for staff women on campus to get together and discuss problems on their jobs and how to improve their job situations. Among other things, it provides help for women interested in upgrading and achieving professional status," said Jane Fleishman, a member of the 12 to 1 committee.

The primary issues of concern for the several hundred 12 to 1 members are working conditions, job classifications, wages, promotional opportunities and sex discrimination, according to a 12 to 1 brochure.

12 to 1, located in Goodell Hall, meets weekly. Women interested in participating should watch the Collegian for time and location of meetings this semester.

The group is a take-off from 9 to 5, a Boston clerical group, and is a part of a large number of other working women's groups across the country.

The results of a questionnaire, devised by the staff to measure personal job experiences and distributed to campus clerical workers last fall, will be published in the spring.

12 to 1 will hold a public forum on affirmative action involvement on campus Feb. 8.

"Representatives from the Department of Labor who are involved in enforcing UMass affirmative action guidelined will e there, and we will hear testimonies from workers on campus," said Fleishman.

"We want to continue our involvement and see if the University lives up to its promises on affirmative action," said Dottie Heyden, another committee member.

"We plan to hold a conference in the spring for women office workers and arrange for several speakers and workshops."

Health Services offers workshops

University Health Services is currently offering women's health workshops to dormitory and campus groups. The workshops cover a number of topics including menstruation, contraception, and pelvic and breast examinations. The programs also put emphasis on the ways women can become active participants in their health care.

"If these were programs about physiology, probably no one would come, but women's health is more than anatomy," commented Kathy Sisson, one of the women who runs the workshops.

Lisa Stankus, another workshop aid, finds that "often women relate unsatisfactory interactions they've had with clinicians." Stankus encourages women to discuss these situations with the doctors or nurses involved.

The workshops are tailored to each group's needs. Educational aids are brought to the programs to demonstrate breast self-examination and pelvic structure. There is also a slide-tape show on vaginal ecology.

Opinions vary on canal

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Three UMass faculty members last night voiced varying degrees of support for the ratification of the Panama Canal treaty. Supported by President Carter and his administration, the treaty has encountered national opposition throughout this year.

In a nationally broadcast and televised fireside chat Wednesday night, Carter said opposition to the Panama Canal treaty "is based on misunderstanding and misinformation."

"The new agreement," Carter said, "has already provided vivid proof to the people of this hemisphere that a new era of friendship and cooperation is beginning."

In response to the argument that America should keep the canal because "we bought it, we paid for it, it's ours", Carter said the United States has never owned the Canal Zone but rather holds treaty rights to the use of the zone and the canal.

Political Science Professor Anwar H. Syed in a telephone interview last night agreed with Carter, saying that cooperation was something very real and is desired by the U.S.

"His hopes are based upon the idea that both parties would continue to honor the treaty in the future," said Hart. "In this he may be wrong. World history is full of broken treaties."

Hart noted Latin America is an historical trouble spot which the United States has ignored for too long and cited the treaty's ratification as a "gesture of goodwill, symbolic for all Latin American countries."

However, Hart also pointed out the canal does not have the importance it once did. "With the rise of air power over sea power control of the canal is not as vital as it once was," said Hart. "Presently air power is first, and sea power is a matter of large air craft carriers remaining on their stations."

Political Science Professor Luther A. Allen said the treaty should be ratified and that Carter has gotten himself into trouble by making an issue of the treaty.

"Mutually advanced trade relations, the expansion of trade, and support of Latin America would not be available when we needed it if we did not sign the treaty," said Syed.

However, Syed expressed concern with the issue of neutrality being insured in Carter's treaty, and pointed out the fact that the right of warships within the canal was not mentioned. In times of war or trouble problems could potentially arise between unfriendly countries.

"If by neutrality it is meant that even in times of war all are allowed to pass through, then there is something to worry about," said Syed. He posed the question of whether the U.S. would allow enemy ships near the canal in times of war.

UMass History Professor Robert A. Hart said he felt American control of the Canal in any type of critical situation would be insured by the treaty. However, he questioned Carter's faith in the treaty.

"I think we've got to steer the treaty in a different ballpark," said Allen. "The major role of the treaty is dealing mostly with important relations between the U.S. and the Third World — north and south. If we find ourselves having to argue about the east-west, WWII struggle, it is a different ballpark."

"If we fail to negotiate it," added Allen, "we're in for increasing trouble with the lower countries."

Calls run 4-1 against canal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Telephone calls to the White House ran four to one against the Panama Canal treaties after President Carter's televised speech urging the public to accept them, press secretary Jody Powell said yesterday.

Powell said 250 calls were received and only 50 of those favored the treaties, despite Carter's fireside statement Wednesday night that the accords are "right for us and fair to others."

In the Senate, which must ratify the treaties by a two-thirds vote before they take effect, many of those already committed to the pacts praised Carter's talk, and those opposed criticized him.

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker, who favors the treaties with modifications, said he did not know what impact the speech might have on Capitol Hill, "but it will be favorable in the country."

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., who opposes the treaties, said the president's speech was "filled with distortions."

A Gallup Poll released eariier this week showed 45 per cent of the public now favors the treaties and 42 per cent is opposed, in contrast to a similar survey three months ago that showed 48 per cent against the pacts.

The treaties, signed by Carter and Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos last fall, would give Panama control of the canal by the year 2000.

Senate debate on the pacts begins next week and two senators critical of them said Thursday they have received new documents from anonymous sources that allege Torrijos was involved in drug trafficking.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said the documents were dropped off at his office in a plain white envelope and an aide to Sen. Paul Lexalt, R-Nev., said he got a set also, again delivered by an anonymous source.

Dole said the documents appear to belong to the federal Drug Enforcement Administration and appeared to be authentic. But he declined to make them public.

It was learned, however, that the documents date back to 1975 and report conversations between DEA agents and informants who claimed knowledge of a Torrijos drug connection.

Dole, in a Senate speech, appealed to the administration to make available whatever materials it has on such allegations.

"Despite the cloak of secrecy that the executive branch has wrapped around its files on the alleged Torrijos drug connection, the matter will not simply go away," he said.

The drug trafficking allegations were first raised in the Senate last fall when Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., released a set of DEA raw intelligence documents mentioning Torrijos.

Since then, administration spokespeople have assured the Senate leadership, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it has no evidence to implicate Torrijos.

Profs. give support to ruling

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Two UMass journalism professors yesterday supported a Superior Court ruling issued Wednesday declaring unconstitutional a state law which restricted public access to a court list of persons involved in criminal cases. The ruling will become applicable to all Massachusetts counties once it is upheld in a court of appeals.

"I applaud the decision," Journalism Group chairman Larry Pinkham yesterday said. "This kind of thing prevails in many other states and it's a welcome development."

In his decision released Wednesday, Judge Robert J. Hallisey said "the media has an absolute privilege to publish reports of public judicial proceedings and official court records available for public inspection."

"Some confidence must be placed on media's exercise of reasonable judgment and restraint," he added.

Journalism Professor Ralph Whitehead agreed with the judge's ruling. "It's a question of who exercises restraint — in a free society, the media is probably the best answer," he said.

"As a friend of the press," Whitehead continued, "the more information available to the press the better." He said open police blotters are welcomed by the press for two reasons, civic and commercial.

"Idealistically, freedom of access promotes the democratic values of providing information. Information is also a raw material used by the press to make money and sell to the public," he said.

"The development of the press in this country has traditionally been a fight for access," Pinkham said. It is in the media and the public's interest to have it (police blotter) open," he added.

Pinkham, who once worked for United Press International in New York City, said "I was shocked when I came to Massachusetts and found the records closed."

Whitehead, formerly with the Chicago Sun-Times and Today, said the blotters in Chicago were closed but if a reporter asked to see the books, "the police invariably said yes."

"It's about time Massachusetts got into step with the other states," Pinkham said. "It's the people's police and the people's courts, why the hell shouldn't the people know what's going on," he added.

Court lists may become public

BOSTON [AP] — Court lists of persons involved in criminal cases still were barred to the public yesterday despite a Superior Court judge's ruling declaring the law closing them unconstitutional.

The files were closed in Suffolk County, according to Ed Keating, clerk of the criminal division of the Suffolk County Superior Court.

Keating said the ruling, disclosed Wednesday, applied only to Bristol County, where the New Bedford Standard-Times had sought to inspect the index of names.

"Once the ruling is upheld in the appeals court," said Keating, "it becomes applicable to all."

The Standard-Time did not seek access Thursday to the index of persons involved in criminals cases in the Third District County in New Bedford, according to Editor James Ragsdale. He said the paper awaited the decision on an attorney general's request for a stay and might try to gain access to the files Friday.

The newspaper sued the district court's presiding judge, Ernest C. Horrocks, and its clerk, John M. Stellato, Sept. 21 for access to the index despite a 1972 law closing it to public inspection.

The index makes it easier to find the past records of persons who appeared in criminal cases. Forbidding it to the public was part of an attempt to protect individual privacy.

D.A. to prosecute in morals case

GREENFIELD [UPI] — Assistant Franklin County District Attorney John Finn said yesterday he will recall one more witness before he prosecutes this case in the morals trial of Rev. Roy Leo of Robbens Memorial Church.

Leo, of Greenfield, is charged with abuse, rape, unnatural and lascivious acts with a minor, and assault and battery in the Franklin County Superior Court trial.

The unidentified girl has already testified Rev. Leo had a sexual relationship with her when she was 14 years old.

Finn said he will recall state police detective Norman Roberts, who is assigned to the District Attorney's Greenfield office. Earlier Thursday, the alleged victim's foster sister continued her testimony before Judge Raymond Cross and the jury of seven-men and seven-women.

Black faculty comment on unionization here

By MORSE DIGGS
Collegian Staff

Black faculty members may not have all been in favor of union representation on campus, but seem to agree that its existence calls for their support.

"We had our people out on the picket line," said Black Studies Chairman John Bracey.

Black faculty members were among the 150 instructors and librarians demonstrating this past Wednesday, February 1, outside the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall to protest not receiving a pay hike they claim are due them.

The faculty union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), called for the demonstration because of dissatisfaction over the board's refusal to grant faculty and librarian salary increases funded by the state legislature.

Bracey said the Black Studies Department officially adopted a neutral stand when talk began of a faculty union forming, but with the advent of the union over a year ago, it became necessary to deal with it.

"To be involved with the union is the best way to insure the status of blacks on this campus," he added.

Bracey is on the union's personnel policy committee, which establishes the criteria for hiring, firing, tenure and promotion decisions. Bracey was also active in writing up the contract, which the MSP is attempting to negotiate with the university.

Another black faculty member, Esther Terry, recalls a long history of black support for unions.

"In the days of the pullman porters and the sweat shops, before the unions got too big, blacks could see the unions fighting for improvements. Now I view unions with mixed emotions because unions' bigness has led to the formation of cliques and special interests."

Professor Terry who has recently returned from sabbatical, says she plans to take an active role in the faculty union not only as a spokesperson for blacks but also for women.

Bracey suggests a "wait and see" approach as to the potential success of the union on campus.

"It's a new thing. A lot of black faculty here have never taught at a unionized campus."

A change in name can make all the difference

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

After some deliberation I have decided to change the title of my weekly column from "Call It What You Want" to "Leftfield." Perhaps the changing of a name does not hold much significance for some people. But others may look upon it as an indication of the style and context of that which has been named contains.

"Leftfield"

The new title "Leftfield" can be taken as a move toward writing articles which are more from a socialist perspective, as opposed to the somewhat radical line I have been forced to take in the past.

"Leftfield" can be taken at least in two ways — from the socialist perspective as mentioned before, or from the view that there are more "nonsocialist" Americans in leftfield than we care to think about.

Leftfield in America is the millions of Americans who are denied entrance into society, politically, economically or culturally.

Leftfield are those who are reaching out and grasping for something to cling to something that will make them feel they belong to this vast land of America.

Who's in Leftfield? The poor, for their poverty keeps "Rightfield" (America) rich. The uneducated, for they simply replace the poor as they die.

Black Americans, Asian Americans, Latin Americans, Native Americans and anyone else who has to get anywhere in life with the use of Affirmative Action programs are in Leftfield. You can even feel your presence in "Leftfield. The next time one of your "equal opportunity employers" says to you, "Of course we have an Affirmative Action program. Why we hired 18 minorities last year".

You may be overcome by a feeling of detachment or alienation. Something in you says 'I am special.' But you aren't really special. How can you be special when there are 80 million other minorities in America besides yourself. You are not special, you just don't belong and were never made to feel that you did. It is the laws that are forcing them to make you fit. "Leftfield" isn't communism or socialism, it is the "Other America."

Towards an understanding of the Third World Dynamic

Last semester there was a great controversy in the Student Senate regarding the meaning of Third World. It was established that many Third World students were also unclear of the meaning and origin of the term. In an effort to clarify and strengthen our understanding, a course is being offered this semester by Stan Kinard and Mukende Wa Nisanga. This is an important course and students are urged to enroll in S.W. 109 S.

This course takes a global and analytical look of the world as a whole. It discusses and clarifies controversial issues concerning the identity and specificity of a Third World community within a given society such as the UMass campus.

The course addresses questions of consciousness with regard to its psychological and cultural contents; and provides a dynamic understanding of an alternative for the development of the Third World.

The course meets on Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Malcolm X Center.

Remembering December 10

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Assistant Editor

It was so good to stand out there in the ice cold weather, freezing, and for the peoples of South Africa. I found the spirit, warmth, and mutual concern to be a beautiful experience.

It felt good. There were well over 300 of us and we stood out there from 10:30 to 12:45. Kept warm by our spirit. We sang songs, shouted slogans, marched around, and waited for 1½ hours in the bitter cold for the trustees to come out. We shouted so loud the walls were trembling inside, where the trustees were. They had agreed to have an open meeting with students tomorrow to talk to students about divestment of 20 million dollars worth of stocks in South Africa. It was said to be the biggest protest Amherst college ever had. When the trustees came out, (they tried to wait and freeze us out and it didn't work) we became silent so they could feel what we felt about South Africa, its brutal murders and imprisonment of hundreds non-white people. They are happening all over the country, and the movement is for getting the U.S. economically out of S. Africa is growing. This happened Dec. 10 and there will be more!

Courses!

Students should take note of the many new course offerings that are available this semester within the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

Among the new courses being offered are Mass Media and Black Communities, and Black Folk Culture of the South. These two courses are being taught by William Mackey, Jr. a visiting Professor from the Afro-American Studies Department at the City College of New York.

Professor Paul Puryear has two interesting course listings, Blacks In Southern Politics, and Political Behavior and Public Policy In The Black Community. There is a variety of courses to choose from within the department, as well as with various Third World organizations.

Those who may be unsure of what to sign up for should seriously consider the below list of new courses, especially since they were not included in the pre-registration booklet.

AFRO-AM 291D BLACK FOLK CULTURE OF THE SOUTH M 19:00-21:30 NAH 110 William Mackey, Jr.

Examination of the historical development and retention of cultural and institutional structures in the Black South. Includes family and childrearing, education, religion, entertainment, law and badmen, work, etc. Attention to African roots and modifications from slavery to the present day sea islands off the coast of Georgia. Audio and video tapes, photos, and recordings will be extensively utilized. 3 Credits

AFRO-AM 391C MASS MEDIA AND BLACK COMMUNITIES Tu 19:00-21:30 NAH 110 William Mackey, Jr.

A survey of modern communications media and their impact on Black communities. Newspapers, magazines, radio, and television will be examined within the context of social, political, and educational functions and historical racist tendencies. Program content, control, access, and other issues will be covered. 3 Credits

Afro-Am 253 Pre-Civil War Black Writings [C] TuTh 9:30-10:45 NAH 110-Prof. Allan Austin

The "American Renaissance" of the late 1804's and 1850's, in which Emerson, Hawthorne, Melville, Thoreau, and Whitman, produced their greatest expressions of peculiarly American and optimistic attitudes toward freedom, democracy, and respect for the common person, was also the era of Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin and other treatments of Afro-Americans, and was, more pertinently, a period of important but too-little-known Afro-American writing which both echoes the major concerns of our classical writers and provides a significant commentary on them.

Anyone seeking to understand American life and thought must not overlook that body of literature: The Bold appeals and defenses of David Walker, Nat Turner and others; The well-wrought autobiography, speeches, equal to anyone's in that oratorical era — and fiction of Frederick Douglass, which so closely prefigure the tones and tactics of his own day as well as that of integrationists of the 1960's; the timeless tales of heroic captives and escapes of slaves such as those of Henry Bibb. Wheatley, James Whitfield, and others which reflect the poetry of the period from the Enlightenment to the Age of Reform, and the novels — so different from one another — of Williams Wells Brown, Martin Delany and Frank Webb offer insights into slave and folk culture, black life in northern cities, American politics and mores — as well as, in the case of Delany's novel — pan-African revolutionary plans, that were unmatched until our own time. # Report denied

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A spokeswoman for the UMass-Worcester medical school yesterday denied published reports that Massachusetts taxpayers spend $25,000-$35,000 per year for each student in the school.

Public Information Director Carole Cohen also dispelled implications the school is not worth the cost.

"It is worth the cost," she said flatly.

The Associated Press yesterday reported the cost per year for taxpayers for each student enrolled in the medical school to be $25,000-$35,000. The school has approximately 400 students.

Cohen said the Associated Press figure, which was derived by dividing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' budget request for the school by the enrollment, was a "false figure".

The medical school is slated to received $10.9 million under Dukakis' budget request. That figure is down from the $13.1 million the school originally requested. In addition, the school will receive another $3.5 million as a state subsidy for the teaching hospital.

"That isn't how you figure the cost to educate a medical student," she said. Cohen said $12,000-$18,000 would be a more realistic figure. That figure, she said, is based on experience at other institutions.

UMass-Worcester officials are presently computing the school's cost per student.

Cohen said the figure quoted by the Associated Press did not take into account costs that are student related but for which students are not directly responsible.

Examples of these costs, she said, would be costs associated with teaching medical residents, doing research, and teaching Allied Health students.

Medical residents, while not students at the school, are taught in the school's teaching hospital. Allied Health students, also not considered students at the school, include nursing, pharmacy, and physical therapy students, among others she said.

Additionally, Cohen said, much of the school's upcoming budget will go toward personnel and support costs, and not directly to students. She said the school is behind in its faculty recruitments as the school reaches projected limits of enrollment.

Biko case over; no prosecutions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — The attorney general of Eastern Cape province said yesterday he would not prosecute any policemen involved in the arrest and detention of black leader Steve Biko, who died in jail last year.

Attorney General Carel van der Walt said in a statement that he had examined Biko's inquest records and, "I am not instituting any prosecution" in the case.

Biko, one of South Africa's black power leaders, was detained and interrogated last August in Port Elizabeth. The day before he died on Sept. 12, he was put naked in the back of a police vehicle and driven 750 miles from Port Elizabeth to Pretoria for further medical treatment.

Ven der Walt said that Johan Nothling, attorney general of the Transvaal province, would have to decide if any offense were committed by police in Pretoria, which is in Nothling's district.

Evidence given by police during the inquest showed that for about two weeks Biko was kept naked in a police cell. When he was being interrogated he was manacled by his hands and feet for several days in a policeman's office.

Police minister Jimmy Kruger told parliament Tuesday he had sent the Biko inquest record to the attorney general for a decision on whether to prosecute any policemen involved.

The inquest magistrate, Marthius Prins, ruled in December no one was criminally responsible for Biko's death.

In other developments, black high school students in Johannesburg's black township of Soweto trickled back to classes on the second day of the 1978 school year.

Only 13 of the 40 schools have reopened and there is still no clear picture of attendance figures.

The Johannesburg newspaper, The Star, reported that less than 1,000 of the 27,000 registered high school pupils had shown up for class. Another newspaper, Die Vaderland, said the 13 open schools were fully attended Wednesday.

Education officials say poor attendances during the first week were "normal" in Soweto and it would take a week before the situation settled down.

At the end of last year the now banned Soweto Students Representatives Council organized an almost total boycott of high schools in Soweto.

Boyle linked

MEDIA, Pa. [UPI] — A key prosecution witness Thursday linked former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle to the 1969 Yablonski slayings while admitting he broke eight years of silence in the case following the promise of a deal.

Albert Pass, former secretary-treasurer of UMW District 19 in Kentucky and Tennessee, testified that Boyle postponed the planned assassination of his bitter union rival Joseph "Jock" Yablonski, but after Boyle was re-elected UMW president, he gave orders to "get the job done."

Pass said Boyle also suggested where three hired killers could find their victim — Yablonski's Clarksville, Pa., home.

Boyle, 76, is on trial for the second time on charges he ordered the slaying of Yablonski, his bitter foe in the 1969 UMW presidential election. Yablonski, his wife and daughter were shot to death in their home Dec. 31, 1969, three weeks after the election.

Pass, who did not testify at his own trial where he was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to three consecutive life terms in prison, said he made a complete confession Sept. 13, 1977. Pass was asked by Special Prosecutor Richard A. Sprague why, "after eight years did you decide to speak up."

In reply, Pass said, "I decided to testify and tell the truth to relieve my conscience of the guilt I felt because of the sin I committed in my participation in the murders of Yablonski, his wife and daughter."

Pass also said Sprague told him he would try to get his three consecutive life prison terms reduced to one concurrent term, and would try to have him placed in a prison "with due regard to my personal safety."

He testified that he decided to talk because he realized, "Boyle was trying to make it appear I was the originator of the murders. I just wanted to get the record straight."

Cross-examination by defense attorney A. Charles Peruto brought out that Pass could remember all the exact dates involving his participation and discussion with Boyle, but could not remember the exact date in 1977 when he first started talking to Sprague.

The witness, stocky and balding and wearing tinted glasses, frequently sparred with Peruto during the cross examination.

Oil barge spill

NEWINGTON, N.H. [UPI] — The oil barge which split apart in the Piscataqua River while loading Monday night had ran aground off New Jersey one year ago, the captain testified yesterday.

Captain Wallace Lampkin of New Jersey also told a Coast Guard board of inquiry if he had been able to take on the 90,000 barrels planned for the barge, it would have been the most ever carried aboard the Bouchard 105 during his two years on that vessel.

Commander Glenn Haines, Marine Safety Officer at the Coast Guard's Portland, Maine, base, mentioned the barge had run aground February of 1977 off New Jersey. He noted it had been in dry dock for one month and had been examined and re-certified by the Coast Guard.

Lampkin said he had not overseen repairs to the vessel personally.

Officials said earlier the barge split from side to side at 6:20 p.m. Monday when it had taken on 31,000 barrels or 1.3 million gallons of No. 6 industrial oil in its forward and aft compartments.

The Coast Guard estimated 7,000 gallons of oil leaked into the Piscataqua River. About 3,000 gallons was recovered by devices called skimmers. The Coast Guard said 30 per cent of the remaining 4,000 gallons had been washed out to sea by the tides by yesterday noon.

Haines asked Lampkin whether it was proper to load at both ends and not the middle. Lampkin, who has been a tankerman for 14 years and has worked for Bouchard Transportation, Inc., for five years, said he had no reason "to believe it was improper." He said there would have been more drag on the vessel if he had loaded the middle compartments at the same time.

Plan gives aid

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Gov. Ella T. Grasso yesterday proposed a $180 million long-term urban revitalization program that would cost only $4 million this year and leave up to subsequent legislatures whether to fund the rest.

The proposed 10-year program is aimed at reversing urban decline, alleviating chronic unemployment and tackling the special problems of minorities, the governor told a Capitol news conference.

She said the proposed cost and projections of the program would create 120,000 jobs in the coming decade.

The program, which would cover the cost of the state's cities, would be open to towns with jobless rates of more than 6 per cent.

It would also be open to regions defined as "economically distressed" by the federal government.

Mrs. Grasso, seeking re-election this year, wants the program approved by the 1978 legislature.

Asked if she thought it were realistic to ask lawmakers to commit future legislators to potentially expensive programs, she said, "I think it is realistic and it is up to them to make whatever judgments they will."

Mrs. Grasso and Lt. Gov. Robert K. Killian, who is challenging her for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, have been trying to outdo each other in attempts to win urban support.

He has proposed using the $50 million she wants to go for a sales tax cut to increase aid to municipalities.

Lead harmful

BOSTON [AP] — A federal study confirms children can be harmed by eating lead or cadmium decorations from drinking glasses, State Public Health Commissioner Jonathan Fielding said yesterday.

Fielding said recent reports that the federal study found no health hazard in drinking glasses with decals made of lead or cadmium were wrong.

"The federal study actually confirms a Massachusetts Department of Public Health study which found that glasses decorated with lead and cadmium can pose a health threat to young children if they remove the paint and then ingest it," he said Thursday.

"The possibility of young children's adding to the lead in their bodies by licking, gnawing or picking off the painted decoration remains too great a threat to be ignored."

The Health Department said the federal study found that most glasses when exposed to acidic liquid released a low and safe level of lead or cadmium, but the amount released in some cases exceeded recommended maximum levels.

The tests showed the lead or cadmium from external decorations did not go through the glass to the liquid.

Lynn Knox, public relations director for the state department, said such liquids as soft drinks and organe juice are acidic.

The tests, in which glasses were immersed in an acidic solution, were conducted by three federal agencies: the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Food and Drug Administration.

Fielding's office said the three agencies have made four recommendations and will hold hearings in Washington next month on the subject.

The agencies recommended not permitting decorations containing lead or cadmium on lip and rim areas of glasses and setting a maximum level of extraction of 1,000 micrograms of lead and 100 micrograms of cadmium under prescribed conditions for the rest of the outside of glasses.

Ms. Knox said the recommended levels are such that a child would not be harmed if he peeled off all the paint and ate it.

By SUSAN BIRMINGHAM

Rumor has it that the Collegian is going international. While I would agree that the world outside of UMass is a strange and fascinating place which definitely should be looked into, I have serious questions concerning this latest Collegian trend, and am trying to understand what it means. How is it that those in decision making positions on the Collegian staff came to the conclusion that students need to know less about what goes on at UMass and more about what is already reported in every other available paper? Are they of the opinion that the process of "educating" 18,000 people is unimportant?

I am not calling for advocacy journalism. There is no need for that. The facts will speak for themselves. While most would agree that education is a joke (a rather expensive one at that) very few are talking about why.

Survey after survey taken by students show serious dissatisfaction with the quality of advising in academic depts. Yet faculty will soon be in the process of negotiation over the time spent advising students. Common sense, combined with research, shows that faculty will bargain down the amount of time required to spend with individual students. They why was 2.5 million dollars approved for faculty office renovations? 2.5 million dollars that could have been used to hire more professors or renovate some of the disgusting conditions that students are forced to live under?

When events at the University are reported on, it is merely the superficial "who said what and where they were when they said it." No attempt is made to connect events, to tell the entire story. Responsible journalism?

The further irony is that our own student newspaper shys away from covering students attempts at changing the situation at UMass. That too is deemed unimportant. A great deal of time, energy and money is being poured into advancing students' rights and virtually no one is reporting on it.

The public has a right to know what is going on here. Events take place every day that have repercussions on the quality of education, yet our own newspaper is moving towards denying us access to that information, rendering it "unimportant."

The president of B.U. is currently trying to censor the student newspaper, most likely because students are reporting on events which would otherwise be hidden from public view. Our administration need not worry given that our press is moving towards voluntarily censoring itself.

Women's Week is coming soon

To the Editor:

This is to let you know that the second UMass sponsored International Women's Week will be held from March 5 through the 11th. Once again, we ask the support of all those interested in making it a special and successful week.

At this writing, there are already several confirmed events. Women's Week will open Sunday night with "Holly Near" performing at the Fine Arts Center. This will surely be an excellent concert. On Monday night, Wilma Rudolph, the Olympic Gold Medalist, will speak at the SUB. The week will continue with informative workshops, interesting guest speakers like Paula Gold, and Dance and Theatre events, like "The Little Flags" Theatre group performing "The Furies of Mother Jones". The week will close with a concert given by Bearnice Reagan and Sweet Honey in the Rock on Saturday night. This all Black Women's band will be performing both traditional and contemporary Black music. Day Care will be provided during the week.

The plans for the week are solidifying but we need the help of all those who can contribute ideas, funds, muscle, and time. Several planning committees are being formed to cover all the facets of I.W.W. All those interested should plan to attend the next organizational meeting held Monday night, February 6th, at 9:00 p.m. in CC 903.

International Women's Week is an educational experience to benefit everyone, but we need your help to make it work.

Barrel barriers block bus stop

To the Editor:

We students here at UMass have to put up with enough as is, what with tight budgets, crowded classes, losing our provost, etc. But a recent happening has blown the lid off, so to speak.

It seems someone, be it the Physical Plant, God, or whatever, has seen fit to place barrels in and along Campus Center Way. This has resulted in a tremendous hardship placed on students, motorists, and faculty alike.

People are forced to walk through or around these barrels, making the amount of walking done on campus greater. I mean, we do enough of it already. The other day I tried to get a bus and couldn't and had to walk from Southwest all the way to Machmer.

For those of you who don't know what I'm talking about, there are some five to six barrels in front of the entrance to the garage and five or six more near the bus stop. That's 12 barrels all together.

I deplore the placement of these barrels. Move the Campus Center Twelve!

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Shaping a real education

By DAMON THOMAS
Collegian Staff

Over intersession, I had the opportunity to relive a bit of my past and to see "education in action" by visiting my eight-year-old cousin's grammar school classroom for a day.

The whole day was a trip, made enjoyable by the refreshing vigor, spirit and innocence of little children, not yet inculcated with the prejudices and hatreds of their parents and college counterparts. Yet, I couldn't help but to constantly reflect upon the process of "education" (indoctrination) and how these little children are taught to accept society's dominant values and myths in the same blind and ruthless fashion as I was once, and still am, forced to accept.

Schools have been called a "model of society", and, along with television, they constitute a child's first sustained contact with the wider society outside the home. Since there is little formal instruction in American history, politics, or civics until the later grades of elementary school, one might suppose that it is not until this point that schools affect children's political beliefs. Yet what children learn is not confined to the content of their courses. Indeed, some scholars argue that school may exercise its greatest political influence in the earliest years before children have even the haziest conception of American politics.

Most school boards and teachers consider that formal subject teaching (the three R's, civics, science, and the like) is what school is all about. To be sure, students do spend time grappling with the mysteries of multiplications and division. Much of their school day, however, is spent in ways that are irrelevant to the formal curriculum. Typically, relatively large numbers of children are brought together into a relatively small room and confined there most of the school day. Academic learning in such a situation is difficult at best, children spend an inordinate amount of time in "noneducational" activities — lining up, waiting to get the teachers' attention, pledging allegiance to the flag, taking tests, pretending to study, lunch period, play, and listening to the teacher scold.

Yet these activities are probably politically more influential than any formal instruction in social studies. They form part of what some educators label the "hidden curriculum," whose symbolic message pervades the educational system from the early grades. Beginning with kindergarten the student begins to learn what life is really like in the company.

The child is trained in how to go about making a substitute — self, one that will get the maximum approval and rewards from the state, a self that will get along better than the real self, the self that might-have-been. The child also learns to base relationships with others on criterion fixed by the state; other boys and girls can be rated on a fixed objective scale. Further, the child learns that life as defined by the state is not an experience-in-common but an individual position on a scale of relative positions, so that individual must compete for places in life; "life" consists of a position-achieved, and not in living-as-process.

Children soon learn that success in the classroom comes from playing the game the teacher's way and thereby gaining the teacher's approval. Teachers reward children who obey instructions, display initiative (but not too much and in an acceptable form), and appear interested in the designated subject matter — but are adept at switching to a new subject at the teacher's request. The hidden curriculum thus teaches lessons that are far more important for living in the world of politics and corporate capitalism than knowledge of reading and writing; it teaches the importance of identification papers, records, tardy slips, no whispering to your neighbor, the acceptable dress, signatures, forms, and tests. Success in school, as in later life comes from performing well in a situation of hierarchial control. And although the process is less apparent at the college level, political indoctrination of the dominant idealogy continues to be common.

Overall, the most important political influence of schools is to reproduce the contours of American social structure. The lowest positions in society are occupied by "dropouts" from school, usually from poor backgrounds. Middle-level positions are held by the offspring of those in the corporate-labor sector or small-scale capital. And future authorities are recruited from the sons and daughters of the advantaged. Despite a rhetoric of personal development and equal opportunity, schools at all levels perpetuate the myths about America and mold cultural attitudes of obedience and respect for established political and economic institutions.

Despite living, and having grown up, in such an educational setting, however, students unified can and must reshape the emphasis and direction of their own education. In the words of Jerry Farber, professor at California State, L.A., "students, like black people, have immense unused power. They could, theoretically, insist on participating in their own education. They could make academic freedom bi-lateral. They could teach their teachers to thrive on love and admiration, rather than fear and respect, and to lay down their weapons. Students could discover community. And they could learn to dance by dancing on the IBM cards. They could make coloring books out of the catalogs and they could put the grading system in a museum. And, believe it or not, they could study eagerly and learn prodigiously for the best of all possible reasons — their own reasons. They could. Theoretically. They have the power.

Cheer up, depressed academics! In an era of increased class sizes and teaching loads, "stable" (i.e., in real dollars, plummeting) salaries, and that newly transitivized verb to retrench ("We are going to hire you, Mr.-Mrs. Jones, but that line was retrenched"), there remains a segment of our profession which can rightly be termed a growth industry. I refer, of course, to Academic Administration.

A couple of years ago I had occasion to visit a state university in the Midwest. Well, not a state university, but, as it turned out, "the Ruritania campus of the University of Agricola system." Agricola had long had a campus at Ruritania with an academic quality at least worthy of its football team, and a medical school in the state's bustling capital city, Magnifica. In the heady 1960's, the university established at Magnifica a "dynamic, innovative new campus oriented toward the particular needs and aspirations of the urban environment and population" of that fair city. All of the established graduate programs remained at Ruritania, and, apart from a handful of master's programs, none was started at Magnifica.

Establishment did not end there, however. In its wisdom, the board of trustees of the University of Agricola also caused to be erected a university system. A system President was "brought on board": the main campus of the university now became known as U.A.R.; the President of the main campus became but one of three Chancellors in the U.A. system; a system office was poshly ensconced in downtown Magnifica, and the system office was "staffed up" with an Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs, an Executive Vice President for Business and Management, and (most important to this tale) an Executive Graduate Dean.

In my rounds at Agricola I posed the following questions to the Executive Graduate Dean. Was it the case that virtually the entire graduate enterprise of the U.A. system was located on the Ruritania campus? It was. Was there a Graduate Dean at Ruritania? There was. How, then, did the Executive Graduate Dean occupy his time? Looking at the Big Picture. Was not the Big Picture from the high-rent district of downtown Magnifica just about precisely congruent with the Little Picture from the administration building at Ruritania? Change of subject.

I have indulged a bit of poetic license, of course, in amalgamating into one example conditions I have found recently at several public universities. But the broad outlines of this minor fiction should be familiar. At a time when the "product" of universities — students taught, research performed, service given — is diminishing pari passu with taxpayer investment, the number of persons and dollars devoted to the wholly unproductive enterprise of managing that activity continues to increase at close to a geometric rate.

I do not pretend to understand why this phenomenon continues, save for the entirely human failings of avarice and vanity. But a paradigm that should come as no news to any senior faculty member who has done time in administration perhaps can explain how. The Trustees of the University of Agricola "go the system route." President Imperator, who, after all, needs a staff, hires an Executive Vice President for Business and Management (at, to be conservative, $40,000), who, after all, needs a staff. Executive Vice President Megabucks thus hires an Associate Executive Vice President for Business and Management (at a hierarchically appropriate $32,000), who simply can't be attracted without a staff assistant ($17,500) to do the scut work. Now, of course, Chancellor Grossmacht at U.A.R. pleads with his faculty senate to approve the immediate appointment of a new Vice Chancellor for Business and Management to "interface" with the Executive Vice President for Business and Management. And on and on and on.

For every system-office appointment there is thus a Malthusian Multiplier Effect; the appointment of every system officer leads to multiple appointments all the way down the line. I once did a conservative calculation of this metastasis for the appointment of one system officer through one reporting line on one campus alone, and came up with 30 additional administrative, staff, and clerical appointments at an annual salary cost of $500,000. Is it any wonder that the system office of the State University of New York is moving into a multi-story building in Albany once thought sufficient to house the entire administrative establishment of the Delaware and Hudson Railway?

A number of theories, some of them touching in their low estimate of human critical and analytical faculties, have been advanced to justify this state of affairs. One such theory is the More Careful Management Principle, which proposes that as available dollars diminish, more persons (a fortiori, more dollars) must be devoted to more careful management of these declining resources. Extended to its logical conclusion, this principle offers an elegant solution to our ills, attractive both to legislators and to faculty members. To begin with, since the more persons there are to manage the diminishing dollars, the more carefully they are managed, the number of dollars should immediately be reduced to zero and the number of persons engaged in management should be quintupled, thus maximally improving efficiency.

This increase in oversight can be effected by Phase II of what I shall modestly call the Freeman Gambit; retrench the faculty to zero, abolish the entire teaching and research mission of the university, and give the retrenched faculty members administrative jobs. This step would both end faculty-administration conflict (since there would no longer be a faculty) and solve the tenure problem. It would create difficulties for the student-faculty ratio, since the ratio of zero to, say, 25,000 is, alas, not infinity, but zero. But Executive Vice President for Business and Management Megabucks and his capable staff and everybody else and their capable staffs ought to be able to deal with that.

This essay begins to sound like Catch-22: everybody (well, everybody except the faculty and the students) has a share. Catch-22 was written, be it remembered, about the military, to which, together with the federal government and the table of organization of a multinational corporation, modern university systems are coming to bear a more than passing resemblance, with three significant exceptions: no Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs ever had to show a profit, win an election, or get shot at.

What to do? I propose several solutions, in increasing order of seriousness.

Solution One: Extend to every state-university system in the land the organization, budget, and manning table of my present employer, the Commonwealth (of Pennsylvania) System of Higher Education, which manages four mature, high-quality, complex campuses. The bottom line of the System Office budget is zero. As far as I know, there is no System Office; if one exists, somebody stole its mimeograph machine.

Solution One is no doubt utopian. Solution Two is achievable in theory, but, given the human nature that has dominated this discussion, "unrealistic" (which is administrationese for "no"). But I persist.

Solution Two: Apply ratios to administration and faculty in academic *de*flation equivalent to those applied in academic *in*flation. Take a base year and calculate the ratio of dollars spent on teaching and research to those spent on administration. When budgetary cuts are made, cut administrative costs in accordance with the base-year ratio.

For example, in 1965 the University of Agricola cost the taxpayers $50-million, of which $1-million, or 2 per cent, went to administration. In the current budget year, the U.A. system disposes of the heady but handy sum of $100-million in 1965 dollars, of which $6-million, or 6 per cent, is for administration. That tight-fisted fiscal watchdog Senator Whitney Winsom rams through the state legislature's ways-and-means committee a cut of $10-million. By Solution Two, that cut is apportioned between administrative and instructional costs so as to roll administrative costs back to 2 per cent; The administrative budget is cut by $4.2-million; the instructional budget by $5.8-million. Hard counsel, this, for the Deputy Assistant Vice Chancellors for Academic Affairs but, in lean times, necessary.

Solution Three: A Sunset Law. A joint legislative-faculty committee should review, every five years, the question of whether a university system should continue to exist. Are the considerable added costs of a system organization justified by reduced costs elsewhere? Has the existence of the system led to increased academic quality? Would the interests of the taxpayers be equally or better served by removing the locus of competition for public funds from the university system to the legislative system?

Solution Four: Abandon civic pride. Very few states have a higher-education establishment sufficiently large and homogeneous to realize the economies of scale that a central system is claimed to provide. It is not at all obvious that, say, the State University of New York at Buffalo and the State University of New York Agricultural and Technical College at Cobleskill have any significant similarity in academic goals, budgeting policies, personnel practices, or administrative procedures. And, though it may damage the self-esteem of the legislators of the sovereign State of Nevada to think that they cannot have a University of Nevada System just like their neighbors to the west have a University of California System, the advice from here, Nevadans, is to consign it to the flames. All but the largest and most homogeneous university systems should be abolished.

These "solutions" are of course like using aspirin to treat cancer. But I have yet to hear arguments that even come close to justifying the creation and sustenance on public funds — funds that should be educating students — of a gargantuan and entirely self-perpetuating New Mandarinate. Private universities in general have nowhere near the number of administrative positions to be found on public-system campuses. Is this because public universities are just inherently harder to manage than private ones? I doubt it. Rather, I suspect, it is harder to justify the creation of a splendiferous entourage to a board of trustees that will personally have to raise the considerable sums required for its care and feeding, and, conversely, easier to make the case for administrative fiefdoms than for research money and graduate fellowships to state legislators, who, after all, understand that power is jobs. But the cost of this easy coziness is too high, and it is being paid in the name of higher education directly by taxpayers and indirectly by students and faculty members at an accelerating rate. Until it can be conclusively demonstrated that they achieve economies in excess of their huge costs, university systems should be the first casualties in a time of retrenchment. At present, they are likely to be the last.

Sadat to take world peace tour

CAIRO, Egypt [AP] — President Anwar Sadat began a world tour yesterday to rally support for his Midwest peace initiatives and seek President Carter's help in pressuring Israel for concessions on issues that have deadlocked negotiations.

"I hope this trip will add momentum to the peace process," Sadat said before flying to Rabat, Morocco, where he planned to confer with King Hassan, a supporter of his peace campaign.

Sadat is scheduled to arrive in Washington on Friday for talks Saturday and Sunday with Carter at Camp David, Md. He will stay in Washington until Wednesday, and on his way home will talk with government leaders in Britain, France, West Germany, Austria, Italy and Romania.

Western diplomats here said no dramatic breakthrough should be expected from the Camp David meeting and that Carter invited Sadat to Washington to get a better idea of what the Egyptian leader wants and what he expects to happen next.

Sadat insists that the Israelis withdraw from all Arab territory occupied since the Six-Day War of 1967 and self-determination for the Palestinians — proposals Israel has refused to consider.

A Cairo source said Sadat was on the verge of asking the United States to formulate a "set of principles" along the lines suggested by Carter on Jan. 4, when he conferred with the Egyptian president at the Aswan airport.

Carter said then that a settlement should be based on establishment of normal relations between Israel and the Arab states, Israel's withdrawal from occupied territory, recognition of the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians and their participation in the determination of their future. But Western diplomats note that Carter omitted the word "total" when he suggested Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands and they say Egyptians view this as significant.

Egyptian sources say Sadat's concept of self-determination for the Palestinians means he envisions a quasi-independent Palestinian entity on the West Bank of the Jordan River closely linked with Jordan.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has offered a limited self-rule for the 1.1 million Palestinians living in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and contends an independent Palestinian state would threaten Israel's security.

After Sadat broke off political talks with Israelis in Jerusalem on Jan. 18, sources said the United States drafted a peace formula based on Carter's Jan. 4 proposals, but that both Israel and Egypt rejected it.

Western diplomats here said they have no idea what, if anything, Carter could offer that both Sadat and Begin would accept. But an Egyptian source said it "is time for the United States to do something" and that Carter "can't sit on the fence any longer."

Before Sadat's departure, negotiations here between Egyptian and Israeli defense ministers on proposals for Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula were suspended and the Israeli negotiators returned to Tel Aviv.

A communique issued Wednesday night said the two sides would consult on the date of their next meeting. Sources said the Israelis left after failing to reach agreement on the issue of Israeli settlements in Sinai, but neither the Egyptians nor the Israelis would comment. The Cairo talks had resumed on Tuesday after a three-week recess.

Sadat met Wednesday with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, and an Egyptian spokesman said they discussed issues that will be brought up at Camp David. Sadat rejected the wording of a declaration of principles for an Arab-Israeli peace settlement that Atherton and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan worked on.

Carter stays firm

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Last night, just before the arrival of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, President Carter told aides he will stand by his public statement that Israeli leaders promised him they would create no new settlements in occupied Arab territories.

Seemingly reluctant to discuss the budding U.S.-Israeli dispute in greater detail, press secretary Jody Powell told reporters Carter has rechecked the record of his conversations with the Israelis and sees no reason to change the statement he made at Monday's news conference.

"The president has no doubt that his statement at the press conference is accurate," Powell said.

Dayan has denied he promised Carter Israel would establish no new settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River.

"Our checking of the records available of the Carter-Dayan conversation confirms what the president said at the press conference," Powell said. "I see no reason for me to become involved in a press briefing back and forth about this.

"The president has made himself clear, and reaffirmed his statements today. I don't intend to get into details."

At the news conference, Carter said in response to a question about the new settlement Israel is creating:

"When Prime Minister Begin was over here and when Foreign Minister Dayan was here, this question arose.

"My understanding of their commitment was that no new settlements would be authorized by the government, that any increase in settlers would be an expansion of existing settlements as much as possible within the aegis of the military."

Powell refused to discuss the matter further except to say, "the question of settlements is one of continuing interest."

Sadat is arriving today for a six-day Washington visit, highlighted by an ultra-private Camp David weekend conference at which he is expected to urge Carter to pressure the Israelis into softening their Middle East peace demands.

The Egyptian-Israeli peace initiatives opened at Sadat have been at a virtual standstill since Jan. 18, when Sadat broke off the foreign ministers' conference in Jerusalem.

H390B Values and Transition Jerry Jacobs Mon. 9:30-12:30 Hills South

The purpose of this course is to examine how values in the U.S. have changed in the last 30 years. We will be looking at how we get information through media, institutions, our family and social systems. Our goal is to help the students to understand implicit and explicit values being imposed by our society and how these values emerge. We will focus on social values and systems and personal values. Structured activities, lectures, and outside assignments are designed to help students learn in a vital way.

P-F 3 credits Schedule number 228275

I 691 Issues in Staff Development Horace Reed Wed. 4:00-6:30 Room 21A School of Education

Focus on design, implementation, evaluation of inservice and other staff development programs. Study of inter-institutional issues; concerns of control, finance, needs analysis, innovative approaches. Seminars, great lecturers.

I 517 Introduction to Computer Use in Teaching Portia Elliott Mon. 4:00-6:30 L-shaped room, School of Education

The aim of this course is to introduce students to the use of the computer in the teaching-learning process. The course is composed of three separable parts: 1) Introduction to programming in APL, 2) Survey of Computer Applications in Education, and 3) Advanced Programming in APL or APL Tutorial for children.

I 770 Instructional Applications of Computers Portia Elliott Tues. 2:30-5:30 L-shaped room, School of Education

The aim of this course is to have students propose, design, develop, implement, and document a unit of computer-assisted instructional material. The CAI unit will be programmed in a language suitable for execution on UMass time-sharing computer and will be informally tested and evaluated for educational effectiveness.

I 591B Seminar in Tape Recording Educational Audio Production Liane Brandon Th. 2:30-3:45 Room 21B School of Education

Explores the creative and practical application of sound. Ideal introduction to radio. Basic skills as well as opportunities for independent study.

I 545 Filmmaking for the Classroom Teacher Liane Brandon Tues. 4:00-6:30 Room 21B School of Education

Enough room left in the class for two more students.

I 590G Language and Schooling Earl Seidman Th. 3:30-6:05 Room 21A School of Education

The course explores the relationships between the nature of language and the nature of teaching and learning in schools. Members of the class will read basic works in the area of cultural linguistics, semantics, psycholinguistics, and sociolinguistics by authors such as Sapir, Piaget, Vygotsky, Bernstein and Labov. Through a discussion of these readings we will examine the interaction of language and thought, language and society, and language and culture. We will examine the use of language in classrooms for illustrations of the basic concepts discussed in the readings.

I 546 Education TV Workshop Damerell-Lee Mon. 4:00-6:30 TV Studio Room 23 School of Education

A basic hands-on workshop course designed to familiarize teachers (Pre-service and in-service) with all aspects of television production under studio conditions — emphasizing the process and time constraints of the television medium. Implications and applications to educational settings will be derived from the content and context of the individual student productions.

I 357 Intro. to Urban Education Section 1 Tues. 9:30-12:30 Byrd L. Jones Section 2 Wed. 7:00-9:30 Linda Woodard

Introduction to the social political and economic setting of urban schools together with some problems and some solutions for classroom in inner city schools.

Physical Education —

Alpine Skiing (downhill) G65 and Nordic Skiing (cross-country) G80 are not oversubscribed. Registration for these courses is in Boyden Room 223 from 9 a.m.-3 p.m., Jan 31-Feb. 3.

Campus Carousel

By TONY GRANITE

IMAGE OF UMASS to the country is portrayed by the 1978-79 edition of "The Insider's Guide to the Colleges" as "the poor child of the Five College area."

Compiled by the staff of The Yale Daily News, this sixth edition is a compedium of 230 campuses, published by Berkley Publishing Corp., 200 Madison Ave., New York City 10016. Each entry, the authors say, results from information submitted by several persons on each campus.

Here's what they say about UMass at Amherst.

".... we have to admit that the average student at UMass is rather boorish, not very intelligent (median SAT 550 V, 590M), and really not very interesting. But we also contend that there are a lot of students at UMass who are very intelligent and very interesting, more so perhaps than their counterparts at Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith."

"These are generally students who didn't work hard enough in high school to get into a better college, or who couldn't afford a better college (UMass is every inexpensive), or perhaps those whose talents just didn't happen to be academic."

"Consequently, there is a large subculture at UMass that is as sophisticated and interesting as at the best of any college. Many students live off campus and do all sorts of interesting things, such as painting, writing poetry, and smoking dope (which is present in both quality and quantity). There seems to be a remnant from the counterculture hanging on at the campus; with their presence, UMass is hardly a haven for bores."

Alternative Learning Program looking for volunteers to teach

ALTERNATIVE HIGH SCHOOL SEEKS VOLUNTEERS

The Alternative Learning Program on campus at UMass is looking for volunteers to teach classes for the spring semester. Volunteers can earn credit for teaching in the program, and are needed in all subject areas.

The ALP is located in "Cottage B" in the old infirmary complex behind Worcester Dining Commons. There are 14 high school students ages 15-18 in the program, serving all the high schools in Hampshire County. As a result, classes are small (3-5 average) allowing for greater personal contact between students and teachers, and a more informal atmosphere. Three full time staff members provide supervision and support.

The program has operated on campus since September 1975, with 15-25 UMass students participating each semester. Many of them have found it to be their most rewarding experience at the University.

For spring semester people are needed to teach English classes, Algebra, Geometry, Alternative Energy, Natural Science, Electronics, Organic Gardening, U.S. History, Native American History, Sign Language, Spanish, French, Sculpture, Silvercraft, Photography (basic), woodcarving, harmonica, guitar, banjo, auto mechanics, reading and writing tutorials, and anything else that you might be able to interest people in.

The program operates Monday-Friday from 8:30-2:30. UMass students wishing to participate in this experience should drop by any time during the week of January 30-February 3 between these hours. Those wishing to have a head start when they come should write a brief description of their ideas for the course they wish to teach. For information call Mark Simon at 545-2584.

Army ROTC

You've heard that before.
So, make us prove it. We think we can.
Army ROTC helps keep all your options open. That means a lot unless you're absolutely certain how you want to spend the rest of your life. It prepares you for success in both civilian and military careers.

How?
First (and maybe foremost) Army ROTC teaches you leadership. Practical leadership. How to deal with and influence people; how to make things happen. Business and government always pay a premium for leadership!
While you take the Advanced Course, you also earn $100 per month. That'll help pay your expenses.

You earn your commission while you earn your degree. The commission, by itself, testifies to your leadership abilities. You have the option of an Army career with all the pay, prestige and travel opportunities of an officer.
There are plenty of other reasons why Army ROTC makes sense for a young man or woman determined to get ahead. We'd like to tell you more.

Sign up for colloqs offered in Southwest

Southwest Writing Colloqs begin the week of February 20. If you are interested in working on your writing in small group sessions — once a week for eight weeks for one credit — then pay a visit to the Southwest Rhetoric Office, John Adams Room 4 or Room 1 for further information. Or call Bella Halsted, 253-7422 (evenings) or 545-2803-0465 (daytime).

A three-credit course called Teaching of Writing is being offered to undergraduates who are interested in teaching Southwest Writing Colloqs this semester. The course combines workshops in teaching techniques and teaching colloqs (small groups) once a week for eight weeks. # Skiers race at Roundtop

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

The UMass ski teams are off to a good start with an equally promising season ahead of them as well, according to ski coach Bill McConnell. Both the men's and women's teams won their meets last weekend at the Dartmouth skiway, and this weekend they will be traveling to Roundtop Mt. in Plymouth Vermont.

The Minutemen and women will be the hosts of the slalom competition on Saturday and the giant slalom race Sunday. The races will take place on the Saltash trail under the chairlift, with the women competing first.

This weekend the women's team will be racing against the same competitors as always, comprising the Women's Inter-College Ski Conference (WISC). WISC consists of teams from Boston College, UConn, Smith College, UMass, and Merrimac. There are eight women on the team and five of them race each week with the best three counting in the competition. McConnell describes the UMass team as "very strong", the three strongest members being, Nancy Haydon, and Co-captains Cathy Donovan and Kathy Shimmick. If the Minutewomen do as well as they have been doing since pre-season warmups, McConnell believes they have an excellent chance for another victory this weekend.

The men's ski team will compete on the same trail as the women, against the five other colleges in the New England Inter-College Ski Conference. In addition to UMass, this league is comprised of teams from UConn, Boston College, Northeastern, Amherst College, and Plymouth (N.H.) State College.

Northeastern and Plymouth State are the two strongest teams, says McConnell, and the men's league teams in general are stronger than those racing against the women. This makes the competition more difficult even though UMass is a strong team. McConnell named several excellent team members, the most outstanding being Dale Maynard, Bob Grout and Scott Prindle.

McConnell expects the men's meet to be very close. The team won last week, he says, "but not by a comfortable margin." The main strong point of the team is its depth — all the team members have a lot of talent, says McConnell, not just five or six. McConnell hopes to play up this aspect in the competitions ahead.

Swim meets

The UMass women's swim team will be traveling to Springfield College tomorrow for an 11:00 meet. Although the meet won't be an easy victory for UMass, one highlight should come in the 400 yard individual medley, when Deb Schwartz takes off the blocks in hopes of setting her fourth individual school record.

The men's swim team will also be on the road tomorrow, as they head to Kingston for a 7:00 meet against the University of Rhode Island.

Both teams are coming off impressive victories Wednesday night, which brought their records up to 6-5-1 and 3-1 respectively.

Icemen face Warriors

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

"Sometimes you win, sometimes you lose," is a song that Carole King sings and a tune the UMass Minutemen hockey team has been singing during the current 1977-78 season.

Lately, the icemen have been singing their own song called "win all the time." The Minutemen have grabbed 9 out of a possible 12 points in their last six games, including a brilliant 3-2 upset victory Tuesday night over the Crusaders of Holy Cross at the always tough Hart Center in Worcester.

The Minutemen will face their stiffest test of the season this weekend as they encounter the powerful 11-2 Warriors of Merrimack tonight and the pesky 4-10 Chargers of New Haven tomorrow night at Orr rink.

The Merrimack game at 8 tonight promises to be a beauty. An established powerhouse versus a Cinderella team. In fact, the only loss in the UMies six game streak came on December 12 at Merrimack. The Minutemen battled hard for two periods, but succumbed to the experienced Warriors in the third period and lost 4-1.

The Minutemen will have their chance at revenge tonight.

The Minutemen's style all year has been physical because it Canniff's words "you've got to take the man off the puck."

"When we play our game (physical game), it's our strong suit. We can't get caught standing around, otherwise we'll get burnt," he said.

The Minutemen are coming into tonight's battle slightly hurt as Lincoln Flagg is nursing a back ailment, Don Murphy, who leads the team in scoring with 14 points (7 goals, 7 assists), has a slight groin pull, and John Riley is having trouble putting pressure on one of his legs.

The Merrimack College Warriors, who are coached by Thom Lawler, have an awesome 11-2 Division II record and 12-5-1 overall record.

The Warriors are paced by 1976-77 rookie of the year, Jim Toomey, who has posed 8 goals, 15 assists for 23 points in 1977-78 season. Following Toomey in the scoring parade are forwards Murray Scudder, 6-10-16, Greg Walker 6-10-16, Randy Curran 5-12-17, the coach's son — Tom Lawler 6-8-14 and Brian Bullock 4-10-14.

Canniff adds, "They (Merrimack) have two good goaltenders in Gilles Moffet and Jim DeSimone. DeSimone played against us last time."

Will the Warriors try anything different against a vastly improved Minutemen six?

"We never try to concentrate on the other team, it doesn't matter in hockey," said Lawler.

"What works is — improvision. You have certain guidelines you follow and evaluate what you're doing, but you don't change your game to play another team," Lawler added.

After tonight's encounter with Merrimack, the Minutemen take on the University of New Haven tomorrow night, also at Orr rink.

The Chargers have 17 returning letter men from a team that finished 16-6-2 last year (7-6-2 in Division II).

Leading the Stephen Lane coached Chargers, are forwards George Demello, Thom Dillon, Matt Dryoff and James Leach, no relation to Reggie, who will all pose threats to UMass goalie John Riley Saturday nite.

Gymmen visit Syracuse

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team travels to Syracuse this Saturday to take on probably the strongest team Syracuse has ever produced. As it has been in the past, Syracuse was never considered much of a threat to the overpowering gymmen. But times have changed, with the dilution of men's gymnastics at UMass and the rebuilding of gymnastics at other universities, the past underdogs now hold the upperhand.

Coach Swetman is sending his strongest lineup to Syracuse and is fairly optimistic about the outcome of the meet. On floor senior John Forshay will be leading the gymmen, and with the return of all-arounder Bob Donahue, UMass should take the advantage after the first event.

Pommel horse will most likely be the determining factor in who shall be the ultimate victor of the contest. Co-captain Dave Kulakoff leads the gymmen with either freshman Tim Berry or sophomore Pete Moynihan grabbing the other specialist position. While the still rings event will be anchored by freshman Dave Fellemen.

Long horse vaulting, the strongest event for the gymmen, will have senior John Forshay and freshman Bob Lamb leading the way. And on the parallel bars, Dave Kulakoff and John Nelson will be the specialists.

Horizontal bar, the last but the most dynamic of all the events, will have Tommy Thompson holding down the last chance for a UMass victory. UMass definitely has their backs against the wall in probably the most important meet of this semester.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3 — Born today, you have a great affection for people, and can truly say that you have never met a person you didn't like. You believe in the need of people for each other and in the power of that need fulfilled. You believe that affection, warmth, and close association can improve any situation, and cause ill circumstances to disappear or fair circumstances to remain forever. You believe in the power of love, and will do all you can to further it.

Although you tend to indulge children completely, you are aware of your responsibility toward those younger than you. You believe it your duty to share experiences with them, to warn of difficulties to come and to steer them clear. You enjoy friendships immensely, but are concerned about being unfairly friendly with one and not another. You see unfairness in yourself quickly and to make what amends you can.

You are patient, yet will not wait unreasonably for one who is capable. You will patiently encourage the slow, injured, or sick, but you will not tolerate the lazy. You understand fears about proposed activities, but you know that fears must be overcome for progress to be made. Thus, what to some seems intolerance is the determined application of very good sense.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Manifest your love for others in many ways. Most important, show understanding.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – Show parental affection today, or you may put both feet into your mouth.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – A discordant union of forces doesn't help to achieve the condition you wish at home. Work fares better.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – Express your lighter side early today, or you may put another off.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Consider understanding you recently received; turnabout is more important than fair play.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Bring a new association in line with your old ones to profit by it as much as by the others.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Consider the physical qualities of your new atmosphere. You may be longing for old times.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – Companionship is essential in learning to get along. Relationships take a turn for the better.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – Matters recently shelved are part of the daily routine again. Deliver on a promise late today.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – Unless your values blend with another's, cease trying to build the relationship.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) – Instability may make today difficult for the young. Parenthood may frighten as well as please.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Unreasonable jealousy may be about to spoil a relationship. Curb your envy, especially at evening.

Grapplers hit the road for weekend tri-match

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team will hit the road this weekend as the Minutemen engage in a tri-meet at Mass Maritime Academy. Besides the host team, UMass will also do battle with Montclair State.

Although Mass Maritime holds down a higher New England ranking than the Minutemen, the Buccaneers may find that UMass is a lot better team than its 4-10 record might indicate.

"I think that they're one of the most under rated wrestling schools in New England," said Maritime coach Pete Hexter yesterday. "I understand they'll be starting a lot of freshmen, and we will be starting at least five freshmen, too. It's going to be a good meet."

On the other side of the ledger, Minutemen coach Dave Amato feels his team has arrived.

"My team was just fantastic against (second New England ranked) Southern Connecticut," said the coach. "We almost pulled it off, but the important thing now is that I think we can compete with any school in New England."

Amato will take his usual lineup to the Maritime meet, but he will switch off in his two lighter weight classes, with Tony Perry going at 118 pounds and Dana Rasmussen competing in the 126 pound class.

Co-captain Larry Otsuka will wrestle at 134 pounds.

"Larry's been doing just fine," beamed Amato. "He saved us against Union College with a big pin and he doesn't usually do that very much, despite his fantastic record."

Amato's latest concern has been at 142 pounds, where Charley Rigoglioso has been injured and Mike Carroll has had difficulty making weight. Rigoglioso was in danger of having to forfeit his most recent match (against SoConn.) but was able to finish the bout.

"He'll be ready to wrestle on Saturday," said Amato. "I also feel confident that Carroll will be down to weight."

Co-captain Timmy Fallon, who has been on a hot streak himself lately, will wrestle at 150 pounds. In the 158 pound weight class, Monty Payette will wrestle, but Amato will also take Steve McLarney on the trip.

"McLarney has been hurt," explained Amato. "If he feels up to it then I'll use him in one of the meets."

Rounding out the UMass lineup, Fred Rheault will wrestle at 167 pounds, Bob Radiwitz at 177 pounds, Bob Clark at 190 pounds, and John Allen will be the heavyweight.

WRESTLING NOTES — In late action Wednesday night, the Minutemen won their fourth meet of the year 29-24 over Union College. John Allen won the meet for UMass with a superior decision in the unlimited (heavyweight) division. Larry Otsuka (134 pounds), Tim Fallon (150 pounds), and Mike Mitrowski (158 pounds) also won matches. ... Although a Division Three college, Montclair State will be giving UMass excellent competition on Saturday. They boast national champions at 134 and 142 pounds ...

The next UMass home meet will be next Wednesday night against New Hampshire ...

The UMass track team will be in action this weekend as it travels to New Hampshire to take on the Wildcats in a dual meet. Pole vaulter Ted Power is injured and will not compete, though. (Staff photo by Dave Rodman)

OT kills hoopwomen

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE - Ouch. That hurts.

Sue Peters tied the score on a last-second alley-oop jump shot, but Providence College went on to outscore the UMass women's basketball team, 5-4, in overtime last night to grab a 56-55 win at Alumni Hall.

The Minutewomen trailed the Lady Friars, 51-49, with one second left on the 30-second clock and just five second left in the game, when Peters took an inbounds pass from LuAnn Fletcher in the lane and in one motion threw the ball in the basket while suspended in mid-air.

But the sophomore guard's heroics went for naught, as Mary Ann McCoy and Mel Buchanen put in hoops and Lynn Sheedy hit a free throw in overtime to give Providence the win.

Actually, UMass had two chances to win it after Cathy Harrington hit a jump shot in the lane with 1:54 left in OT to cut the score to 56-55. But Harrington missed two free throws with 51 seconds left, and after Sheedy failed to connect on two charity tosses with 14 seconds to play, the Minutewomen could not manage to get a final shot off.

Earlier in overtime, the score was 53-53 following baskets by McCoy and Peters. Buchanen then scored on a driving jumper and Sheedy sand a foul shot to give the Lady Friars a 56-53 lead.

UMass had to battle back from a 10-point deficit to come that close to a win. After Providence's Paulette Hassett opened the second half with a hoop, the Minutewomen trailed, 29-19. But UMass then scored 11 straight points — seven by Peters — to grab a 30-29 lead with 16:38 left as the Minutewomen's pressure defense resulted in Lady Friar turnovers.

From there, the lead exchanged hands three times and the score was tied twice before Peters' basket.

UMass, now 11-15 , was able to make just 25 percent of its field goal attempts in the first half and would up trailing, 27-19, at the break. The Minutewomen could sink only eight baskets as they had trouble penetrating the Lady Friars' 2-3 zone.

UMass went almost five minutes into the game without a hoop until Mary Halleran (eight points and nice hustle) hit a shot from long range.

Peters had 20 points and eight rebounds, while Cheryl Carey added 11 points and 14 boards. Maura Supinski had 10 rebounds and Harrington grabbed nine. UMass outrebounded Providence, 47-39, but hit only 33 percent of its shots to the Lady Friars' 39 percent. The Minutewomen also had only seven of 15 free throws.

Sheedy scored 17 points and McCoy had 16 to lead providence, now 9-3.

Gymwomen host Michigan

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

This Sunday afternoon, the Curry Hicks Cage will not only be the site of an exciting women's gymnastic meet but it will also host a homecomeing celebration. The entrance of the Michigan State team will also mark the return of Michael Kasavana. Kasavana is the MSU coach but he is also a UMass alumnus, former member of the UMass men's gymnastic team and former women's assistant coach.

Joining Kasavana will be alumni former UMass gymnast Pam Steckroat, who now competes for Michigan State, former UMass gymnasts Betsy East, Alica Goode, Gail McCarthy and UMass All-Americans Anne Vexler and Jeannie Burger.

In addition to the homecoming festivities will be a battle of nationally ranked gymnastics teams. In recent coaches polls Michigan State was ranked ninth while UMass was ranked seventh. The coaches award their ranks on the basis of team scores earned this season.

Coach Virginia Evans expects the meet to be close but went on to add, "I think our overall strength is better. Our all around performers are capable of higher scores which should help give us the edge."

Injuries still plague the gymwomen but Sunday's meet will see All-American Stephanie Jones return to all four events. Jones was scratched from the floor exercise last week against Cornell due to a rib ailment. Diane Laurenson and Karen Celemente are still out of the line up with injuries.

The balance beam was the gymwomen's major weakness against Cornell and Evans said, "I'm looking for us to get our acts together on the beam, we need people to come through on that event this week". Julie Myers, Laurie Kanpp, Karen Hemberger, Coleen Thorton, Stephanie Jones and Susan Cantwell will be competing on the beam against MSU. Cantwell and Knapp were the only gymwomen to stay on the beam against Cornell.

Evans is also looking for stronger performances on the floor this week. "We're really going to have to be stronger in the second half of the meet if we want to beat Michigan State", said Evans. Debbie Smith, Thorton, Myers, Hemberger, Jones and Cantwell are scheduled to work the floor on Sunday.

Vaulting for UMass will Debbie Law, Kim Whitelaw, a new face working her way up in the ranks, Thorton, Jones, Cantwell and Hemberger. Vaulting is consistently the gymwomen's strongest event and Evans expects continued strength in the event.

On the bars will be Jean Anderson, Thorton, Law, Cantwell Hemberger and Jones. Hemberger and Jones performed well against Cornell receiving scores of 9.0 and 9.05 respectively but Evans is hoping for even stronger performances against MSU. "We have the upper edge against Michigan State but we've got to hit", concluded Evans.

Claiborne makes key plays

E-Man slays 'saders at buzzer

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

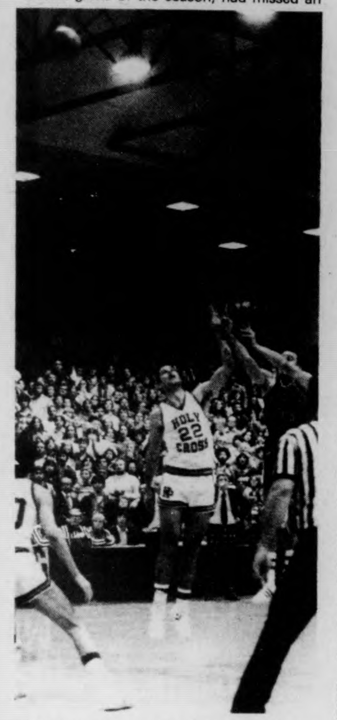
WORCESTER — Eric Williams didn't wait for the party to come to him, he brought the party to the Hart Center here last night.

Williams celebrated his 21st birthday one day late by hitting a miraculous 30 foot desperation shot at the buzzer to guide the UMass basketball team to a heartstopping 77-76 upset victory over Holy Cross before more than 4,000 stunned fans.

The senior forward, who started only his second game of the season, had missed an opportunity to tie the contest at 76 with seconds remaining when his second of two free throws rolled off the rim.



Everyone's on their feet and all eyes are on the ball (upper left) as Eric William's (33) game winner is on the way.

However, Alex Eldridge snuck underneath to deflect the missed shot off an unsuspecting Crusader giving the Minutemen possession with six seconds remaining. It appeared UMass had squandered its chance to pull the game out when on the ensuing inbounds play, Eldridge was trapped in the corner and forced to throw a blind pass into the awaiting arms of alert Crusader Garry Witts.

But, Derick Claiborne gave UMass yet one last seemingly hopeless chance by forcing a jump ball with three seconds remaining. Williams then battled Mike Vicens for the loose ball off the tap and heaved in his game winning hoop.

It felt good when I let it go, explained the ecstatic Williams after the game. "Luck, that's all it was though, just luck. Hey, I'm not the shooter on this team — that shot was way out of my range."

"When the shot went up," said a drained and somewhat hoarse UMass coach Jack Leaman, "I thought the ball had a nice rotation to it, and then I saw it go in. Eric just played a super game."

"I did it once before in high school," said Williams. But nothing can compare to this."

"Williams started the game," said Leaman, "because we wanted to add a little more quickness and aggressiveness. "We put him specifically in the game to guard Vicens," said Leaman.

Williams responded to the starting role by scoring 18 points on seven for 12 shooting, and limiting the dangerous Vicens to just 12 points.

"The other time I started I completely whacked up at UConn. I think I only scored two points and didn't even get a rebound. I've got to play with a lot of enthusiasm and aggressiveness but I just didn't feel good that night," said Williams who is recovering from knee problems.

The last second heroics of Williams was able to come about because of two key plays by Eldridge and Claiborne. Eldridge's alert play after William's missed free throw gave the Minutemen their second chance.

"The play of the game," said Leaman, "was Alex getting that ball. It was a great hustling play."

After Eldridge's play UMass called time out to set up an inbounds play.

"We called the four play," explained captain Derick Claiborne. "The ball goes to Boob in the corner and he was looking for Mark (Haymore) underneath. When I saw him get trapped I just started to move underneath towards him."

And what about his play to set up the jump ball?

"I was surprised the ref didn't call a foul," said Claiborne. "I'm just happy he called the jump ball. The Lord was with us this time."

The Minutemen will face West Virginia University tomorrow night at the Cage at 7:30.

UMass — Haymore 9-0-18; Pyatt 5-2-12; Kohlhaas 1-0-2; Claiborne 6-0-12; Eldridge 6-3-15; Williams 7-4-18; Totals 39-9-77.

Holy Cross — Potter 9-2-20; Vicens 6-0-12; Perry 11-6-28; Witts 4-0-8; Kane 2-0-4; O'Connor 2-0-4; Totals 34-8-76.

"Lady Luck" fell into the lap of the Minutemen last night and was it ever so sweet.

With exactly 0:00 time remaining on the time clock, junior Eric Williams swished in a 30 ft. bomb and UMass completely upset Holy Cross before 4,000 speechless fans at the Hart Recreation Center.

UMass, trailing 76-75 with three seconds remaining, faced off against Holy Cross in a jump ball. Derick Claiborne and Holy Cross's Garry Witts battled for the jump. The ball deflected to Williams who with Crusader Mike Vicens all over him, arched the ball towards the basket.

"The ball had good rotation," said Williams and I knew it had a chance."

There was no doubt about the shot as it cleanly hit the strings and the Crusaders, now 15-4, were defeated at home for only the fourth time.

"A super win, a sweet one," said Claiborne. "It took us four years to do it, and it couldn't come at a better time."

UMass had to overcome impossible odds to it. Behind at halftime 42-37, and down by four, 76-72, with 39 seconds to go, UMass depended on the heroics of the quintet of Williams, Eldridge, Claiborne, Mark Haymore, and Mike Pyatt.

Williams, starting his second game of his career, started the comeback as he made two crucial free throws, with every single person in the Hart Center howling. The score was then 76-74, with .32 remaining on the clock.

Williams, immediately fouled Crusader Vicens, who had a 1 and 1 at the foul line. He missed the first shot but Holy Cross's Chris Potter rebounded. As he attempted to pass off, UMass' Claiborne stole the ball and fed it to Williams who was fouled going up for the shot.

Williams hit one fouls shot to pull UMass within one point with eight seconds left. But he missed the second free throw and Holy Cross rebounded. However, Eldridge got underneath knocked the ball off an unidentified Crusader, giving UMass control of the ball with six seconds left.

Following a timeout, Eldridge was trapped in the corner, and threw a blind pass into the hands of Crusader guard Garry Witts. But Claiborne pulled a great defensive play by tying up Witts for a jump ball. Witts then controlled the jump ball but to Williams, which set up his shot for the storybook ending.

It was absolutely the best all-around game by UMass this year. Leaman got double figures from each of his starting five which included a 18 point, 7-12 performance from Williams, Haymore 18, Eldridge 15 and Pyatt and Claiborne 12 each.

Holy Cross guard Ronie Perry was the games leading scorer with 28 while Crusader forward Chris Potter added 20.

Down by seven with 18:19 in second half, Pyatt and Claiborne heated up scoring three long range jumpers apiece as UMass pulled within one 52-51 with 13:36 remaining. They went ahead 56-54 on an Eldridge fast break layup, but Perry tied the game on a dramatic basket which saw him score over his 1,000 pt. in his two year Holy Cross career.

Potter, scoring on pick and rolls, and drives to the basket, gave Holy Cross a 60-56 lead with ten minutes remaining before Pyatt and Claiborne brought the Minutemen within two. But Potter and John O'Connor hurt UMass again with driving layups and Jack Leaman saw his team down by six with 5:48 left.

Minutemen forward Len Kohlhaas then hit his only jumper all night. Claiborne fed Eldridge on a 2 on 1 fast break following a steal; Mike Pyatt hit a jumper; and an Eldridge layup following a Haymore blocked shot on Perry saw UMass trailing by only two with 1:25 left.

Groundhog's desire

In a world where people are constantly complaining about being stereotyped, it is truly a gross inequity that animal as revered as the groundhog — a noble beast which has long basked in the glory of its own "day" — should have to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous collective grouping. That the groundhog should be with the nation's weather is as preposterous a match as the Ali-Spinks fight.

The truth is, not all groundhogs are terrible concerned with the weather. Some of the furry little critters do have other interest areas. So, in keeping with the Equal Time Amendment, the Fairness Doctrine, and my deadline, I have trekked to the wilds of North Amherst, where I cornered one of the rodent-like fauna coming out of Augie's with a copy of Sporting News under his arm.

"Hi there! Are you a groundhog?"

"No, I'm a mutant gerbil. What do you want?"

"I'd like to know if ... "

"You'd like to know if I saw my shadow yesterday, right? You want to find out whether or not there'll be six more weeks of winter. Well let me tell you this, chump, I'm sick of meterology, there's no future in it. I wanna be a sportscaster.

Now there's a glamour job. Just look at all the big names: Curt Gowdy, Jim McKay, Bob Uecker ... "

"Do you want to do play-by-play or color?"

"Neither. I'm more suited to a job like Jimmy the Greek's. You gotta understand, seeing my shadows isn't my only means of prognostication. I also read tea leaves, gaze into chrystal balls and cater seances."

"Do tell."

"With a divining rod I can foretell a trade of waterboys."

"Great! Mind if I ask for a few predictions?"

"Shoot."

"Will the Celtics make the playoffs?"

"Yes, definitely. Section E Row 7, seats five through 16."

"Will Vida Blue be wearing an Oakland A's uniform next year?"

"No. Charlie Finley will sell Blue for 2.2 million dollars."

"How can say you that? Finley has been trying to sell Blue's contract for two years, and every time he does, Bowie Kuhn blocks the deal in the interest of baseball. Who's going to be able to get away with the purchase?"

"Bowie Kuhn."

"The commissioner? How can the commissioner of baseball use Vida Blue?"

"He can't, but he's got to hire him. Affirmative action, y'know. Right now there's not a single lefthanded power pitcher in the commissioner's office."

"Scandalous. What else can we look forward to?"

"Well, a variation of volleyball will become the nation's number one sport within five years."

"I think you've gone a bit too far ... "

"No, really. The sport will fulfill our country's growing need for violence in sports."

"I realize spiking can be painful for the defender, but I'd hardly call getting hit with a volleyball violent."

"The variation is going to be played with a hockey puck."

"Oh."

"No net either."

"At least tell me the Bruins have a change to regain the coveted Stanley Cup."

"Sorry. My Ouija Board shows a definite connection between the Bruins playoff chances and the roof of the Hartford Civic Center."

"Total collapse?"

"Yep. The Red Sox are in trouble too. Torrez is a streaky kind of pitcher, Tiant is over the hill, Drago is a troublemaker, Hobson is due for his "sophomore jinx', Rick Wise is a twerp and Don Zimmer is fat."

"You heretic. You're talking about the Red Sox now, y'know. The Red Sox!"

"I know. I'm a Yankee fan."

"Go crawl back into your hole."

Dorothy Hamill

by Steve K. Walz

Dateline—Kitzbuehl, Austria—Dorothy Hamill, a 19-year-old American figureskater captured the 1976 Winter Olympic Gold medal in figureskating after flawlessly performing before a packed house in the Stadthalle. Miss Hamill overcame stiff opposition from the East German and Russian skaters as her congenial manner made her an instant favorite with the crowd. With tears off joy welling in her eyes Miss Hamill accepted the gold medal as she watched the American flag being hoisted while the Star Spangled Banner blared in the background.

Newspapers, radio and television stations across the United States reveled at Miss Hamill's accomplishments. The U.S. Winter Olympic team had little else to smile about after being humiliated by superior teams from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

After the initial commotion over Miss Hamill's victory subsided, she catapulted herself bacck into the limelight when she accepted a lucrative offer from the Ice Capades—that veritable group of entertainers that log thousands of miles every year across the United States and Canada.

Lifestyle

One would think that the whirling dervish of skating "has it made" after capturing the Olympic gold medal, 37 assorted trophies and being named the 1977 Women Sports Magazine woman of the year. Her six-figure contract with the Ice Capadess and her 'Short and Sassy' promotion for Clairol would also attest to this fact but Hamill claims it isn't all that easy.

"It's really tough living out of a suitcase. I'm in a different city every week and I'm doing the same numbers every night. Sometimes it gets very difficult, especially after doing an evening show and having to get up for an 11 A.M. show the next day. The only thing that keeps me going is the audience," said Miss Hamill. Dorothy's rigorous schedule of practicing and performing every day has led to hospitalization for treatment of an ulcer. Though she claims that she is now physically fit, it is obvious that Miss Hamill is a very tired individual. "I really don't have time to do much except taking a bath and plopping into bed after a performance," she added.

But what about dating, Dorothy? "I'm not ready to get married yet and at the present time I don't really have a boyfriend."

When Hamill does have some spare time, she tries to get away from it all. "I like to get as far away from my business people and skating as possible and maybe go swimming and lay in the sun listening to music."

"It's becoming impossible to compete against the Eastern Europeans . . ."

Cloudy Future

Despite the pratfalls that came with her professional skating career, Miss Hamill is quite content. But, the Olympic champion bristles when someone asks if she sees a bright future on the horizon for the United States Olympic skating team. "It's becoming impossible to compete against the Eastern Europeans. They have everything—cars, apartments and as long as they do well they get the best of everything. They eat together, sleep together, vacation and train together and when they start doing things not-so-well, their luxuries are taken away from them. Although I don't think it's the right way of doing things, they are quite successful."

"Financially our skaters are in an unfortunate position. The Clairol people are trying to help amateur skaters who are coming up but the U.S. Figureskating Association has $25,000 (from Clairol) and they haven't done anything with it. I'm very upset with them and I'm tempted to tell Clairol to take the money and give it to some other sports fund. It's unfortunate because if you look at the difference between East German, Russian and American skaters, the Americans are competing because they love it and you can see the freedom in their skating. The Russians and East Germans are machine-like skaters. They do it because they have to do it and sometimes that makes the difference in winning." And, Miss Hamill does not forsee any change in the situation. "The U.S. Figureskating Association is not really interested in helping the kids. If we gave the money to individual skaters the USFSA would still take 25% and all that pays for is for the judges to go first class. Clairol is willing to give more money if the USFSA would use it..."

Miss Hamill fully sympathizes with the Olympic skater. She is acutely aware of the loneliness and devotion it takes to become a champion. "When I was an amateur I practiced eight hours a day, every day, and nobody really cared what I did or not. I was training for one peak performance a year—the World Championships. I had my ups and downs that nobody saw," said a perturbed Hamill. Yet, she holds a special place in her heart for that one fleeting moment of glory when she skated her way to the Olympic championship. "Meeting President Ford was perhaps my greatest thrill but that special moment on the ice at the Olympics was so unbelievable. That happened all too fast."

Epilogue

What does the future hold for the skating superstar? "I'll probably pick up my option year on the Ice Capades contract for next year and there are TV specials, but when I'm finished with all of that I'd like to settle down and teach handicapped children how to ice skate," smiled Miss Hamill. Does her family approve? "As long as they see I'm happy, they're happy."

Unlike many other superstars who tend to be 'cold' people, Miss Hamill is like a breath of fresh air. She is bouncy, inquisitive, philosophical and downright pretty. Unfortunately, her pro-skating career will end very soon. America needs more Dorothy Hamill's.

LAUGH-IN

Finalists will be presented in 'The First Annual Burbank Pet Show and Farrah Fawcett Look-Alike Contest' as Gore Vidal and Joan Rivers head a line-up of luminaries on the season's sixth 'Laugh-In' special Wednesday, Feb. 8 on NBC-TV.

Other personalities who will be popping in during the 'Laugh-In' gala are Henry Fonda, James Garner, Sen. Barry Goldwater (R.-Ariz.), Kareem-Abdul Jabbar, Rich Little, Roger Moore, Martin Mull, Ilie Nastase, Rodney Allen Rippy, Frank Sinatra, Gloria and Jimmy Stewart, Tina Turner and Flip Wilson.

Competitors in the pet show and look-alike contest, all approximating the Farrah Fawcett hair-do, include a mix of people plus a cow, a goat, a gorilla and a hamster.

Vidal (pictured with regular June Gable) takes an offbeat look at our political scene and also reports the news, along with Fonda and Senator Goldwater. Rivers takes on the cast members one at a time, quip-wise.

Other highlights include looks at nuclear energy, sex and violence and the followers of Rev. Moon.

WHAT REALLY HAPPENED TO THE CLASS OF '65

Vincent Van Patten (pictured), starring as Bret Harte High School's star basketball player, goes on to college where he gets caught stealing exams, an irony since the senior class considered him Most Likely to Succeed, in 'What Really Happened to the Class of '65' Thursday, Feb. 9 on NBC-TV.

Phil Demming Jr. (Van Patten) has everything going for him—including his bright and popular girl, Cheryl Johnstone (Kitty Ruth). They graduate and go to the same college, where Cheryl is a serious student while Phil concentrates on fraternities and basketball.

When his fraternity brothers force him into a tradition—stealing exams—he is caught robbing the files of Professor Harris (Paul Petersen), who considers Phil a good student.

Reps seek Tillson inquiry

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

A request made by two state representatives to conduct an investigation of the Tillson heating plant at UMass-Amherst has been called "politically motivated" by a member of the UMass Board of Trustees.

State Rep. Philip W. Johnston, D-Marshfield, and Andrew H. Card, R-Holbrook, said during an interview on Boston radio station WEEI yesterday the $10 million plant constructed under the supervision of the Bureau of Building Construction is totally unusable.

The Tillson plant operated only eight months before it broke down in 1974. The trustees last year voted to mothball the plant until it is needed in the future.

The investigation of the Tillson plant would be included in an overall investigation of the BBC sought by the two legislators.

Johnston last night told the Collegian he wants to know "why $10 million was spent on a heating plant that does not work."

Trustee Robert J. Spiller, chairman the trustee Building and Grounds Committee said the Tillson investigation was a "Johnny-come-lately notion". "All I can say is that Mr. Johnston has incredible hindsight," said Spiller.

"There may be some justice in investigating the BBC but in the case of the Tillson plant there is also political motivation." said Spiller.

The Tillson heating plant was proposed in 1969 when there was a projected need for a more extensive heating plant.

Another projected advantage of the Tillson plant was that it ran on oil. At that time oil seemed to be more economically feasible than coal, which the existing plant operated on.

Since then the original coal plant, which was built at the turn of the century, has been in operation.

The investigation of BBC began after two state senators were convicted on extortion charges for bribing a New York consulting firm which contracted with the BBC in the construction of UMass-Boston. Johnston and Card are asking for the establishment of a blue-ribbon committee to investigate the BBC.

Spiller said "the engineering problem was one issue, but what we are concerned with is satisfactory completion of projects started by the BBC. The problem is the inadequacy of a bureaucracy in getting a job done."

Rep. Card said he would expect Spiller to be adverse to further investigation of the Tillson plant. "He (Spiller) may feel that we are questioning his involvement," said Card. "The public has a right to know."

Card said he thought an investigation of Tillson "will primarily bring forth more information and might prevent such things in the future. I don't think there is any danger to looking at it (the Tillson plan) again."

Card said he was asking that the BBC be investigated for any corruption and mismanagement regarding state building contracts. "If the committee wants to look into any other building construction it can," said Card. "The Tillson plant could be one of those buildings.

No one from BBC could be reached last night for comment.

Automobile claims life of student

Funeral services will be held Wednesday morning in Braintree for Baker dormitory resident Scott C. Burgess who was killed early Saturday morning while crossing North Pleasant Street by the Morrill Science Center.

Twenty-three-year-old David Sukol, of 543 Puffton Village, is being arraigned this morning in Hampshire District Court on motor vehicle charges of speeding and driving to endanger in connection with the fatal accident.

Amherst police said the 19-year-old Burgess was struck by a car driven by Sukol while crossing North Pleasant Street. Burgess was pronounced dead at the scene by county medical examiner Donald Rogers.

Police said Burgess was crossing the street in a west to east direction and Sukol was driving north.

The accident is the first fatal pedestrian accident in Amherst since May 1974 and the first fatal automobile mishap in the town since February 1976, according to police.

Burgess, a sophomore, was a pre-veterinary major and was also on the dean's list here at UMass. He was a graduate of Braintree High School.

He leaves his parents, Bruce S. and Priscilla Hollander Burgess; paternal grandparents, Maynard S. and Lillian Lund Burgess; maternal grandparents, Albert and Aileen Halunen Hollander; and two brothers, Christopher and Derek.

Calling hours are tonight from 7-9 and tomorrow from 2-4 and 7-9 p.m. at the Mortimer N. Peck Funeral Chapel, 516 Washington St., Braintree. Funeral services are being held Wednesday morning at 11 at the All Soul's Church on Elm Street in Braintree. Burial is in Blue Hill Cemetery in Braintree.

In lieu of flowers, donations are being accepted, in memory of Scott C. Burgess, for the Angell Memorial Animal Hospital, 350 South Huntington Ave., in Jamaica Plain.

Health Center sponsors blood drive

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian during the next two weeks is sponsoring two one-day blood drives at the Public Health Center next to Morrill Science Center.

Donors can sign up for the drive at the Campus Center Information Desk on the Campus Center Concourse this week to donate blood either this Wednesday from 3-8 p.m. or next Wednesday from 2-8 p.m.

Donors should be at least 17 years old and younger than 66, unless otherwise permitted by parents or a personal physician. People who have suffered from hepatitis, jaundice, fainting spells or heart disease should not donate.

The Collegian last year sponsored two drives which collected 152 pints of blood for the Red Cross.

The UMass Blood Center has undergone scheduling reorganization and will have centers open in each residential area during the semester.

A center is open now through March 16 at the Hamden Commons in Southwest on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 2-9 p.m.

A center will then open in Thatcher Dormitory for the Northeast and Sylvan residential areas from March 28 through April 13. For the rest of the semester,a center will be open in Dickinson Dormitory in Orchard Hill.

A permanent blood donor center is being maintained at the Public Health Center for the semester.

A smiling student gives one of 1500 pints collected during the Collegian's once-a-semester blood drive last May. Sign up for this semester's drive will be today and tomorrow at the Campus Center Assistance Desk.

Loans haunt students

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

The federal government has begun to crack down on student loan defaulters.

Students can no longer avoid paying back their Guaranteed Student Loans and National Direct Student Loans, both federally-funded, by filing for bankruptcy. A provision of the 1976 Education Act imposes a five-year moratorium, beginning with a student's graduation, on the writing-off of student loans by claiming bankruptcy. The provision went into effect on Oct. 1.

In effect, this means that students no longer will be able to write off loans, since they must be paid back beginning nine months after the student finishes school.

In addition, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has created the Bureau of Student Financial Assistance.

The bureau was created under HEW's departmental reorganization last March to administer all federal grant and workstudy programs and all default-plagued student loan programs. The bureau is largely responsible for locating and notifying defaulters and collecting debts on federal student loans.

The bureau has no prosecutorial powers itself, but it will refer defaulters to the Justice Department and the HEW inspector general.

The bureau has another seemingly impossible task — that of restoring public confidence in the student loan programs. Congress must vote on the reauthorization of the loan programs by early 1979. Both programs would expire the following June 30 if not reauthorized, but schools need to know the status of the programs before that date so loans can be apportioned.

That gives the bureau a little over a year to fulfill the promise of the bureau's director, Leo L. Kornfeld, "to start the rate of default declining, and keep it that way."

The default rate for the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, a loan program administered through banks, has reached almost 13 percent. As a result of student loan defaulters, the government has lost over $800 million since 1965, a sum that is increasing by at least $100 million a year.

The bureau's main problem is finding the defaulters. When the bureau began what it called an "intensive campaign" last October to collect on loans that had been in default for four years or more, almost half of the 22,500 repayment notices were returned because of insufficient addresses. Some 50,000 persons have been in default for more than four years.

In all, only about 10 per cent of the notices sent out by the bureau received a response.

A final warning will be issued this month. Then the default records will be turned over to a private collection agency, which will try to collect the loans itself and then recommend legal action to be taken by HEW against the defaulters.

Kornfeld said the warning notices were the first ones to be sent out to this group of defaulters. "These people don't even remember they borrowed money in the first place," Kornfeld said in an interview.

Epitomizing the lost address problem was the Operation Cross-Check investigation HEW conducted in 1976, which turned up 316 defaulters on its own payroll. One of the defaulters is an official who earns more than $30,000 a year.

A special notice was sent out to 231 of the defaulters on in October. So far, only 49 responses have been received.

To remedy this problem of lost addresses, the bureau has begun a computer billing system that will automatically send out payment notices to defaulters.

Other measures to get the money back include setting specifications for "due diligence" in the making, servicing and collection of loans, insisting that lenders file default claims in a timely manner and establishing administrative and financial criteria for screening and limiting lender and institutional eligibility under the loan program.

Two recent regulations adopted by the division of education deal directly with students. A requirement for lender interviews could cause some problems at large institutions that act as lenders. Gerald F. Scanlon, director of financial aid at UMass, said he was confused about the regulation.

"Obviously, individual meaningful interviews will be impossible. Maybe we can conduct group interviews," he said.

Another regulation would give students information about dropout rates and the full cost of attending school; this will be more of a problem for smaller schools. While most large schools have computer systems to keep up to date information on dropout rates, smaller schools often do not compile such data.

The dropout information in intended to give students an early warning about schools from which few students have been graduated, but some schools have complained that students could misconstrue the information, according to Stephen Blair, a financial officer in the bureau.

Gluckstern still a candidate for presidency

Former UMass Provost Robert L. Gluckstern is apparently still among those being considered to succeed Robert C. Wood as University president, despite a weekend report saying otherwise.

The Daily Hampshire Gazette Saturday quoted a source close to the UMass Board of Trustees Presidential Search Committee who said Gluckstern is no longer among those being considered by the committee.

Search Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer yesterday told the Collegian that the list of people being considered has not changed since the last meeting in January. At that time, the Collegian had learned that Gluckstern was among 25 people the committee was considering for president.

The committee next meets Feb. 20, and its target date for recommending names to the other trustees is early April.

Gluckstern, now the chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park, has declined to comment about the reports.

Officials negotiate bus funding

Administration and student government officials will negotiate tomorrow over conflicting proposals for funding the UMass bus service.

There are three proposals to fund the buses for the fiscal year starting in July. The most recent plan calls for a fee to be added to student bills. This fee would pay for 85 per cent of bus expenses. The remaining 15 per cent would come from the parking office. Student government members claim that this plan would deny students any control over the bus system.

Administration officials presented an earlier plan for an 85-15 split of expenses. The 85 per cent would come from the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF). The remaining 15 per cent would come from parking office funds. Student Government leaders reject this plan. They claim student payment of parking fees would contribute to the parking office's share. Administration members have rejected this argument.

Cereal bugged in Franklin D.C.

When freshman Eric Delerousso poured his Raisin Bran at Franklin Dining Commons Saturday morning he found more than just two scoops of raisins. Delerousso also found a number of small insects crawling in his bowl.

Dining Commons Assistant Manager Vic Keedy yesterday said insects were found in one box and he promptly removed all the Raisin Bran and left a note for the Food Service purchasing agent in Worcester Dining Commons advising him of the situation.

"Sometimes these things are practical jokes," said Keedy.

DNA group to meet with Selectmen

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

The emotion-charged ethical, social and philosophical issue of recombinant DNA research continues on the UMass campus and at the Amherst Selectmen's meeting tonight.

Items on the agenda include proposed biohazards committees for both UMass and Amherst College, as well as discussion of the procedures for the newly-formed study group charged to investigate the DNA issue.

Prof. Arthur Quinton, of the UMass Physics Dept., said the purpose of the group, appointed by the October special Town Meeting, is to "study and disseminate information on DNA, the safety and public health aspects, and the social and ethical implications of this research."

"We are concentrating on familiarizing ourselves with the issue of recombinant DNA research. Our target is to report our findings to the May first Amherst Town Meeting, but whether we will make suggestions or recommendations at that time remains to e seen," he added.

Recombinant DNA research is the process by which genes of organisms that do not combine together in nature are combined in a laboratory situation. This research promises enormous benefits including news and faster ways of producing antibiotics and great advancements in cancer research.

However, since the organisms used for this research (a bacterium known as E. coli) are found in the human intestine, a growing number of individuals fear the creation of an organism that would threaten the population and the environment. The issue of recombinant DNA research appears to revolve around the question of whether or not the benefits from splitting genes outseighs the possible dangers.

Several years ago, genetic scientists called the attention of the federal government to the questions of DNA research. The geneticists voluntarily shelved recombinant DNA research until the National Institute of Health (NIH) studied the issue and set up guidelines. Although these regulations are mandatory only for those researchers funded by federal grants, there are currently bills before both houses of Congress to make the guidelines mandatory for all research of this nature.

The NIH guidelines require that a genetically-weakened strain of E. coli be used in order that the mutant gene cannot survive outside of a laboratory environment. In effect, if the host is to receive a recombinant DNA molecule, it is said to be safe since it can survive only under laboratory conditions.

Other regulations state that research labs must be equipped with extremely safe sterilization processes. The use of certain organisms known to produce cancer in animals is prohibited.

In addition, any qualified scientist who wishes to do recombinant DNA research must have his proposal reviewed by a biohazards Committee. Proposals for such a group have been made by both Amherst College and UMass campuses.

Leaders agree to broaden talks in Middle East

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat agreed Sunday to try to broaden participation in the Middle East peace negotiations, but there was no consensus on how the stalled political talks between Egypt and Israel can be resumed.

Sadat indicated the United States must continue to act as an intermediary before face-to-face political talks between the Israeli and Egyptian foreign ministers can start again.

Sadat accused Israel of taking the peace talks "in the wrong direction" after his dramatic trip to Jerusalem in November.

Carter and Sadat returned to the White House by helicopter at 4:30 p.m. EST from their two days of talks at Camp David in Maryland. Carter was more positive.

"We are in complete accord to work without ceasing for peace in the Middle East," he told waiting reporters on the south lawn.

Sadat had no words to add to that immediately, but 90 minutes later at Blair House he told NBC News "the Palestinian problem remains.... the core and the crux of the Middle East problems."

His talks at Camp David with Carter, Sadat said, served as "a re-evaluation of the difficulties that we faced."

Carter

Sadat told NBC's David Brinkley the Israelis were trying to "tread on our sovereignty" by maintaining and fortifying settlements in the occupied territory and seeking a demilitarized Sinai once it reverts to Egyptian control.

According to the White House statement on the summit, the two leaders "found themselves in accord that efforts should remain focused on creating conditions which are conducive to the achievement of tangible results and the broadening of negotiations."

Sadat

That was an apparent reference in attempts to have Jordan's King Hussein or his representatives join in the peace talks.

The White House said the two presidents "will further refine their views in the exchanges... over the next few days." The statement also indicated Carter resisted any efforts Sadat might have applied to convince the United States to pressure the Israelis into new compromises.

"President Carter took the occasion of these talks to explain in detail how the United States envisages its role and responsibilities in the peace process as a friend of both sides with a strong interest in peace and stability in the region" the statement said.

"As a result of their extensive talks, President Carter feels that he has a better understanding of President Sadat's concerns about the need for the peace process to move forward without delay" the White House said.

"President Carter reaffirmed the commitment of the United States to play an active role in the search for peace and to redouble its efforts to ensure that progress is made in the weeks ahead."

The talks were the longest Carter has held with a foreign leader since taking office. He and Sadat are scheduled to meet again Wednesday before the Egyptian leader leaves the United States.

The Carter statement, which ran 700 words, did not give details on any other agreements that may have been reached in the president's three sessions with Sadat during the weekend.

While discussions at the mountaintop retreat were in progress Saturday, American officials said the least they expected from the summit was agreement on an early resumption of the foreign minister's talk. It didn't happen.

Asked in the NBC interview if Egypt would now go back to those political committee talks, Sadat said, "First Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton will shuttle between Egypt and Israel so that the gap will be bridged."

Sadat made it clear during the interview such political talks would not be resumed without some further negotiations conducted through Atherton. The White House said Atherton will return to the Middle East "in the near future" to continue working as mediator.

On another matter, Sadat said, "I put my demands for American arms to the president... I think he understands what is behind my demands."

American officials said over the weekend the United States has agreed in principle to sell Egypt some fighter aircraft for the first time, although the numbers and the method of approaching Congress still must be worked out.

Town delays action on recommendations

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

Committee recommendations for road and building improvements in North Amherst face "at least a year" of further study before being acted on by the town, local officials said last night.

The North Amherst Center Committee's report is the final product of a year-long study of traffic and parking problems, overcrowding in the North Amherst Library and possible uses for the old North Amherst School.

Among the committee's recommendations is a request that the southern end of Sunderland Road be cut off and turned into Montague Road. According to the report, this would help streamline traffic into the intersection of North Pleasant Street with Pine and Meadow Streets.

The committee also recommended to move the library from its present position and placed next to the school and that the school be renovated and used for public services.

The committee's recommendations have met with strong opposition from a minority of committee members and from members of the community. In a minority report, dissenting committee members cited the town's tight budget situation and called for fiscal restraint.

"New projects are always being suggested and many are implemented, with an ever-increasing cost to the taxpayers," the minority report said.

The dissenting report called for the school building to be leased for private use, with costs of renovation to be met by the tenants. Minority members also called for a more detailed study of traffic patterns to be done. The report said, "this study should be conducted by individuals with expertise in traffic planning, utilizing services offered by the state and town."

Both committee chairman Charles Zerby and Town Manager Louis Hayward agreed that it will be some time before the proposed improvements for North Amherst are acted on.

Hayward said the proposals will first have to be reviewed by the appropriate town boards. He said it would be "at least a year" before the committee's recommendations are brought before Town Meeting.

Zerby said no cost estimates had been made for the proposals. ' He said, however, that the cost of the road realignment would probably be borne by the State Department of Public Works and that the cost of moving the library would be "modest".

Student Activities cancels feminist lecturer

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

A lecture by radical feminist author Andrea Dworkin, originally scheduled for Feb. 9, has been cancelled due to apparent conflict between Dworkin and the Student Activities office.

Early this November Everywoman's Center, Commuter Collective, Lesbian Union, People's Gay Alliance and the Women's Studies Program agreed to co-sponsor a proposal for a Distinguished Visitors Program program at which Dworkin would speak. The proposal was presented by program committee member Suzi Milstein at the group's Nov. 14 meeting.

John Stoltenberg attended the meeting as Dworkin's representative. Stoltenberg claims that before the proposal was discussed, he handed Milstein a written statement of the conditions under which Dworkin would appear.

The memo, Stoltenbert said, clearly stated Dworkin's fee for a major lecture. He said it also stated that due to the amount of preparation time Dworkin would into her speech, which would be written especially for the occasion, she would be unavailable for either a press conference or an additional workshop.

Stoltenberg claims he also stated those conditions verbally at the meeting in response to questions from committee members. Minutes of the Nov. 14 meeting show that the Dworkin proposal was unanimously passed. Milstein reports that while she can't recall being handed the memo, fees and details of programs are routinely agreed upon before a vote is taken.

On the basis of a verbal agreement between Milstein and Stoltenberg, Dworkin began writing her lecture. In early January, Cheryl Schaffer of Everywoman's Center called Sarah Williamson, the Student Activities Program advisor working with DVP, to inquire about the status of the program. She was told that no progress had been made on it, as the student who was to chair the program had left town for intersession. Milstein was contacted and began working on the program.

Williamson asked Stoltenberg for additional information on Dworkin, and asked to speak with her directly to obtain information needed for the contract. Dworkin claims that she called Williamson prepared to provide her with that information, and was greeted with a barrage of questions which indicated that Williamson had not read any of the information concerning the program already collected.

When Stoltenberg arrived at the activities office that afternoon, he was told by Milstein that the program had been cancelled because she and Williamson had "bad feelings" about it. He then met with Activities Coordinator Bill Hasson, who said that he wasn't going to issue the contract because he wanted the program reconsidered by the DVP committee. Hasson and Williamson claim that their unwillingness to issue the contract stems from "new information", but they have declined to reveal the contents of the information.

Supporters of Dworkin plan to distribute information sheets concerning the cancellation on campus, and are asking those who would like to see the lecture rescheduled to meet at the DVP office at 6:30 tonight.

Social Security misused; warrants new procedures

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Social Security Administration is tightening procedures for issuing new Social Security cards as part of an effort to crack down on illegal aliens.

The new procedures will begin this year and are aimed at "possible misuse if the Social Security card as an indicator of lawful status in the United States" and other misuses such as attempted change of identities, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said.

Applicants for Social Security numbers, regardless of age, will be required to submit "documentary" evidence of age, identity and citizenship or alien status. HEW did not say precisely what would qualify.

Currently only applicants 18 and older must submit evidence of age; evidence of legal alien status is required only if the applicant is not a citizen.

All adults will be interviewed in depth to assure they never had a Social Security number and were not getting one for someone else.

Current procedures give applicants the choice of completing applications at a District office or mailing them in. n.

The procedures are described in a "budget justification" accompanying the fiscal 1979 budget that was sent to Congress but not otherwise distributed. A copy was given to UPI.

The document also discloses other Social Security changes affecting millions of Americans.

Beginning this year, most employers, for the first time since 1938, will report worker earnings information to Social Security annually rather than quarterly. No reports will be required from employers this year except for those that were due in January.

The change, under 1976 legislation, will cover reports on this year's wates, with the first ones due next January.

A Federal Paperwork Commission estimated in 1971 that annual reporting will save businesses more than $235 million a year.'

HEW said early this year each of the 265 million applications for Social Security numbers since the program began in 1937 will have been coded, grouped, assigned control numbers, microfilmed and keyed for transfer to computers.

Once the "SS-5 Conversion Project" is complete, computers can spew out by number a Social Security card holder's name, date and place of birth, father, mother's maiden name, race, sex, present age before last birthday and date applied for card.

Vietnam's peace attempt ignored

BANGKOK, Thailand [UPI] — Vietnam Sunday issued its first appeal for international peace-keeping troops to end its border war with Cambodia, but Phnom Penh said Hanoi had just launched the largest attack in a month.

The three-point Vietnamese peace plan was unveiled at a Hanoi news conference held by Deputy Foreign Minister Mguyen Co Thach, the official for Radio Hanoi said in a broadcast monitored in Bangkok.

It called for an immediate cease-fire, border negotiations "in Hanoi, Phnom Penh, or at a place on the border," and an international force to supervise a six-mile buffer strike between the two Communist neighbors.

Vietnam hinted they could be U.N. troops, saying "Vietnam is of the view that through negotiations ... in the spirit of the United Nations Charter the Vietnam-Cambodia border question will be correctly solved."

There was no immediate reaction from Phnom Penh, although Cambodian officials in the past several weeks have specifically rejected negotiations and allowing a third country to mediate the two-month border war.

The official Radio Phnom Penh said Hanoi's appeal came only hours after Vietnamese troops, tanks, jets and helicopters attacked Cambodia's southern Mekong Delta Saturday in the largest invasion of Cambodia in a month.

The broadcast, also monitored in Bangkok, said the Vietnamese invaders pushed into Cambodia along Highway 30, a two-lane road that runs directly from the border to Phnom Penh 45 miles to the north.

So far, no known Vietnamese force has struck at Phnom Penh directly, although a push to the Mekong River late last December was considered by many western analysts to be a warning to the Cambodian government.

Cambodia said the Vietnamese attack, spearheaded by tanks and backed by Soviet-built MIG warplanes, was beaten back in six hours of fierce fighting that destroyed eight Hanoi tanks and killed "dozens of enemy soldiers."

Panama issue prolonged; new amendments posed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Senate debate on the Panama Canal treaties opens this week and senators on both sides of the question agreed Sunday one of the major issues could be over amendments offered by opponents of the pacts.

The treaties, which would give Panama control of the waterway at the turn of the century, must be ratified by two-thirds of Senate — 67 senators if all 100 are present when the vote is taken before they take effect.

Both the bipartisan Senate leadership and key opponents of the pacts are agreed that at least two amendments are necessary — one to clarify America's right to defend the canal beyond the year 2000 and another to insure that U.S. ships get top priority passage in times of crisis.

Chief backers of the treaties do not favor any amendments beyond those, but Sen. Robert Dole and other opponents plan to offer other modifications that the administration fears would effectively kill the agreements.

Dole, R-Kan., discussed the subject Sunday in ABC's "Issues and Answers" program along with a fellow opponent, Sen. Jake Carn, R-Utah, and two treaty supporters assistant Democratic leader Alan Cranston of California and Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y.

Dole said one amendment he will offer would allow American troops to remain in the canal zone beyond the year 2000. Such a guarantee, he said, would make it easier for the United States to defend the canal against internal aggression.

Both Cranston and Javits said the amendment could effectively kill the treaties.

"If it's sent back with amendments ... that make it toally unacceptable to Panama, that's the same as rejection," Cranston said.

And Javits said keeping troops in the canal zone "flies in the very face of the whole reason for a new treaty. It's the feeling on the part of the Panamanians that this is a colonial enclave."

Pole denied he was trying to kill the pacts."

"We don't want to cripple it, we want to help it," he said.

'We bribed pols' - MBM

BOSTON [AP] — A bill that cleared the way for counties to employ construction management firms won easy legislative passage at a time one of those firms admits to paying thousands of dollars to Massachusetts politicians.

The bill, signed into law in October 1973, for the first time spelled out the right of county commissioners to hire consultants to "supervise the building, altering or repairing of public buildings."

The law also said money previously appropriated to cover the cost of building a courthouse or other facility could be used to pay those consultants.

The law could have directly benefitted such consulting firms as McKee-Berger-Mansueto of New York, which had done work for Middlesex County.

MBM officials have admitted contributing thousands of dollars to Massachusetts politicians from 1971 through 1973. Joseph J.C. DiCarlo and Ronald MacKenzie, both state senators at the time, have been convicted of extorting $40,000 from MBM.

The bill to allow use of outside consultants by counties was filed by MacKenzie and Sen. B. Joseph Tully, D-Conn. It was admitted by the Senate as a late-filed measure, eight months into the 1973 session August 14, 1973.

Former MBM executive William Harding testified during the DiCarlo-MacKenzie trial to bringing envelopes filled with cash from the firm's New York office to Massachusetts. He also testified to personally delivering $20,000 in cash to MacKenzie.

Tully said of the 1973 legislation, "I had nothing to do with drafting it. I just signed the blue form. I sign them all the time. I was chairman of counties and they wanted my name on it, I guess."

The legislation actually netted little business for MBM or any other consulting company, and a court ruling has since nullified the law.

Orchard Hill makes plans for area upgrade

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Construction of the Orchard Hill Snack Bar is underway and should be completed within the next month, according to Mark Hergenrother, acting-president of Orchard Hill Area Government.

In his first report of the semester, Hergenrother last night told OHAG representatives at the first meeting of the semester he expects the snack bar would open in early next month.

Hergenrother also said revision of OHAG's alcohol policy was being studied, and that recommendations would be made to the representatives later in the semester.

Billy Coffee announced the Orchard Hill Third World Center would open this week. The center will be open Monday through Thursday, 7 to 11 p.m. and on Sunday, 9 to 11 p.m. Coffee emphasized the center is open to all students and asked for volunteers to staff it.

Leo Murphy of the Men's Center said a coffee house is being planned for the end of the month. Murphy said the center also plans to hold a film colloquium on human oppression and possibly a discussion series. The Women's Center is looking for a new co-coordinator, according to Nancy Higgins. She also asked people to volunteer for staffing.

The Great Decisions Program will resume in Webster this semester, with Luther Allen, OHAG Advisor, acting as moderator. Allen explained the program was a series of weekly discussions on current issues, usually dealing with foreign policy. The discussions will be held every Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., said Allen. He told the representatives "The program is enhanced by a class built around it, but it is also open to the public." The programs will also be broadcast over WFCR, the five college educational radio station.

Pot burned as fuel in Florida plant

PERRY, Fla. [UPI] — Twenty tons of marijuana valued at one million dollars on the street went up in smoke Saturday but it was used for fuel in a paper plant instead of producing a euphoric high.

The pot was confiscated by the Florida Marine Patrol Thursday in a raid at the Cross-Florida Barge Canal. Sixteen persons were arrested at the site near Crystal River.

Workmen fed the marijuana bales into paper boilers at Dookeye—Cellulose Corp. A plant spokesman said the firm uses it like any other fuel and there is no danger of "air pollution" because the smoke went through the normal filtration process used to remove contaminents.

Taylor County Sheriff Van Middon said burning is normal procedure when large amounts of pot are seized, although some is held for court evidence.

The suspects remain in the Citrus County Jail in lieu of bonds totalling $5.1 million.

Maine bottled by merchants

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — Too many beverage distributors and store owners are failing to comply with Maine's new bottle law and the State Department of Agriculture this week will step up its monitoring of the measure, says the department's director of inspections.

Clayton F. Davis said some store owners have been told by distributors that there is no fine for non-compliance and they could continue to sell beverage containers without a deposit.

But the law provides for a fine of up to $100 a day, which Davis said applies to bottlers and distributors as well as retailers.

The law, which took full effect last Wednesday following a one-month transition period requires deposits of at least a nickel on all beer and soda bottles and cans sold in the state. It also bans flip-top cans.

Davis said seven inspectors are being reassigned within the Agriculture Department, which is responsible for enforcing the law, and that will bring the total number of inspectors monitoring the law to 10.

In visits last week to stores in the Portland, Bangor and Lewiston areas, Davis said he found deliveries of non-returnable containers were still being made, "in some cases just ahead of me."

"Even on Tuesday afternoon, which was the final gun, they were still delivering items that were not in compliance," he added.

Davis said some deliveries of illegal containers were also made after the law took full effect Wednesday.

Thomson sees apartheid out

WINDSOR LOCK, Conn. [AP] — New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson says South Africa is "definitely moving to eliminate apartheid, which was not done in the United States until the late 1960s with the Civil Rights Act."

In an interview Saturday after a speech to a meeting of the New England Republican Council, Thomson said he believes the "liberal press" hasn't presented stories about South Africa fairly.

Thomson, who recently returned from South Africa, has been criticized for comments in support of that country's government. He was scheduled to speak last Friday at a fund-raising event for Edward King, a gubernatorial candidate in Massachusetts. King, a Republican, canceled the speech Wednesday because of Thomson's comments.

Connecticut state Republican Chairman Frederick Biebel said he knew of no efforts to have the New England Republican Council cancel Thomson's speech Saturday.

Thomson mentioned South Africa briefly in his speech to the council, questioning why U.S. foreign policy is "so concerned with internal issues in South Africa."

Snowmobiler crosses country

LUBEC, Maine (UPI) — An Allentown, Pa., man this weekend claimed to be the first snowmobiler to cross the United States, arriving at the country's easternmost town from Westport, Wash., about 5 p.m. Saturday.

But, the 5,011-mile journey didn't always go smoothly for 33-year-old Fritz Sprandel.

Within hours after leaving on December 4, Sprandel was wiping away blood from a cut left by a rocky embankment in Washington's Cascade Mountains.

Days later, Sprandel found himself wandering hopelessly in six-foot high snow drifts in Idaho's Western Foothills to the Rocky MOuntains — without his snowmobile and without any help.

"I had to walk 12 miles, by myself, to get out of that one. I really thought it was over," he said. "But, I made it. I can't believe it yet, because I'm too tired. But, I made it," he added.

Sprandel, who was accompanied in a truck by his business partner, Ed Kazmierski, said, "I didn't do this thing for promotion. I did it just to show that American products are good and can take it."

But, he said it's not exactly a coincidence that a Timex watch was attached to his American built snowmobile.

"There were a lot of firsts attached to this trip. For instance I was the first one to snowmobile east of the Cascades into Idaho. That's unusual because they never get much snow out there. I drove 550 miles on bare ground, without a flake of snow," he said.

"And, I was told that mine was the first snowmobile over the Mackinaw Bridge, you know, the five-mile-bridge that connects Michigan to Upper Michigan. That was a windy trip," Sprandel said.

The two-month odyssey was not driven non-stop, he said. Sprandel averaged about 125 miles on days he didn't stop to enter snowmobile rallies or visit dealers.

In addition to the first few rocky days in the far west, the upper Midwest also created some problems for him, Sprandel said.

"The coldest weather probably was North Dakota and Montana where it got down to 40 below zero, and with the wind chill factor it was 60 below or colder," he said.

"The worst weather was in Ohio, which we hit during the blizzard. I also ran into rain all across New York. I drove all day in the rain and was soaking wet."

Sprandel said the "greatest part" of the trip was the people he met. "I couldn't have done it without their help. They were great," he said.

The long distance snowmobiler, who hopes for a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records, even had praise for state police along the way.

"I was told to get in the ditch occasionally after they saw me in the road, but I didn't get a single ticket from anyone," he said.

Truckstop draws hookers

DARIEN, Conn. [AP] — Male and female hookers, as many as 15 nightly, and especially during the summer, stake out their territory regularly at a state-owned truck stop here, in the shadow of some of the nation's most fashionable homes.

The eastbound stop on Interstate 95 "is a mecca for prostitutes, pimps, homosexuals, hustlers from New Jersey selling all kinds of trinkets, drug addicts and some people who are just lonely," said Charles W. Vingo, night manager for fuel distribution.

State police and other observers estimate some of the regulars make $40,000 to $50,000 annually, and that most need that kind of money to support expensive drug habits.

The main clients are truckers to whom hookers cater exclusively because they tend to carry a lot of cash, says state police Sgt. William M. Lucas. Lucas is head of the investigative unit at the nearby Westport barracks.

"They go to the rest stop when business is slow in Norwalk, Stamford, Greenwich, West Port Chester, N.Y., and even Bridgeport," Lucas said. "On those nights, we have our hands full."

Darien is one of the affluent Fairfield County towns which serve as bedroom communities for New York City and southern Connecticut cities. The towns have become headquarters for many major corporations in the past several years.

Vingo, who has worked at the stop for 10 years, says, "On some nights, at 3 a.m., I guarantee you can buy anything in the whole world right here."

He likes to tell the story of a North Carolina trucker who pulled into the stop last summer and said: "Skip the fuel. Where are the girls? I heard this is the hottest stop in the United States."

State police say that during the last year they have staged two crackdowns at the stop, the latest being completed last week. Since January 10, four persons have been charged with prostitution and nine with public indecency, including a teacher from a boys' school in New York City, Lucas said.

The eastbound stop and its sister stop on the westbound side of the Connecticut Turnpike are the busiest in Connecticut, generating more revenue for the state than any other pair of stops in the state, said Arthur B. Fitzgibbons, head of the tolls and concessions division for the state Department of Transportation.

In the 1976 calendar year, the two rest stops produced nearly $700,000 in revenue for the General Fund. The state gets 16 per cent of the profit from the restaurants at the stops and $1,000 monthly rent from the fuel distributor, plus a royalty for each gallon of gasoline sold, Fitzgibbons says.

He says he's aware of problems at the rest stop but that his department is concerned with the "collection of revenue only. But I understand the state police are working on it all the time."

Chicago paper may fold

CHICAGO [UPI] — The executive board of the Chicago Newspaper Guild met in closed session Sunday to discuss ways to keep the Chicago Daily News from closing after more than 102 years of publication.

The proposals will be reviewed and voted on at a full membership meeting Monday evening, said Gerald Minkkinen, executive director of the guild. Union leaders will then meet Tuesday to discuss them to comply with a requirement under federal labor law.

The board of directors of Field Enterprises, Inc. which publishes both the Sun-Times and the Daily News voted Friday to "contemplate ceasing publication" of the Daily News March 4 unless an acceptable means can be devised to save it.

Publisher Marshall Field warned staffers at a meeting Friday it looks certain the newspaper, winner of 15 Pulitzer prizes, will not survive.

The Daily News, one of a number of struggling afternoon newspapers in the nation has lost $21.7 million since 1974.

Federal labor law requires that newspapers considering radical changes must first discuss them with labor leaders. The meeting Tuesday fulfills that requirement said James C. Stuart Jr., executive vice president and general counsel of Field Enterprises.

Stuart and Minkkinen said they had been informed of two inquiries by outside enterprises about assuming control of the newsaper. Offers, however, were not discussed and prospective bidders were not named.

Anthony P. Martin-Trigona, a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate and holder of several broadcast properties said Saturday he has offered $250,000 to "purchase the trade name Chicago Daily News and also the good will and certain intangible assets of the paper."

He also said he was seeking to receive financial support from Rupert Murdoch publisher of the New York Post.

What's your excuse?

"Every minute, ten units of blood are needed in hospitals across the country," according to a Red Cross pamphlet entitled, "The 20 most common excuses for not giving blood."

Of course, none of the excuses are very good ones. Giving blood is virtually painless and takes about an hour of your time. And at UMass it could hardly be more convenient — not only does the campus have a permanent blood donor center, but this semester the Red Cross will be setting up collection sites in the residential areas as well.

This Wednesday and the following one are Collegian blood drive days. While collection will be taking place in the residential areas Tuesdays and Thursdays, donors may go to the donor center on Wednesday. The donor center is located in the Public Health Center, which is adjacent to Morrill Hall and not to be confused with the Health Center, or infirmary. The hours are 3 to 8 p.m. this Wednesday, and 2 to 8 p.m. the following.

The donor center, which is the only on-campus center in the northeast, has been open two and a half years. In that time it has contributed substantially to the blood supply in New England. Anyone who has been watching the news lately should recall that the blood supply in the region has been rather low as a result of the recent storms and flooding. Regardless, the blood you donate is always needed and won't go unappreciated.

Sign-up sheets for the Collegian blood drives will be located at the information desk in the Campus Center concourse beginning today. But if you don't have time to stop by and sign up, walk-ins are always welcome at the donor center.

By the way, the first excuse on the Red Cross' iist of 20 is, "No one has ever asked me to donate blood." As they say in the pamphlet, "consider yourself invited." Please sign up today.

Time for courage

To the Editor:

According to Frankling Patterson, acting President of UMass, Jean Paul Mather more than any man in the crucial years 1954-1960 made the case for a real public university in Massachusetts. Many faculty and some administrators may recall that President Mather stated publicly that if winning a salary increase for the faculty required his own resignation, then he would resign. He did.

The time has come for one or more administrators of this University to demonstrate similar courage. Administrators of this University are urged to reexamine the administration's philosophy for operating this University as evidenced in the administration's collective bargaining proposal and by the arbitrariness underlying the recent salary increases. [The administration restricted the salary increases to members of the administration.]

How refreshing it would be if one or more administrators came out publicly with a statement to the effect that present management's philosophy for operating the University is different from mine and since I am not willing to support it, I believe it is in the best interest of all parties that I resign from my administrative post. And how extra refreshing it would be if members of the faculty who believed likewise made themselves unavailable for management positions in this University until there was ample evidence that management's philosophy is reasonably consistent with the widely held and cherished concepts of academic freedom, due process, university government, and tenure.

Getting taken for a ride

jay martus

The other morning began by rushing to get to the bus stop, only to see the driver indicate that there was no more room and she would not take us out of the Yukon wind and cold. As the cursing died down at the curb, people tried their numb legs, and began walking to classes in disgust. Traveling from lot 34 (across from S.B.A.), we all felt a special tenseness charged in the atmosphere, and simultaneously viewed the hideous, and startling image of another Whitmore trial balloon.

Evidently new and old members of the administration have not ventured to change a style that has failed miserably so often in the past. The proposed bus fee will ensure that the new Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance James McBee will be initiated in a trial by fire. The hidden costs of this expedition into the domain of hardball campus politics will be telling and probably can't be predicted in its entirety. Of course one can speculate on certain likely possibilities ...

Student politics has historically been an arena of factionalism and stalemates. On the occasion of particularly outrageous activities by the administration, a bond of common interests materialize among the divergent student groups and student government is revitalized. Given the reaction of a more unified force, issues like the Universal Resource Fee were dealt with effectively by a strong student response. The U.R.F. proposal would have been a general fee for all students of $150 to help pay off the bondholders sooner.

Areas of the University funded primarily by students are being asked to assume more than their fair share of funding of services for which students don't have any more than a token share of policy making authority. The bus fee issue is an example of this phenomenon. Under the administration proposal, students would be subsidizing the staff and faculty contribution as bus users, while they control the policy making. The administration wants to keep or expand its control and pay less than they proportionally should. Giving an issue to the students with such gross inequities is perhaps the greatest boost the administration has given student government in a year.

The trial balloon method is the label for the strategy the administration is using in the bus issue. The administration has put itself into a box of conflicting promises and expectations: a promise that student monies would not be used to fund the Campus Center garage, staff and faculty entrenched against parking fee escalation, and placement of the C.C. garage into the parking lot system contradict and work against each other's fruition. With reserves being eaten up like candy by the garage, breaking a promise or expectation seems inevitable. Which do they choose to break? They decided to squeeze a little more from the students. The negotiations with students were undertaken in bad faith and their fee proposal was cooked up to raise the stakes. Rather than cooperating by trying to bridge the gap between the positions, the administration went public with the bus fee proposal. That is farther away from accommodation than they were a month ago. Their hope is that as students aim their missiles at the bus fee pariah, their previous position will look more attractive. The administration forgot one thing; that buses are a central service which touches most of us each day and that more people are watching the ensuing battle than usual.

One member of the administration is counting on the balloon's collapse. With a large supply of fee cards already printed up, with no space for an additional fee, the Bursar must be found curiously against the proposal, siding with the student perspective. Of course, if force, he could just close a few hours earlier each day to hand process all the new bills. Or new bills could be ordered and paid for, a small loss in the battle.

If the fee proposal passes, the next thing you know the buses may be renamed: The Whitmore Transit Service. Think of all the costs in re-painting the vehicles, but with the new trust fund established, they'll just propose a fee increase to cover the costs.

The right to self-determination

By YITZHAK SANTIS

Universal human rights: this goal espoused by such lofty groups as the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade (RCYB) the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA), the International Socialists (IS) and others, is a truly morally correct cause that should be pursued. However, these groups engage themselves in a double standard style of selective criticism that only attacks and criticizes those nations that don't agree with their specific ideologies and ignores those nations, with supposed communist or socialist ideologies, that are guilty of the same crimes.

Much attention has been focused upon the human rights violations in South Africa. These groups in particular have led the charge on the American campuses against the investments by the American colleges in the corporations that deal with South Africa. They have been fairly successful and they should be commended for the work they have done. I've heard nothing, however, in the way of criticism coming from these groups on the trading practices of Mozambique, a 'Marxist' state supported by the Soviet Union.

In the year 1975, the total dollar value in exports from Mozambique to South Africa was $16 million, the imports from South Africa to Mozambique, in the same year, was $72 million. In 1976, South Africa provided approximately $120 million of Mozambique's total foreign exchange earnings of some $300 million, consisting of $50 million from harbor and railway duties; $10 million from South African imports of Mozambique goods; $10 million from South African tourists and $50 million from Mozambique miners working in South Africa.

The case of Black miners from Mozambique mines, working in South African gold mines, is a curious one because of Mozambique's anti-apartheid stance. According to the Washington Post the number of workers from Mozambique in South African mines and industries has increased from less than 100,000 before that countries independence came in 1975 to nearly 180,000 today. The current standard arrangement of payment goes like this: The south African mining companies pay the Mozambique workers 40 per cent of their total wages in South African currency. The remaining 60 per cent of their wages is paid to the Mozambique government in gold bullion. After the miners return home, their government pays them the remaining 60 per cent of their withheld wages. They are paid in Mozambique currency and the government retains the gold.

South Africa's gold payments to Mozambique for providing workers for the mines are computed at the old "official" price of $42 an ounce instead of the current market value of over $100. Therefore, if a Black worker earns $70 a month in the mines, his monthly take home pay is $28; Mozambique receives $42 in gold — one ounce at the "official" rate. But one ounce of gold is actually worth more than $100. The worker receives only the $42 of the "official" price and never sees the full pay that he labored for. Therefore, Mozambique, a 'bastion' of Marxist ideology in Africa, earns a profit of over 200 per cent on the exploitation of its proletariat in a White racist society!

Another interesting case of the selective morality and double standards that are practiced by the RCYB, YSA and others, is the plight of refugees around the world. While these groups call for the destruction of Israel in order for the Palestinian Arabs to exercise 'self-determination', they seem to forget that the Jewish people have the same rights to self-determination.

But where are the shouts for self-determination for the Kurdish people, a non-Arab ethnic group nearly three million of whom live in Iraq. They have been fighting, and dying, for such self-determination since 1972. The totalitarian government of Iraq has driven over 150,000 Kurds out of their homes. Thirty-thousand 'pesh merga' (those who face death) are known to be in concentration camps. Amnesty International has the names of 389 hostages — innocent wives and children of rebel soldiers now fighting in the hills. But you see, Iraq is supported by the Soviet Union.

The situation in South-East Asia is yet another example of RCYB, YSA and other's double standards. The government in Cambodia, supported by Communist China, is engaged in the genocide of the middle and upper class citizens. It is known that tens of thousands of people have already been massacred, and made refugees, fleeing for their lives. Don't these people have a right to self-determination?

By not coming out against these gross violations of human rights, these groups in their silence are condoning the genocide occurring on the other side of the world.

A revolution, with little or no violence, that wrests away the power from an oppressing ruling class and creates a socialist state where the proletariat rules and truly democratic process functions is one thing. But when that same revolution goes to the extreme of murdering, of imprisoning people with the criteria being their economic status and-or political beliefs, then that revolution ceases to be a revolution and becomes an oppressive, authoritarian reign of terror that is perpetrated by small, insignificant and insecure men lustily searching for power.

It is not Socialism or Communism as ideas that are being criticized here, but rather the selective, double standard criticisms of the self-proclaimed bearers of those ideologies.

All that is being asked in this article is for these people to broaden their horizons in their quests for universal human rights. For all human life is equal in value from monarch to peasant; from communist to fascist; from bourgeoisie to proletarian.

There is always a 'hitch'

susan birmingham

In the abstract sense, sticking out my thumb with only a smile a perhaps a joint to share along with way, seems like a pleasant alternative to paying my last six dollars for a three hour bus ride to Boston. Ah, if only life were that simple.

For those women, like myself, who are without a car, and relatively broke, the situation of travel is a frustrating one. Things are fine when plans made in advance allow for catching a ride with a friend, but if impulse is still an important part of living, "safety" is a hard pill to swallow.

It's not just the threat of physical violence that is the problem, but also the loss of dignity that is suffered just from conversation. Inevitably, the interrogation begins with questions about school.

"Oh so you are a college student? Are you studying to be a teacher?" I clench my teeth and try to stifle the impulse to say, "no actually I am studying to be a nuclear physicist and I have just discovered a way to destroy, with a single push of a button, all those who dare assume that a woman goes to school with dreams that extend no further than being a teacher." Instead, I usually smile bleakly and try to avoid further conversation.

With the rise in the use of C.B. radios, one would assume that hitchhiking has been made easier. Perhaps for some; but what in hell are you supposed to say when your driver, in trying to be so very helpful, radios all over rt. 2 that he has a beaver sitting beside him and is anyone up for giving her a ride?

It is also interesting to watch tricks done with mirrors. Simply fascinating to see what some will do for excitement. Have you ever gotten into a car only to notice that the rear-view mirror is angled so that you have a perfect view of the driver's crotch? Hmmm ... Is that done for my benefit, to heighten the enjoyment of the ride?

Of course, there are always those helpful ones who pick you up only to lecture the whole time about "what's a nice girl like you ... don't you know how dangerous ... you shouldn't be ... "

By the time one arrives at her destination, nerves shot to hell, jaws sore from being clenched, legs cramped from sitting as tightly and inconspicuously as possible (you know what a woman is looking for when she is sitting with legs apart and head back on the seat), and neck strained from having ridden two hours looking out the left window, all that is desired is to be back home safe and sound.

The six dollars you saved is spent on high priced drinks in Boston while just trying to relax and forget all about it. Heaven forbid you get angry, after all you asked for it.

Well, believe it or not, I'm off again, praying that a woman will have the courage to stop for another woman who is only looking for a quiet, inexpensive way to Boston.

Strong-arm sued by Moon church member

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — A suit filed by a follower of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church is expected to go to trial in U.S. district court today.

Leslie Weiss, 24, of Waltham, Mass., is suing Albert Turner of Warwick and Ted Patrick of San Diego for $400,000. She claims the two men locked her in a room on Thanksgiving Day, 1974, and tried to sway her to leave Moon's church.

At issue is whether a relative or friend of a legal adult can try to have him brainwashed to give up a religion.

Patrick is a former community-relations worker with a national reputation for "deprogramming" Moon followers for a fee of $1,500 to $5,000. He was hired by Weiss' mother, who has since died.

Weiss said the two men deceived her into going to Turner's home. She claims she was physically abused and feared for her safety.

She said she was locked in a bedroom at night with her mother and finally escaped by climbing out a window. She said she was hospitalized because of the incident and developed a deep fear traveling alone.

Turner linked up with Patrick when he hired the California man to "deprogram" his daughter Shelley from the Unification church.

It's not the first time Patrick has been sued for his work.

A New York jury acquitted him on charges he abducted a 20-year-old member of the new Testament Missionary fellowship in 1973.

He was later convicted of falsely imprisoning two Denver women whose parents were unhappy they had given up the Greek Orthodox way of life.

He was also sentenced to one year in jail for falsely imprisoning a 19-year-old member of the Hare Krishna sect. And, he was deported from Canada for attempting to deprogram a 23-year-old Roman Catholic.

Suspect of fatality released

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Mark Avery, 21, of Stafford, Vt., has been freed, in connection with an incident involving the dealth of a New Hampshire State Trooper, because police overlooked other misdemeanor charges, a county attorney said.

Avery was charged with negligent homicide Saturday in New London District Court, but Merrimack County Attorney James Kruse has ordered the charge dropped pending further investigation and the results of an autopsy of the body of Trooper Richard Champy.

Kruse said Avery had also been charged by police with public intoxication and resisting arrest, but, according to Kruse, those charges were not filed in court because officers were pressing the more serious negligent homicide charge.

"We've had a real communication problem over this case," Kruse said. "And we're going to get together and straighten it out."

Police said Champy apparently collapsed during a scuffle with Avery, who was a passenger in a car the trooper had stopped. The driver of that car Dean Homer Kendall, 41, also of Strafford, Vt., was charged with driving while intoxicated and is free on bail, Kruse said.

Police said Champy had stopped the car, which was wanted for a hit and run accident on route 89 in Lebanon.

He was given cardio-pulmonary resuscitation at the scene by another trooper, but died two hours later in New London Hospital.

A preliminary investigation has determined that Champy's death was due, in part to a heart problem, Kruse said.

"I was so confused. I had to ask questions to get the information I needed. But I didn't know what questions to ask or where to go to get the answers."

"When I first started at UMass I was 2-3 years older than most students and was commuting. I felt like I wasn't really part of the University. More like a hotel resident."

"Making the decision to go to college meant making a severe adjustement in my lifestyle. After working 20 years I could no longer afford to support myself. I had to make a lot of sacrifices."

474 YEARS?

"When I first entered UMass I was unprepared. I only had a vague idea of why I was here, and what I was going to do in life. When I returned after a few years absense, school meant something."

"I felt detached from others in class although they were friendly. No social contact outside of class existed. Having children made us seem worlds apart and communication difficult. Why?"

News in brief

Blast destroys duplex

UXBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — At least three persons were injured, one seriously, when an explosion and fire destroyed a two-story duplex dwelling Sunday, officials said.

The cause of the 10:20 a.m. blast was not immediately determined, a fire department dispatcher said. No natural gas lines served the structure, he said.

John Morin, 49, an occupant of the two-family dwelling, received second and third degree burns over 80 per cent of his body. Transferred from Milford Hospital to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, he was placed on the danger list but was reported in stable condition.

His wife Mary was admitted to Milford Hospital in stable condition with first degree burns. His teen-age son, who was not identified, was treated for cuts and released. Three other Morin children of high school age were taken to the hospital for a checkup but were not hurt, a Milford nursing supervisor said.

Police officer Richard Heerdt said the explosion "pretty near blew the house apart and the fire didn't leave much left."

The fire and explosion were at 24 Snowling Road. Nearby homes escaped damage, officials said.

Heating main fixed

GARDNER, Mass. [AP] — Natural gas service was restored to about 200 customers early Sunday following the rupture of a gas main, the Fitchburg Gas & Electric Co., reported.

Jim Pettengill, spokesman for the company, said a supply pipe at a liquefied natural gas plant in nearby Westminster ruptured Saturday night, cutting gas pressure in part of Gardner to nearly zero.

Pettèngill said service was restored temporarily by drawing gas from a propane plant in Lunenberg, which normally serves industrial users. The Westminster pipe, which apparently cracked open because of expansion and contraction due to weather changes, was expected to be back in service by Sunday night, he said.

Utility crews checked homes and businesses to relight pilot flames snuffed by the gas failure.

Marine found dead; Corps investigated

BOSTON [UPI] — A Massachusetts congressmen has called for an investigation into the death of a marine from the city's Dorchester section whose family refuses to believe a Marine Corps report that the young man died after he apparently shot himself in the left temple with his own rifle.

Marine spokesman said Pfc. Mark J. Czaja, 18, died at Camp LeJeune, N.C., last Monday. The fatal bullet came from a M-16 rifle Czaja was carrying while he was alone on guard duty at a motor pool, the spokesmen said.

The spokesman added a preliminary investigation showed no evidence of foul play.

But, members of Czaja's family said Saturday they cannot believe the 197 graduate of Dorchester High School killed himself.

"When they told me that my son was shot in the left temple, I just couldn't believe it," said his mother, Dorothy Czaja. "He was right handed. I want to know how my son shot himself in the temple with a rifle."

Rep. Janes A. Burke, D-Mass., is calling for a full probe by the Marines into the death. An aid to Burke said Saturday the congressman had been told the investigator would be completed in about 10 days.

"I do not want to blame the entire Marine Corps for Mark's death," his sister, Mrs. Dorothy Rumple of Gas City, Ind., said after her brother's Saturday funeral. "But someone appears to be at fault. I don't want to be bitter, but we must know why he died and how."

Family members and friends say he was a young man was in good spirits when he returned to the North Carolina camp from leave Jan. 26.

He enlisted in the Marine Corps in September and graduated from boot camp in January. He was transferred from the Paris Island, S.C., camp to Camp LeJeune to attend cook's school.

Firemen injured in Milford blaze

MILFORD, Mass. [AP] — Five firemen were injured battling a blaze in an apartment house from which 13 residents were safely evacuated Sunday.

The fire at Shadowbrook Apartments was fought by fire departments from four towns.

Officials said two firemen were burned; two suffered from smoke inhalation, and one injured a leg in a fall. All were from the Milford department.

Two apartments were damaged, one extensively. Officials said the blaze was caused by a maintenance man trying to thaw water pipes with a torch.

Jean Paul Sartre's play 'The Flies' at Hampshire

"The Flies", by Jean Paul Sartre, will be performed February 9-12 at Hampshire College. Hampshire continued the trend in the Valley of the professional theatre artists working with students by securing a National endowment for the Arts grant for a visiting artist. Hampshire asked Joyce Arron, who created the Open Theatre with Joe Chaikin, and worked closely with Sam Shepard and other American and European theatre innovators, to be the artist.

In addition to the February 9, 10, and 11 performances, there will be a special performance with simultaneous video recording and broadcast on Sunday, February 12. Show time is 8:00 p.m. at the Performing Arts Center at Hampshire College. Tickets are $2.00 and $1.50 for students and senior citizens. For reservations call 549-4600 ext. 351.

Antics sell cars; zany advertising "makes a buck"

LEWISTON, Maine [AP] — Why would a man stand on his head atop a car, smash a new windshield with a sledgehammer, or give a sales pitch in French while wearing a papermache turkey mask? To steel a car and make a buck.

The antics of Lewiston and Auburn automobile dealers are well known to Maine television viewers, and the zaniness of their advertising is paying off.

The two neighboring cities may not be first in auto sales across the state, but they are hard competitors for the new car buyers' dollar.

There are nearly 30 new and used car dealers in Lewiston and Auburn, communities with a combined population of nearly 7,000. They are drawing buyers from across the state, New Hamsphire and Vermont, admittedly because of their television ads.

Childish stunts don't embarrass them.

"If you're smiling when you come in here, that's our ace in the hole," said Don Parquette, manager of the Auto Center in Auburn.

Auto Center salesman William McLain will stand on his head on command if it means a sale. He kept the advertising promise on a recent snappy cold day, balancing on a Saab in the front lot while traffic sped by.

Parquette, who is of French heritage, said people like gimmicks, particularly the French-Canadians of Lewiston and Auburn and southern and western Maine.

Parquette claims the Auto Center is New England's largest volume Volkswagen dealership. He said hard-sell advertising, not usually used by Volkswagen, pushed his firm's sales up from 100 cars to more than 700 in a year.

Marcel Moore is the turkey man of local dealers.

"We speak English, nous parlons Francais, but most of all we talk turkey," says Marcel as he stands next to a live turkey in a commercial. He also has a papier-mache turkey head standing by.

His large, plush showrooms and offices are designed to accommodate the buyer whom he says wants "a supermarket style of shopping."

Moore's ad budget is about $100,00 a year. "It is very, very expensive, but very, very difficult to live without," he said.

Heavy advertising is good for all dealers, according to Moore. Car buyers coming to the area know they will have a wide selection, he said.

Moore began his "turkey advertising" five years ago. He said the early ads, which featured a live turkey on truck bed, were not as sophisticated as his current ads. He appears in all of his commercials.

He is sometimes ridiculed for his slogans, but said he's willing to pay the price of passersby calling out, "gobble gobble," or describing him as "a turkey."

"But at least they know who I am. 95 percent of the people who walk into my showroom ask, 'Are you ready to talk turkey?'" he remarked.

And, said the French-accented Moore, French-speaking people are grateful that someone will understand them when they come in.

Steve Cardelli, known as the "sticker smasher," found hazards in commercials where he demolished car windshields to show his willingness to slash prices.

Pranksters shattered the windows of his personal car more than once.

Cardelli said the troubles are outweighted by instant recognition on the street.

His ads started the trend about six years ago and other dealers soon found they needed an identity, Cardelli said. "Everyone wanted to jump on the bandwagon."

He described Lewiston-Auburn as "very competitive, more aggressive than most of the markets in the state of Maine."

Neither the dealers nor state officials have statistics on car sales in the area. Many of the Lewiston-Auburn auto businesses said Portland, with more people, more dealers and more money, probably outsells them, but the two cities are holding strong.

Although Lewiston-Auburn dealers appear to out-advertise their Portland and Bangor counterparts, the area is probably not the car capital of Maine, said Shepard Lee.

Lee has a glassed office over looking a quarter-mile stretch of car lots in Auburn, selling several makes of domestic and foreign cars, trucks and recreational vehicles.

Lee's businesses use a soft-sell approach.

A bonus for many area businesses, he said, is their size. He said the longer volume dealers can sell at lower prices and are more likely to bring buyers from a wide area.

Lee has been featured in many of his own commercials, standing in car lots, and said he finds it difficult to appear natural before the camera.

"The car business is a more personal kind of business. The buyer likes to recognize the dealer," said Lee, who sold 4,000 vehicles last year.

Les Emerson owns Louis Chevrolet of Lewiston, whose ads say "You'll love Louis."

Emerson described the Lewiston-Auburn area as "over-shopping malled, over-banked, and probably over-dealered."

Competition has strengthened in the two cities, he said, as small auto dealerships closed in the small surrounding communities in Androscoggin and Oxford counties.

The dealers have built expensive showrooms, have millions of dollars in cars on their lots, and have to work harder to support their investments, he said.

Moore contended that despite the heavy advertising and stiff competition, the dealers believe the buyer comes first.

"The last thing on our mind is sticking it to the customer. He is our bread and butter," Moore said.

UNH indoor trackmen outweigh UM 82-53

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — The University of New Hampshire indoor track team capitalized on the Minutemen's ineptitude in the weight events and pole vault, as it easily defeated UMass Saturday, 82-53. For UNH mentor John Copeland it was his first victory against coach Ken O'Brien's squad since 1968.

"We have to be realistic," said Copeland, "UMass was without several of its top performers who could have determined the outcome of the meet. However, we had several outstanding performances from our weightmen and several distance men, which we are very happy about."

The bulk of the UMass scoring was achieved in the jumping events and through the efforts of the quarter milers. Providing 37 points to the Minutemen's final tally were the triple jumpers, long jumpers, high jumpers and the 440 yard dash and mile relay men.

Brady Mayer registered the first UMass points in the triple jump with a leap of 44' 4½" and a three inch victory over the effort of teammate Bruce Parsons. Parsons doubled in the long jump for another runner-up position (21'3") as John Slepetz of UMass copped first place with a leap of 21'8".

Freshman Don Dowden was victorious in the high jump as his clearance over 6'3" bettered the performance of teammate Mark Thompson, who tied for second at 6'1".

The formidable quarter mile crew supplied the Minutemen with its only sweep of the contest as Rich Thompson led the assault on the first three positions in the quarter with his winning time of 53.6. Gerry Herman and Rich Hanshuch shared the next two positions as they crossed the finish line together in 54.7.

In a surprise conclusion in the two mile, Wildcat Gary Crossan bested cross country performers Lou Panaccione, Mike Morris and Mike Quinn with an impressive time of 9:03.7. Panaccione finished second in 9:07.6, with Morris garnering third in 9:13.

Other scorers for the MInutemen included Steve Lafler (3rd in the mile), freshman Rich Cady (2nd in the 60 yard dash), Fran O'Keefe, (2nd in the 1000 yard run) and Mickey Baugh (2nd in the 600).

"I'm somewhat surprised at the UNH team," commented O'Brien. "They're deceptively strong. They don't have any outstanding performers but have good depth in every area. I'm surprised they looked so good after looking so bad earlier in the year against Connecticut."

The next meet for UMass is tomorrow against Dartmouth at Hanover, New Hampshire, with the Yankee Conference Championships less than two weeks away on February 19.

Net classic at Springfield

By JIM GOMES
Collegian Staff

Thirty-two top international tennis stars will put their talents on display as they vie for the top prizes in men's singles and doubles at the $75,000 Springfield International Tennis Classic to be held today through Sunday at the Springfield Civic Center.

The tournament promises to provide the Greater Springfield area with exciting tennis over the week, even though many of the world's top stars are missing from the draw. There will be no Bjorn Borg, Jimmy Connors, or Guillermo Vilas in Springfield. Also absent from the field are the five other players who took part in last month's Colgate Grand Prix Masters tournamen held at Madison Square Garden in New York City (Brian Gottfried, Raul Ramirez, Eddie Dibbs, Manuel Orantes, and Roscoe Tanner).

The world's top 10 players have skipped the Springfield event, either opting for a week of rest or to compete in the $175,000 St. Louis Tennis Classic.

Despite the absence of the world's top ten pros, tournament officials are pleased with the field. Harold Solomon of Silver Springs, Maryland heads the list of the eight seeded players.

The Classics tournament director Ed Hickey expressed his pleasure with the players competing. "I'm very pleased with the Springfield field as a whole and especially with the list of seeds — our seeded players include two of the Wimbledon winners in the last seven years, Jan Kodes (5th seed), in 1973 and Stan Smith (2nd seed) in 1971.

Solomon, dubbed by tennis commentator Bud Collins of the Boston Globe as the "human backboard" was ranked fourth in the United States and sixteenth in the world in 1977. His most impressive performances last year were victories in the Western Open in Cincinnati and at the Belgium Open in Brussels. "Solly" also played well in the US Open losing to a red-hot Vilas 6-2, 7-6, 6-2, in the semifinals.

Third-seeded Jeff Borowiak, a Californian, is also a prohibitive favorite to win the Springfield title. Borowiak enjoyed his best season as a professional, winning the Gstaad (Sweden) Open and the Canadian Open defeating Chilean Jaime Fillol 6-0, 6-1 in the final.

In doubles, Smith and his partner Bob Lutz (4th seed in singles) are the favorites. Smith and Lutz are the United States' finest doubles pair and are currently ranked third in the world. Dating back to 1968, Smith and Lutz have been recognized as one of the finest combinations in the world when they helped the US team recapture the Davis Cup from Australia.

If you want to attend the Tennis Classic, tickets are available at the Springfield Civic Center Box Office and at all Ticketron locations. Saturday night's semifinal and Sunday's final are 60 per cent sold, as of last week.

Tournament times are scheduled as follows: day sessions Monday through Thursday begin at 10 a.m.; all evening sessions, Monday through Saturday, begin at 7 p.m.; Friday's quarter-final day session is at 1 p.m.; Saturday's day semifinal is at 2 p.m.; and Sunday's finals begin at 1 p.m.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6

Born today, you are sentimental, and may have trouble keeping sentiment from distorting reality. You tend to see things as you wish, rather than as they are. You often fail to prepare adequately for upcoming circumstances, and thus, though you may never fail badly, you may never have the success you could.

You will bend over backwards for those whom you like. Unfortunately your opinion of what is right for them is sometimes not theirs, and with the best intentions you may work against the interest of those whom you think you are helping. You are artistic and sociable, and might benefit by confining your efforts to perfecting your gifts and indulging your nature, so that you do others little harm and yourself much good.

Although you try to impress others with your open nature, honest character, and good intentions, you sometimes lead them to think you affectionate but clumsy. Ultimately, you may appear hardworking and success-oriented, but it will take long, patient plodding. That you are willing to put in that time is much to your credit!

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Rediscover another's intellectual qualities to reaffirm and old friendship. Question directly.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) – Another's negative aspects may cause trouble early today. Be content to reach half the day's goals.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Reciprocate another's good will. Gain another's affection through direct, kind action.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your compatibility with children makes it easy to lead the young in a new search for goals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – This is not time to show a passionate nature. Allow emotion only a modicum of expression.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Seek a companion on your cultural and intellectual level. Much can be done when two work as one.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) – Admiration for those you think clever may cause personal loss. Don't expecte something for nothing!

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) – Your sensitivity may rebel at an assignment requiring you to "rough it." Seek advice from higher-ups.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Don't take a professional opinion lightly. You can benefit from another's profit; ask for your share.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Use your talent as a good mixer to benefit all involved in a personal partnership.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) -- You may not want to put out new effort to make a good partnership. Bide your time.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) – Appeal to another's generosity to share his recent benefits.

face-off circle area that caught the far right hand corner of the Chargers' net.

The UMies went up 5-0 at 10:51 when Mark Ferragamo took a pass on right wing from Bill Estes on left wing and pulverized an 18 foot slap shot that snuck inside the right post.

Dave Hargather ruined Riley's chance for a shut out at 15:43 when he poked home the puck during a goalmouth scramble.

Jamie Benelli powdered a screaming 50 foot slap shot at 8:33 with Don Boyle in the sin bin for interference, and Peters poked home a goalmouth scramble goal past Blaikie

The third period became the period for switching goalies, but for different reasons. Bob Kelly replaced Bob Blaikie because coach Stephen Lane feared a football score and Paul McCann replaced John Riley because Riley earned the rest with only 5 minutes left in the game.

The Chargers' Tom Dillon scored on a 10 foot wrist shot at 1:34 of the third period and Jay Leach added another New Haven goal at 15:03 to cut the UMass lead to 7-3, but that was as close as the Chargers would come.

Rich Riccioli scored his first goal of the season 20 seconds after Leach's goal to give UMass an 8-3 lead.

Merwomen set marks but drown in meet

By LAURA FRANK
Collegian Staff

Saturday's women's swim meet against New England champion Springfield College was a meet that you'd wish did not have a final score. UMass left it's mark at the Art Linkletter Natatorium, however, as pool records were broken and personal goals reached. The final score was UMass 44, Springfield 87.

Deb Shwartz shattered the pool record in the 200 yard butterfly by six seconds. She also beat former New England champion Bonnie Morse in the 400 yard individual medley to give UMass a first place. Schwartz made it three in a row when she won the 200 yard individual medley with a record setting time of 2:22.1.

Coach John Nunnelly said, "to break a pool record at a school like Springfield is a real feat."

Schwartz has now qualified for five events in the New England championships.

Lynn Lutz swam an outstanding comeback race in the 500 yard freestyle. She placed second with a time of 5:54.6 Sue Hoffman finished third in that event.

Another personal best time was achieved by Celia Walsh who swam the 100 yard butterfly in a fast 1:04.0, capturing second place. Walsh also finished third in the 200 yard butterfly.

Springfield finished first and second in the 100 yard breaststroke, but Nai-yu Wang gave UMass a third place in both the 100 and 200 yard breastroke events.

Co-captain Rachel Mack swam a 2:07.6 and finished third in the 200 yard freestyle. She also placed third in the 100 yard freestyle.

Diver Chris Bullard gave an outstanding performance in both the optional and required diving events. Bullard racked up a total of 180.6 points and a first place finish in the optionals, and with a total of 133.10 points, Bullard placed second.

A first place finish and best time of the season, 3:55.1, was captured by the 400 yard freestyle relay of Schwartz, Walsh, Lise Hembrough, and Mack.

"I'm very pleased," said Nunnelly. "Although the score may not reflect our swimming, there were many personal best timms, which endorses our performance against Bridgewater State, in which we had 14 best times."

NUMBER ONE — That's what sophomore Deb Schwartz was in the 400 yard individual medley, the 200 yard butterfly, and the 200 yard individual medley at the women's swim team meet at Springfield College Saturday. In winning the last two races, Schwartz set new pool records. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Wrestlers bombed twice

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

Things happen in circles. After enough failures, you can at least look forward to success. The theory also works in reverse...

The UMass wrestling team took on Mass Maritime and Montclair State in weekend action, and despite the recent upswing of the Minutemen they found themselves blown off the face of Falmouth, site of the tri-meet.

"We were absolutely terrible," said coach Dave Amato yesterday. "Saturday was the worst the team has been all year."

Statistically, the Minutemen lost to Mass. Maritime 30-9 and were then embarrassed by Montclair State 32-6. To make matters worse, Montclair actually shut out UMass, giving up six forfeit points in the final match to save a wrestler for the Mass. Maritime meet.

It is by now a well-known fact that UMass is weak in the upper weight classes, but their real problems seemed to be in the two lighter weights on Saturday. The original plan was to have Tony Perry wrestle at 118 pounds and Dana Rasmussen at 126 pounds, but when the smoke had cleared it was Perry who went at 126 pounds and freshman Rich Schriazzi found himself competing at 118 pounds.

"Give Schriazzi a lot of credit," commented Amato, "he did a pretty good job filling in."

Both Rasmussen and Perry are billed as 118 pound grapplers but have been alternating between 118 and 126 pounds this season. Rasmussen was "too sick to wrestle" on Saturday and Perry could not make weight; necessitating the switch of the latter to 126 pounds and the inclusion of Schriazzi at 118.

"We have a meet with New Hampshire Wednesday night and I don't know if Perry or Rasmussen plan on getting down to weight," said Amato. "I think maybe I'll wrestle off Rich Schriazzi and Dave Daly for that spot, that's all."

The only bright spots for UMass over the ill-fated weekend were Charley Rigoglioso, who came back from an injury last week to win his match at 142 pounds and John Allen, who won a heavyweight decision; both against Mass. Maritime.

"I don't want to make excuses," said the coach. "Maybe we were just plain tired from having eight meets in a week. I gave the team Sunday off, but I really yelled at them after the tri-meet."

The next UMass action is against UNH, Wednesday night at Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Hopefully the beleaguered coach will have ten wrestlers both mentally and physically able to compete.

★ Hoopmen down WVU

UMass increased its lead to 65-61 on two Derick Claiborne hoops, but then Alex Eldridge and Eric Williams both missed opportunities to put the game away by missing foul shots with less than one minute to play.

The Mountaineers then cut the lead to 67-65 on two bombs from the outside from the starting backcourt pair of Lowes Moore (14 pts.) and Joe Fryz.

And with no time remaining on the clock, but one-half second remaining in the game, WVU had a chance to send the game into overtime, but squandered it, when Moore tossed a half-court inbounds pass over the head of Robinson.

"We were lucky to get out of this one alive," remarked UMass coach Jack Leaman. "Instead of moving the ball inside and getting the lead up to 25, we fooled around, and before you know it the tempo changed. It almost cost us the ballgame."

When the Minutemen did elect to move the ball inside they were unable to capitalize due to the off shooting nights of Mark Haymore, Mike Pyatt and Eric Williams. Although the starting front court contributed 36 points, they hit only 14 of 37 attempts from the floor. UMass hit just 46 per cent — 28 for 61 — of its shots in the game.

The outcome may have been different but for the play of Kohlhaas who scored seven seconds half points (11 for the game) and re-emerged as a factor in UMass' offensive play.

"We haven't played a 40 minute game yet this season," lamented WVU coach Joedy Gardner. "We settled down and played and showed tremendous character in coming back. But it was just not quite good enough to win."

MINUTEMAN RIM SHOTS.... Mike Pyatt needs just 40 points to establish himself as UMass' all-time career scoring leader. Julius Erving currently holds the school record having scored 1370 points in just two seasons. Alex Eldridge, with his ten assists, increased his position as the leading assist man in the EAA. He has been averaging better than seven assists per-game. Entering this week's play, Mark Haymore lead the EAA in field goal percentage with a .745 accuracy mark... UMass has ten games remaining on its schedule, six against EAA teams.

★ Kohlhaas

Several reasons were attributed to the West Virginia comeback. UMass forward Mike Pyatt and center Mark Haymore did not have exceptional shooting nights.

Eldridge, who had been so brilliant in last Thursdays 77-76 upset over Holy Cross scored only seven points as his driving up the middle especially in the second half was limited.

West Virginia, who had earlier in the first half, had an unusual number of turnovers, ten to be exact, calmed down and set up nicely. Maurice Robinson, the senior 6-7 center scored 14 second half points, with a good number of offensive tap ins.

"I'm proud of the way our kids played in the second half," said WVU coach Joedy Gardner. "We decided to take it inside a little more, get our guards to shoot more often, and put more defensive pressure on Pyatt and Haymore. It worked."

When the Mountaineers finally pulled ahead 59-58 with 6:12 left in the game, it was a combination of Kohlhaas and UMass guard Derick Claiborne who saved UMass from an embarrassing defeat.

Kohlhaas, substituting for Williams, came in the second half at the 12:15 mark and within a span of seven minutes, hit three jumpers at the top of the key, grabbed three rebounds, and blocked a shot. When WVU had taken the lead, Kohlhaas then scored a three point play and UMass never trailed after that.

Scoring eight second half points, mostly from the top of the key, Claiborne controlled the tempo of play for the last three minutes of the game, who along with Eldridge, dribbled for long stretches of time, maintaining UMass possession of the ball.

"We didn't play a great game tonight. At times we were sloppy and lackadaiscal. For us to play well, we have to play with intensity, and we're going to need it to beat Rutgers Tuesday night Claiborne said.

Gymwomen tumbled

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

Many former members of UMass women's gymnastics teams graced the Curry Hicks Cage yesterday, but solid performances by present UMass gymnasts could not be found. Ninth ranked (nationally) Michigan State University upset the seventh ranked Minutewomen 141.35 to 135.45 to dampen the homecoming spirit.

"Michigan State came into the meet really psyched after being upset by UNH on Friday and were ready for the meet," explained UMass coach Virginia Evans. "We lacked spirit out there today and I was disappointed with our overall performance".

MSU won all four events and grabbed the top two all around positions as the Minutewomen fell behind early in the meet with lower than usual vaulting scores. The gymwomen have been averaging 35.35 in the event but could only manage 33.9 against Michigan State.

Coleen Thorton, Sue Cantwell, Stephanie Jones and Karen Hemberger turned in the top four scores for UMass but injuries appeared to be a problem. Thorton and Jones are still recovering from injuries incurred earlier this season and Hemberger jammed her knee during warm ups against Michigan State. Debbie Law received praise from Evans on a "much improved Yamishita vault."

UMass looked stronger on the bars but still lost the event 34.40 to 35.15. Jean Anderson received a 7.40 for a counting score. Evans said that Cantwell and Jones had "good routines but not their usual strong performances." Hemberger was working with a modified routine and still received a 9.0. Former UMass gymnast Pam Steckroat took top honors for MSU with a 9.15 mark.

The balance beam was again a weak spot for the Minutewomen. Laurie Knapp continued to excell on the beam, earning an 8.25 for her efforts. But, her teammates were less fortunate. Thorton was penalized for running past the time limit, Jones lost her rhythm and fell off, Julie Myers suffered two falls, as did Sue Cantwell who has been Minutewomen's most consistant beam performer this season. MSU won the event 35.05 to 32.50.

Michigan State also won the floor exercise on strong tumbling performances by Laurie Boes and Steckroat. Cantwell tied with Steckroat for first place with a 9.10. Debbie Smith and Myers drew praise from Evans for strength and continuity. Jones turned in the fourth counting score with an 8.65.

Beth Eigel of MSU won the all around honors with a four event total of 35.70. Steckroat was second, followed by Jones and Cantwell with totals of 35.25, and 34.35, respectively. Hemberger was scratched from the beam and floor exercises and was scored in only two events.

UM wins 2 over weekend

Icemen rip Merrimack in OT

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

David has slain Goliath once again!

The UMass Minutemen hockey team played David last Friday night at Orr rink, as they took their 5-6-1 record and stuck it to the 11-2 Merrimack Warriors, the defending Division II champs, 7-6 in sudden-death overtime before 1,000 vivacious fans.

The Minutemen six made the weekend even sweeter with a convincing 8-3 victory over the University of New Haven on Saturday night, also at Orr rink.

The two wins pushed the UMies over the .500 mark for the second time this year (7-6-1), but more importantly the Minutemen are undefeated in 1978 with a 4-0-1 record.

What a difference an intersession makes!

"The seniors waited four years for a victory over Merrimack and this might have been the last time they'll play them. It couldn't have been a more exciting game," said UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff.

UMass forward John Peters, who scored a three goal hat trick, knocked home a 15 foot overtime goal from the slot past Merrimack's Gilles Moffet (number one goaltender in Division II last year) at 7:08 and suddenly the Minutemen realized that they were giant killers.

"It was my biggest game ever," said Peters, "but I want to add that it was a team victory."

"The way we're flying now," said UMass center iceman Lincoln Flagg, "we feel we can beat anybody in this league."

Flagg's words are justifiable because the Minutemen have now knocked off Babson, Holy Cross, Merrimack and New Haven in succession.

The Merrimack victory wasn't easy, as the Minutemen had to battle back from 5-2 and 6-4 deficits to pull out the win.

In the first period, the Minutemen squandered an early 2-0 lead and allowed the Warriors to skate off the ice with a 3-2 lead.

The UMies began the period with the same intensity that they had against Holy Cross. Bill Estes took a pass from Flagg in the early moments of the period and slammed a 12 foot slap shot along the ice that slipped inside the right post past Moffet at 2:03.

Mark Ferragamo upped the lead to 2-0, as he blasted a 60 foot power play goal past Moffet after taking passes from Flagg and Dean Liacos at 5:30. Ferragamo's goal came just 26 seconds after Merrimack's Dean Fraser had been sent to the sin bin for elbowing.

Just when it appeared the UMies were going to blow the Warriors out of Orr rink, they came back with the poise of an 11-2 team (Division II record) with 3 unanswered goals.

Jim Toomey proved "why" he was rookie of the year last year, as he contributed two of the three goals to knot the game at 2.

DEFENSE EN MASSE — is what the Minutemen used to thwart this Merrimack scoring effort in Friday's thrilling overtime victory. Goalie John Riley, sprawled among his teammates, has been a tower of strength in goal for the 7-6-1 hockey forces. (Don Sandstrom photo)

He poked home a goal in front of UMass goalie John Riley at 7:57 after Randy Curran and Brian Bullock had fired shots at Riley. Toomey scored again three minutes later on a 10 foot wrist shot in which Riley was screened.

Ron Doherty put the Warriors ahead at 14:58 when he converted a pass from Bob Magnuson in the left corner and flipped the puck into the upper right corner past Riley.

The second period was a complete reversal of the first period, as Merrimack started out fast and UMass finished strong.

The Warriors played like it was their turn to blow UMass out of Orr rink, as they scored 2 quick goals in the early moments of the middle stanza which increased their lead to 5-2.

Greg Walker took a pass from Murray Scudder and beat Riley at 7:40 and Randy Curran flicked a 25 foot wrist shot 1:11 later to give Moffet and the Warriors a comfortable 5-2 lead.

But the Minutemen didn't give up. Just when it appeared the UMies were ready to throw in the towel, Peters sparked some fire of hope at 10:14 when he whizzed a 10 foot wrist shot past Moffet.

Peters scored his second goal of the game 50 seconds later when he broke in all alone on Moffet, faked to Moffet's left and wheeled the puck around Moffet and tucked it in the net to cut the Warriors' lead to 5-4.

When Murray Scudder tucked a goal past Riley after emerging from behind the net at 5:45 of the third period, it appeared the Warriors 6-4 lead would deflate the UMies desire, but it only inspired the pesky Minutemen.

Don Murphy, who has to be one of - Division II's finest playmakers, brought the puck into the zone and faked Moffet out of position, but lost the puck. Fortunately, an alert Bill White kept the puck alive by poking it out to the right point where Ron Valicenti slapped a 60 foot shot past a still out of position Moffet at 6:57.

Nick Carney, the tough Wayne Cashman cornerman for the Minutemen, powered home a goal in front of Moffet at 13:54 that tied the game at 6 and set the stage for Peter's overtime goal.

If there was any danger of a letdown after the stunning 7-6 victory over Merrimack Friday night,the Minutemen didn't show it, as they poured in six second period goals en route to an easy 8-3 victory over the University of New Haven at Orr rink, Saturday night.

Don Murphy scored the only goal of the first period, as he knocked in a Billy White rebound that had hit the post and ricocheted onto his stick, whereupon Murphy zipped the puck along the ice past the Charger's goalie Bob Blaikie. Murphy's goal came after only 26 seconds of play.

The Minutemen owned the second period as they outscored the Chargers 6-1 and walked off the ice with an insurmountable 7-1 lead.

Bill White started the goal parade in the second period, as the senior co-captain took a pass from Don Murphy and poked it past Blaikie at :42.

White scored his second goal of the game at 4:25 when he converted passes from brother Bob and Murphy and flipped the puck up and over an out of position Blaikie to give UMass a 3-0 lead.

Nick Carney upped the lead to 4-0 at 5:41 when he blasted a sizzling shot from the

The University of Massachusetts basketball team jumped out to an early 17 point first half lead and then held off a second half surge by West Virginia to defeat the Mountaineers 67-65 at the Cage Saturday night.

The victory upped UMass' record to 11-5, and 2-2 in the EAA, while West Virginia dropped to 7-11, and 3-5 in Eastern Eight play.

Playing at the Cage for the first time in 48 days, it appeared the Minutemen would treat the capacity crowd of 4200 fans — doors to the Cage were closed before seven o'clock — to an infrequent rout when they raced to a 26-9 lead with 8:35 remaining in the opening half.

But the Mountaineers steadily closed the gap, mainly due to the strong inside play of center Maurice Robinson (23 points, 10 rebounds) and forward Junius Lewis, and with 6:12 left they took the lead for the first time in the game, 59-58, on two Lewis foul shots.

It didn't take UMass long to recapture the lead, though, as Len Kohlhass, coming off the bench for the second straight game, hit for a three point play on the Minutemen's next trip down the floor to vault UMass into the lead at 61-59.

The Minutemen discovered two aspects about basketball following its narrow victory over West Virginia Saturday night 67-65, but it was a shame they had to do it the hard way.

Junior forward Len Kohlhaas, who had been benched in favor of the Holy Cross game hero Eric Williams, sparked the UMass victory with 11 points, seven of which came in the critical stages of the second half when the Mountaineers bounced back from a first half deficit of 17 points to retake the lead late in the second half.

Secondly, Jack Leaman's group learned, in almost embarrassing fashion, the meaning of the word intensity. Either sparked by an estimated 4600 UMass fans who crammed Curry Hicks Cage, or the latest Cage innovation of disco music warmup, the Minutemen came out like gangbusters outscoring West Virginia 21-7 in the first ten minutes of play.

UMass led by 12 at halftime 36-24, but coach Jack Leaman and guard Alex Eldridge knew the team was in trouble.

"Even though we had a 12 point lead," said Leaman, "I knew we had lost some of the spark we had earlier in the game. I told them that if we start fooling around we would be in trouble and that's what happened.

"We should have run them off the court by 30," said Eldridge. "We stopped running, slowed it down, and then struggled. Everybody was hesitating on their shots."

Professor Bill Mackey

Professor Mackey is a member of the faculty of the Afro-American studies department at City College in New York, and he brings to us a rich and varied background of experiences which students at UMass will find profoundly educational. Professor Mackey was educated as a structural engineer, a historical researcher, and a photojournalist. He has also been a political activist, an oral historian, a businessman, and a professional photographer among other things. His articles and photographs have been published in Liberation magazine, Architectual Forum, Black Creation Magazine, Impact, the Negro Almanac; his work is also in "The Eye of Conscience" a book of social documentary photography which was published in 1974.

Professor Mackey has just completed a 500 page manuscript on Black folk culture and Institutions in Camden County, Georgia, and he is presently working on a comprehensive study on the Southern chain gang prison system. He has also been featured in a two photo-documentary television specials on CBS and ABC, dealing with the Southeastern rural South. His photographs have had many exhibits, including an exhibit at the New Africa House gallery at UMass in 1973. Students who take his classes will get a first hand view of many events which have transpired in Black America over a span of the past 40 years. As an example, Professor Mackey knows and has worked with people such as Malcolm X, Paul Robeson, W.E.B. DuBois, Shirley Graham DuBois, J.A. Rodgers, the eminent Black historian, Shirley Chisolm, Percy Sutton, and many more people. From New York, he has had contact with many of the Black actors and actresses that we see gracing the screens these days including James Earl Jones, Lou Gossett, Moses Gunn, Gloria Foster, Robert Hooks, Douglass Turner Ward, and many others.

During W.W.II, he was in the military service, where he served as a first lieutenant in North Africa, Sicily England, France Belgium, Germany, and several other places. In 1943, Professor Mackey was involved in an incident in Louisiana which the military and the press chose not to make public, where Black troops took over a city in Louisiana called Alexandria and held it for three weeks as a result of the racism and brutality which was being inflicted on the Black troops of that area. Professor Mackey was one of the leaders and one of the negotiators for this group.

Question: The course, Black folk culture in the south will be based to a large extent on the material that Professor Mackey gathered for the manuscript that he did on Camden County, where he was born and spent his youth, over a period of some ten years. Why did you decide to do this particular bit of research on Camden County?

Mackey: First of all, the instigation for this whole thing started sometime around 1967-1968. I received a letter from my own and living maternal uncle, who is still living there; he has lived there for most of his life. The people in Scarlet Georgia were in the process of trying to build a new church edifice, and the community of course, like many Black rural southern communities didn't have too many resources. As a matter of fact, at that time the church only had sixty-five active members, but what they had done as he had stated in the letter was that they had formed a group taking the head of twelve of the oldest families, and using the biblical example they called themselves the twelve tribes of Israel.

They decided that the head of each one of these families would get in touch with member of that family throughout the United States, even throughout the world, and tell them what they were trying to do, and ask their financial support. That was what really got me started. Millions of people who are not familiar with the culture might not know that those who

Wilmington 10: The Fight Isn't Over

Reverend Ben Chavis and Angela Davis lead a past demonstration for freedom for the Wilmington 10 and all political prisoners

RALEIGH, N.C. — Reaction to politically ambitious Gov. James B. Hunt's "Wilmington 10" decision has been overwhelmingly negative.

Hunt sought to soften the impact of his "cannot and will not pardon these defendants" decision by reducing their sentences and urging an end to "the bitterness and rancor of the past."

But the state, national and international reactions of shock, anger, frustration, disappointment and pledges to fight on for justice, assured that the Wilmington 10 case will still haunt Gov. Hunt.

It's still going to be a legal and human rights thorn in the side of North Carolina, the nations and President Carter.

Lashing out at outsiders, Hunt told a televised audience, "I doubt if (my final decision) will satisfy those who have demanded a pardon or those who oppose any action...or those from outside who have criticized North Carolina and our system of justice."

Not once in his speech did Hunt discuss the main complaint of the Wilmington 10's backers: That they were convicted on trumped-up charges and that the state's key witnesses had recanted testimony, saying they had been coached by state prosecutors.

A typical reaction and indication of future plans came from Mrs. Anne Sheppard Turner, a white woman involved in the case but who is out on parole.

She was convicted in 1972 along with the nine black men on charges of arson and conspiracy to shoot at police and firemen during 1971 racial violence in Wilmington.

When she heard Hunt had reduced the arson sentences of the nine making it eight of them eligible for parole this year, and making the Rev. Ben Chavis eligible Jan. 1, 1980, she declared:

"We will make sure neither Hunt nor the people will forget the innocence of the Wilmington 10. We'll continue our efforts for full pardons of innocence, which we have alwasy maintained is the only way justice can be served."

They are now trying to get a new trial through an appeal in federal courts and have said they will ask President Carter and the U.S. Justice Department to intervene in their behalf.

Assistant U.S. Attorney General Drew S. Days III says the staff of the civil rights division has finished reviewing the case and is writing a report on the case.

"As far as we're concerned, last night was North Carolina's last opportunity to treat the Wilmington 10 fairly," said Rev. Chavis, leader of the group.

"The case quite frankly is squarely now in the lap of the president of the United States, President Jimmy Carter," he said. "We've heard much from our president during his first year in office, even during the State of the Union message, about human rights."

He said he would write Carter again this week.

"It is very hypocritical to criticize other countries about political prisoners when there are so many within the nation", he said.

The group has been adopted as political prisoners by Amnesty International.

All 10 served some of their sentences after the conviction and then weren't freed until 1976 when they returned to jail after appeals failed.

Hunt said politics was not a factor in his decision and that there was "no pressure" from the U.S. Justice Department or the White House for him to act one way or the other.

The chief attorney for the "10" said Hunt's refusal to pardon the civil rights workers "means that North Carolina has firmly rooted itself in the past — in racism and repression."

"My honest feeling is that the governor has really taken a step backward," said James E. Ferguson II.

"He indicated that he as governor has no intention of providing enlightened leadership jn the field of reforming the justice system."

"He may as well have done nothing and we will proceed as if he has done nothing," Ferguson said.

Mrs. Margaret Jacobs, mother of the defendant Jerry Jacobs said, "I just feel like he was very wrong because he didn't give those boys a fair deal."

"He didn't do anything at all as far as I am concerned."

"I feel like he's just making us that much stronger to keep on fighting and struggling."

The United Church of Christ, which provided bond money and legal fees for the group, said in a statement issued in New York it will continue to back the Wilmington 10.

"I am overcome with shock and pain and disappointment," said the Rev. Avery E. Post, president of the United Church of Christ.

"Gov. Hunt is evidently a consumate politician with respect to a part of his constituency, but he is grossly insensitive to the broader community of the United States and its interests and to the global society that knows there has been a violation of human and civil rights of the Wilmington 10."

"The United Church of Christ will not forsake the nine young men whom he has seen fit to hold in prison against the evidence of their innocence."

The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Cobb, director of the United Church of Christ's Commission for Racial Justice said, Hunt "has joined the long list of conspirators to sustain the conviction and keep incarcerated the Wilmington 10."

"It is hard to believe that Governor Hunt in the face of all the evidence proving the innocence of these young people could continue their incarceration."

"He made no basis for his decision. He has joined the conspiracy."

Cobb said, President Carter has not greater responsibility, including the Middle East, Panaman Canal or anywhere else in the whole world, than he has in this gross miscarriage of justice and human rights taking place in North Carolina, United States of America.

Jay Stroud of Gastonia, who has prosecuted the "10" said, "I think the governor's presentation was very effective. I do not violently disagree in any fashion with what the governor has done."

U.S. Attoney Mickey Michaux in Raleigh said he felt as a private citizen that Hunt "has made a grave error in his reasoning and in his position based on his reasoning."

Michaux, who is black, said he does not believe the group got a fair trial and that the sentences handed down were inequitable.

Mrs. Willie Vereen, mother of defendant Willie Earl Vereen said she expected her son to be freed and Hunt's speech "just tore me apart. I just don't know what's going to happen. We really don't think Hunt made the right decision."

Vereen's father said the justice system in North Carolina is at fault for putting the defendants behind bars in the first place. "I bet you they won't get out when their time comes," he added.

Etta Patrick, mother of defendant, Marvin Patrick, said she was not surprised by the decision because "I was not expecting him to pardon them."

"He did do a little more than I expected because I was expecting him to completly agree with the courts," Mrs. Patrick said. "I don't think its the end of it. It will never be ended until they are free."

Mrs. Elizabeth Chavis, mother of Ben Chavis, charged that her son was unjustly convicted and that Hunt was politically motivated in making his decision."

"It's very unjust," Mrs. Chavis said. "We'll hold to the fact they are innocent and they are victims of a mass North Carolina frameup."

She said the decision was political "because it was the unjust judicial system that convicted these innocent children. And then the governor is upholding the convictions."

Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md., head of the Congressional Black Caucus, said, "There's only one course of action for me to take in the future. Quite apart from the Wilmington 10 — of course we will continue to work for their release — but from this point on, I will have to oppose every human rights commitment that comes up in that Congress, even if the president proposes it, because we can no longer support human rights abroad and deny them at home."

Court Refuses Tyler Murder Case Review

Gary Tyler's 4-year struggle for justice received another setback last month when the Louisiana Supreme Court refused to review his conviction for murder.

The 20-year-old Black youth is serving a sentence of life imprisonment with hard labor at the state penitentiary in Angola, La. He was arrested in 1974 after a school desegregation incident at Destrehan High School near New Orleans resulted in the death of a white student. Tyler was convicted of murder and sentenced to death, but a Supreme Court ruling declaring Louisiana's death penalty unconstitutional led to a communication of that sentence.

Tyler's attorney Jack Peebles said he will appeal the Jan. 13 state court decision to the U.S. Supreme Court and ask for a new trial. Although the Louisiana Supreme Court said in its decision that the original jury instructions were wrong, it said there was not enough evidence of misconduct to review the case.

Tyler was 16 when a school bus in which he was riding was stoned by a white mob. After a gunshot killed a white youth, police searched the bus for the weapon. Tyler, who objected, was arrested for "interfering with the law" — a charge later changed to murder.

The gun "discovered" by police hours after the bus search bore no identifying fingerprints. The only other "evidence" against Tyler was the testimony of an eye-witness, a 14-year-old Black student, who later swore that she had lied on the stand after being threatened by the prosecutors. Tyler was convicted by an all-white jury after a 3-hour trial.

A motion for a new trial based on the perjury was denied last spring by Judge Ruche Marino, who had presided over the original trial.

Massive protests against the frame-up have called nationwide attention to the case. A multiracial defense committee plans future fundraising activities to support the drive to win Tyler's freedom.

Joanne Little Offered Bail of $50,000

NEW YORK (UPI) — The appellate division of State Supreme Court set $50,000 bail for North Carolina fugitive Joanne Little, pending the outcome of extradition proceedings.

Miss Little's attorney, William Kunstler, said he hoped to raise the $50,000 plus $1,000 cover bail on several local charges his client is facing.

In North Carolina, another attorney for Miss Little, Jerry Paul, said he will make public solicitations for the bond.

Paul added that he will contact people who contributed heavily to her defense campaign and some New York City churches who have supported her in the past.

The four-judge panel, sitting in Brooklyn, set the amount after Kunstler told them his client had shown up for every court appearance she had ever been ordered to attend and would do so in the future.

Assistant district attorney Linda McKay opposed the bail, saying Miss Little's escape from jail in North Carolina proved she was a poor bail risk.

The governor of North Carolina has asked Gov. Hugh Carey to grant an extradition warrant that would return Miss Little to that state.

Carey left last week for a short vacation in the Bahamas. He is expected back in the state this week.

A spokesman for Carey said no decision had been made yet and it was not known when the governor would act.

The spokesman said Carey has 90 days to decide the matter and about half the time has elapsed.

Miss Little has been fighting extradition, contending her life would be in danger if she were returnded to North Carolina.

Paul also claims that the legal papers he and Kunstler have filed against her extradition contain statements of a psychiatrist who says Miss Little is suffering a delayed reaction from her mother's death.

The psychiatrist said Miss Little is grieving for her mother but cannot respond to psychiatric help in North Carolina because of her negative feeling's toward the state's prison system.

A hearing on the extradition proceedings has been scheduled for Feb. 6, in Brooklyn.

Miss Little, 23, gained notoriety in 1975 with her acquital on charges of killing her white jailer. She returned to jail to finish the 7- to 10-year term she was serving for breaking and entering when the jailer was killed, but escaped Oct. 15 and was recaptured in New York Dec. 7.

She was arrested in Brooklyn by police after a high speed auto chase and was held without bail at Rikers Island.

She faces charges of reckless endangerment, assault and resisting arrest in New York.

Tough Embargo Urged Against South Africa

UNITED NATIONS — South African newspaper editor Donald Woods has called for oil, investment and other economic embargoes against his homeland and urged western powers to switch their money to black African states "where it can do even more good."

Woods, who escaped from South Africa last year to defy a banning order that prevented him from writing or speaking in public, said the United Nations should work for "ostracism of the Pretoria Regime."

"The whole issue now has assumed a deadly urgency," Woods told the security council. "My concern now is for the preservation of peace in South Africa."

Woods asked all the nations of the world to apply economic sanctions and a full range of psychological pressures to "help save South Africa from the horrors of a civil war."

"I have to tell you that the level of black anger in my country today is so high, and the determination of most white voters — as illustrated in the recent all-white election — to resist fair compromose is so strong, that both sides are on a collision course towards a racial civil war," Woods said.

"Unless there is concerted action by the world community, such a tragedy is a real probability."

Woods named the United States, France, West Germany, Canada and Britain specifically in his speech, delivered before a packed Security Council chamber.

He said the western powers' first priority in opposing South Africa's apartheid policies of racial separation should be "an immediate policy of disengagement, disengagement from diplomatic, cultural, sporting, trade, military, investment and general economic ties now existing."

Woods, 44-year-old editor of the East London Daily Dispatch, was banned by the South African government last October during a crackdown on both black and white opponents of apartheid.

He fled to neighboring Lesotho.

The Security Council voted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa last November.

Many black African nations have contended the action will have little effect on the Pretoria government and have demanded complete economic sanctions.

Total ostracism of South Africa would force Prime Minister John Vorster's government to negotiate with black leaders, Woods said, and allow "most of my countrymen...at last to see the dawn of liberty in that unhappy land."

Journalists Arrested In South Africa

JOHANNESBURG — Five foreign correspondents and two local black photographers have been arrested in the township of Soweto by policemen carrying automatic rifles.

After about two hours the journalists were released, however, the two photographers were still believed to be in detention.

The photographers under dentention were Leonard Kumalo of the Post Newspaper and Willie Nkosi of the Rand Daily Mail.

The foreign correspondents were identified as Larry Heinzerling, Johannesburg bureau chief of the Associated Press, Mitchell Osborne of the same agency, Pierre Haski of Agence France-Presse, John Roberts of the Voice of America and Ettor Botta of United Press International.

The reporters had been covering a meeting at the St. Francis of Assisi Anglican Church, at which black leaders urged students to continue a classroom boycott when secondary schools reopen in the township next month.

As the journalists left the meeting, they were surrounded by policemen and ordered to drive under escort to a police station outside the township.

The journalists say they were not told why they had been detained.

Bishop Walks Out On Rhodesian Talks

SALISBURY, Rhodesia — Black nationalist leader Bishop Abel Muzorewa walked out of the Rhodesian settlement talks Friday, accusing the government delegation of insulting him and being the negotiations to the brink of collapse.

At the end of a 90-minute meeting between Prime Minister Ian Smith and the three black delegations seeking to iron out last minute "snags", Muzorewa said in a statement:

"My delegation and I walked out on the constitutional negotiations today in utter disgust after being met with complete intransigence by the government delegation on the question of a common (voters) roll."

He said that during the past eight weeks of talks any difference among himself, Smith, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole and Chief Jeremiah Chirau were always resolved.

"But today our stand on the common roll was met with extremely abusive language from the government delegation," the bishop said.

Earlier, sources close to the negotiations said they expected the settlement agreement to be signed at the weekend or early this week.

Muzorewa gave no immediate indication if he was willing to go back to the conference table with Smith, but said: "Insults or no insults, the UANC (United African National Council which he leads) means to achieve the transfer of power from the minority to the majority."

The bishop said it was "this abusive language which triggered off our walkout. My delegation and I were insulted and our integrity questioned."

The settlement talks had been held in a spirit of "give and take."

"This does not mean we will take everything advanced by the government. We will certainly not take the government's insults, especially when for 87 years the black man has been on the receiving end of white insults," Muzorewa said.

In Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania, guerilla leader Robert Mugabe warned earlier that a settlement between Smith and the three moderate black leaders would lead to civil war between Rhodesia's blacks.

Chile Junta Renews BRUTAL Repression

By Judy Butler

Chile's military dictatorship, out of the international spotlight after last month's rigged referendum is moving to brutally crush resistance to its rule.

More than 300 people have been arrested since the Jan. 4 vote "legitimizing" the Pinochet's rule, according to radio reports. Lest any Chileans doubt the goals of this new wave of intimidation, four bodies minus their head and hands were left to be discovered in Santiago last week with a note attached. The note, signed by a self-proclaimed new Death Squad of DINA agents, threatened similar fate for any others who would oppose the current regime.

Similar extralegal squads under military control have become a standard feature of dictatorial regimes throughout Latin America. They carry out the most illegitimate but necessary methods of thwarting mass resistance — both the annihilation of known opposition forces and the arbitrary violence against uninvolved or merely sympathetic people.

LEFTISTS MACHINEGUNNED

Last week two members of the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) — Trevira Moreno and German Cortes — were killed in Santiago. Cortes, a member of the Central Committee was a priest who had a long history of work in the slums and shanty towns of the country. The two were machinegunned in the street.

A week earlier, the junta arrested 12 prominent political opponents and exiled them to remote mountain villages.

In the days preceding Gen. Augusto Pinochet's hastily called plebescite from "international aggression," masses of people took to the streets of Santiago to protest the electoral farce. Temporarily caught in his own public relations contradiction, Pinochet allowed the demonstrations to continue, arresting numerous leafleters but releasing them within hours.

In the past four years there had been continual signs that the resistance was growing, but the demonstrations in early January were the first mass protests inside Chile. Internationally, opposition continues unabated.

Namibia

Racist propaganda

As South Africa moves to impose a neocolonial settlement in Namibia, the apartheid regime has stepped up its propaganda effort inside the occupied territory. The ideological drive is aimed principally at separating the South-West African People's Organization [SWAPO] from its mass base of support. Following are excerpts from a recent SWAPO report, "The Last Kicks of a Dying Horse," which analyzes Pretoria's escalating propaganda offensive.

While South Africa talks of negotiations and a "peacful solution," it is continuing to consolidate its armed occupation of the country. Its complete refusal to withdraw its 50,000 troops from Namibia indicates its commitment to preventing a SWAPO victory even through the ballot box.

Now the latest South African offensive in Namibia is a massive propaganda campaign against SWAPO. This takes many forms, but is centered on three basic lines of attack: the promotion of racism and tribalism, a new-found and totally unconvincing South African attachment to the democratic process and the age-old communist scare.

FORCE AND INTIMIDATION

The tactics used are those of force and intimidation, with South African soldiers both spreading anti-SWAPO propaganda and perpetuating atrocities for which they blame SWAPO "terriorists." Anonymous leaflets and propaganda tracts regularly flood the black locations, farms and reserves. Anti-SWAPO comic books, written in several Namibian languages, have covers depicting an armed African gunning down a white priest.

Leaflets show SWAPO president Sam Nujoma and Daniel Tjongarero, SWAPO vice-chairman, with lions' heads, devouring little children. SWAPO publicity materials are, on the other hand, banned if they are not produced inside Namibia.

The latest series of pamphlets is geared towards the proposed elections in 1978 and concentrate on the accusation that SWAPO fears an election because it does not have the support of the poeple of Namibia. The so-called violence of SWAPO is contrasted with the so-called peace of the Turnhalle (puppet constitutional conference).

"SWAPO is communist," "Support the Turnhalle and not the country of communism," read the posters, long after the Turnhalle conference (aimed at dividing Namibia into 11 bantustans) is supposed to have been disolved. SWAPO is being depicted as murderous, terroristic, bloodthirsty, undemocratic, corrupt, directionless, leaderless, and at the mercy of its "communist masters" in Russia and Cuba.

"RED MENACE" BACKFIRES

One leaflet shows SWAPO president Sam Nujoma groveling at (Cuban President Fidel) Castro's feet; Castro is armed with Soviet weapons. "Who is going to pay for all the Soviet arms and how will it be paid for? It is we who will have to pay for it with our own blood." "Terror and death is the only way of the leaders of SWAPO and their communist comrades."

South Africa's attempt to use the image of the red menace to cajole the Namibian people into supporting its Turnhalle puppets and opposing SWAPO has, however, backfired. In the words of one Namibian. "South Africa tells us that SWAPO is communist. But we know that SWAPO is fighting for the liberation of the Namibian people. If that is communism then we are all for it."

Black Lawyers Win Prison Rights

The Mississippi chapter of the National Conference of Black Lawyers (NCBL) and NCBL attorney John Walker have won a federal lawsuit challenging the racist, inhumane conditions in Jackson County Jail, Mississippi.

On Dec. 7, the U.S. District Court in Jackson ordered the county sheriff to complete a new jail designed to replace the existing facility. The new structure must be completed on or before Sept. 15, 1978, "with all the equipment in place ready for use and operation," according to the court ruling.

The ruling also requires that a Prisoner Rights list be posted where inmates "have ready and easy access thereto."

The Prisoner Rights list includes: the right to adequate and proper medical care; no segretation or transfer on the basis of race; reasonable visitation rights by family members, relatives and attorneys; proper diet under sanitary conditions, and uncensored communications.

Lawyers Link Bakke, ATT Preferences Suit

WASHINTON — Some lawyers are speculating that the U.S. Supreme Court has been slow to act on challenges to an American Telephone and Telegraph affirmative action plan because the justices see a link with the Allan Bakke "reverse discrimination" case.

A union attorney said, "Both cases involve preferential treatment to non-victims of discrimination."

Bakke, an unsuccessful white applicant to a California medical school, won a state Supreme Court decision that his rights were violated by a special admissions program reserving places for disadvantaged minorities.

Three labor unions — Communications Workers of America International, Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Alliance of Independent Telephone Unions — are challenging the AT and T plan adopted in 1973 under government pressure.

The consent degree was described by a federal judge at the time as the "largest and most impressive civil rights' settlement" in history.

But the unions representing 700,000 workers, said promotion preferences it gives to women, blacks and other minorities violate seniority rights guaranteed in contracts and amount to a form of reverse discrimination.

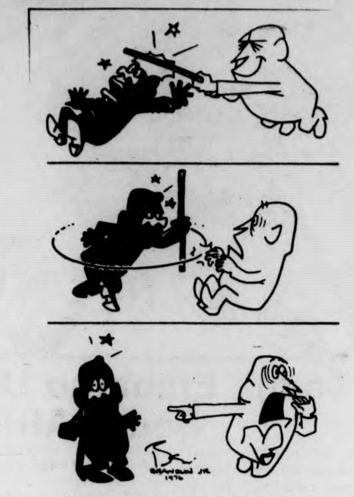
IBEW lawyer Elihu Leifer said it is possible the court is holding the case for a Bakke decision because it sees some connection between the two. The fact that the unions' appeal, filed in August, has not yet been acted on, at least may be an indication one or more justices are interested, he said.

"I think the court is ready to issue a full-blown decision of its own on the merits of the issue of remedial quotas," said Leifer, who thinks the unions "have a stronger case than Bakke."

Abraham Weinter, lawyer for the Alliance said he does not think the court sees a legal link with Bakke.

"This case involves a seniority clause in a collective bargaining agreement and I think the Bakke case is of much wider application," he said.

The "reverse discrimination" aspect of the AT and T case, "Has some connection with Bakke," he agreed. "But the U.S. Supreme Court could rule against Bakke and still rule in our favor."



"REVERSE DISCRIMINATION"

Important Notice: The organizational meeting of Nummo News will be held at 7:00 P.M. Wednesday, in the Nummo News Office - room 103 New Africa House. Everyone is invited.

11th World Youth Festival

Preparations are now underway for the 11th World Festival of Youth and Students to take place in Cuba this coming summer. From July 28 through August 5th, 1978, Havana will become the home of thousands of Youth from more than 140 countries.

The first Youth Festival, held in Prague shortly after WWII, was attended by young people from more than 70 countries. This first festival, as all those which have followed, served to strengthen the cooperation and commitment to anti-imperialist solidarity, peace, and friendship.

Young people from the U.S. representing diverse Student and Youth organizations have participated in the festival movement since its beginning. This year the U.S. delegation will join with delegations from across the world in proclaiming the rights of young people everywhere; for decent jobs, and free, quality education; for democratic rights; for true equality for all peoples; for genuine expressions of our cultures; for peace and an end to imperialist aggression — and for the right to shape a confident future for our sons and daughters.

The program for the festival is still being formulated but will include: an "international concert of festival meetings", meetings of folk dancers and musicians, concerts of popular music, political music, gala concerts, visits to museums and historical sites; a center for young artists to exchange views on existing trends of cultural life and a possible center for film artists. Sports events will be limited by the fact the 11th Festival in Havana will take place at the hottest time of the year and thus it would be virtually impossible to hold outdoor competitions. The sports activities will therefore be mainly indoor events such as boxing, fencing, gymnastics, etc. Also there will be a special children's program. One of the many locations for the children's program will be the Jose Marti Pioneer Camp where children from all over the world will be joined by 20,000 Cuban Pioneers. (The Pioneers are the children's organization in Cuba.) There will also be a huge Pioneer Palace in Lenin Park. There will be seminars for the heads of children's organizations and for specialists on children. Also, an exhibition and contest of children's paintings will be held.

The total figure for the Festival as proposed by the Cuban hosts is 16,000 taking into account that Cuba is an island, has limited transportation access, and the needs of food, housing, etc. Because it is the first time the Festival is being held outside Europe and in Latin America, both the Latin American and North American delegation will be increased in size.

In the Amherst-Springfield area a committee has been set up similar to other committees that exist throughout the U.S. The committee is responsible for selecting a delegation made up of women and men of all races and religions with a large range of views and life experience. The local committee is also responsible for bringing the message of the festival to people throughout the area. As part of this effort the committee is developing a slide show and presentation which intrudes the festival; it's goals and ideas. This will be available for showing to area groups.

The third meeting of the 11 World Youth Festival will be held at the Unitarian Church in Northampton at 3:00 p.m. Sunday February 19. People can write to the committee at Box 595, North Amherst, 01059. Address letters to the Amherst-Springfield Prepatory Committee, 11th World Festival of Youth and Students. Or call Cheryl Shain at 546-4549.

There will be over 100 events daily at the festival as well as an ongoing carnival. Anyone interested in the issues of the Youth Festival — world peace, racism, facism, liberation struggles, and an exchange of political, cultural, and religious ideas and information with people from over 100 countries — should attend the February 19 meeting.

Namibia

Following a series of SWAPO leaflets which were widely distributed in Namibia entitled "Turnhalle puppets," the South Africans reacted by calling SWAPO the "South-West African Puppets Organization" and are now producing their own "puppet" leaflets with (Mozambican President) Samora Machel, (Angolan President) Agostinho Neto and Sam Nujoma dancing on strings pulled by Castro. In September they even produced a fake copy of "Ombuze ya Namibia," the monthly SWAPO bulletin produced and distributed in Namibia. This false issue included an editorial supposedly from President Nujoma, "admitting" that SWAPO was killing innocent people in northern Namibia.

PROPAGANDA BARRAGE

For the South African government, propaganda is big business. They have the use of South African and local puppet radio station, the press, police, armed forces, spies and above all, money. South African businessmen have recently been called upon to sell South African Policy overseas. Suggestions include the holding of shareholders' meetings and seminars outside the country and the sponsoring of trade missions.

As South Africa's propaganda campaign is linked to big business, so it is also a primary element in its military strategy. Earlier this year secret documents detailing South African defense force instructions on psychological warfare came into SWAPO's hands form a South African soldier who had just completed his military service. One document, entitled, "Guide to Psychological Warfare" and intended for South African army officers, defines psychological action as consisting of "the application of various coordinated measures...initiated for the purpose of influencing opinion, feelings, beliefs and thus attitudes and behavior of neutrals, allies and adversaries."

Peaceful forms of resistance to the South African regime are lumped together with the armed struggle and this is used as a justification for the use of armed forces against peaceful resistance such as strikes and demonstrations.

CAMPAING AGAINST CHURCHES

Churches and church organizations are regarded as part of "the enemy." Indeed, South Africa's anti-SWAPO campaign has also been directed against the churches in Namibia which have long supported the cause of Namibian liberation. South Africa accuses the churches of being puppets of SWAPO.

The "Guide to Psychological Warfare" shows South Africa's concern with the flagging morale of its own troops. Increasing numbers of South Africans are leaving the country to avoid military service in Namibia. The fact that a South African soldier passed on these documents to SWAPO is sufficient of the South African army.

South Africa's propaganda offensive in northern Namibia is a blatant attempt to confuse the Namibian people and to shake their revolutionary commitment so that it can continue to rule Namibia illegally and exploit our human and natural resources. But South Africa's inhuman oppression and ruthless exploitation have so deepened our people's revolutionary commitment that no amount of propaganda will deflect them from their cause.

The South African army has chosen as its watchword "Vas-byt" (Vigilance). Let our watchword be "Victory!" in the words of the secretary for SWAPO's Women's Council in Namibia: "We are armed with the most dangerous and efficient weapons with which to wage the struggle: our loudspeakers are our cannons, our tongues the AK47 and our ammunition is the truth."

Our Children Are Our Future

By ISMAT ABDAL-HAQQ

Many of you who will read this article have demonstrated against U.S. involvement and investment in South Africa, against U.S. involvement in Vietnam, against discriminatory practices in education, and other social areas. You have pointed to the control of the military-industrial complex of the wealth of the nation. You have cried out in protest against the manipulation of the thinking of the people by the corporate establishment. Did you know, that many of the same corporations that have been the villains in each of the above scenarios, are actively involved in the production of educational materials, and the dissemination of programmed learning systems, to the public schools across the land? For example, Xerox corporation is a major producer of educational materials in the U.S. I bring this up in reference to the question of who controls the education of your child, if that child attends the public schools.

In my estimation, there is nothing more critical than the education of children. I'm not a romantic about children. I don't see them as "beings stepped from Eden," or as "bright and constant sources of wonder." But they are the resources of our future; and because their minds and egos are so fragile during their young years, diligence, sincerity, know-how and love are needed by those who give themselves to the task of educating them.

It makes my blood run cold to think of a child receiving callous, indifferent or perfunctory instruction, from a teacher whose raison d'etre is a bi-weekly paycheck and a pension in 20 years. Not much easier to swallow is the maudlin sentimentality and romanticism that characterizes some of the more contemporary educators, especially those who work with Third World children.

The American & European process of education has been instrumental in destroying the humanity of more people (people of color & Caucasians) than all the wars put together. This process has produced avaricious, racist, callous men and women with a false impression of superiority. It has produced as well, generations of men and women whose lack of self-love and self-respect is legendary.

The same lust for power & possessions feeds the political nature of the educational establishment today. It is madness for Third World people, who have been the chief victims of this establishment, to send another generation of children into this system, with our fingers crossed, hoping things will turn out all right.

Third World people can't afford to settle for second-best. We should be tired of it by now. Why not the best for our children?

We cannot afford to fall victim to the materialism of this culture, and allow the beauty of the facilities, and the degrees of the teachers to dazzle us into believing that this makes for the best. Nor can we allow ourselves to be pacified and side-tracked by the addition of a few "ethnic" courses to the school curriculum.

I believe that we should channel our energies and resources into developing alternative schools, such as Che-Lumumba. Only in this way can we begin to effectively control the educational environment of our children.

What we need is substance. We need a school system that imparts concrete academic skills. We need a school system that encourages the growth of healthy social values, such as self-discipline, respect, a desire for learning, and a dedication to advancing one's community. All children need and deserve this; Third World children in America especially so.

Defend Affirmitive Action Reverse Bakke National March On Washington April 15

This year the U.S. Supreme Court will decide on the case of Allar Bakke. It is the most important legal issue now facing Blacks, Asians Hispanics, and women in America today. It is at the forefront of the many racist and sexist attacks on our civil and human rights.

If Bakke wins, it will not only be a devastating blow to preferentia admissions programs on the college campuses, it will call into questior every affirmative action program in the country including those affectin unemployment, health care, legal services and many other area. This is truly a landmark case that requires an end to business as usual and actior on the part of those who are in favor of civil and human rights.

Students on every campus and high school in the country will have ar opportunity, and a serious responsibility, to raise our voices in protes against the Bakke decision.

For this reason the Black American Law Students Association (BALSA and the National Student Coalition Against Racism (NSCAR) are puttin out a joint call for all students, and student organizations to endorse anc build the winter-spring activities called by the National Committee tc overturn the Bakke Decision.

Institutional Racism Defined

By Sandra Mahasin Shakoor

(Special to Bilalian News)

Institutional racism is a practice that is characteristic of, or has the nature of an established law, custom system, etc., that propagates the practice of racial discrimination, segregation, persecution or domination based on racial origin.

Racism is a doctrine or teaching which has no scientific support, and claims to find racial differences in character, intelligence, etc. The doctrine asserts the superiority of one race over another, or others, or seeks to maintain the supposed purity of a race or the races.1

Portraying Racial Images of Divine

When the image of Jesus is clad in Caucasian features and heralded to be the dominant symbol in the Christian religion; and when this image of Jesus is propagated to be a direct physical descendant of God; and when the church is the institution propagating this doctrine, then this becomes an example of institutional racism.

In the quest for civil rights and civil liberties for Bilalians there has been great emphasis placed on portraying positive images to Bilalian children and the Bilalian community as a whole.

This feat has been accomplished to an enormous degree via elections and appointments of Bilalians throughout the American governmental system, considerable representation through many facets of the media, textbook modifications to include Bilalian images, etc.

Unfortunately, these strides have only scratched the surface, for the biggest crippler to the Bilalian psyche is Caucasian Jesus on the cross. "The strongest wedge between non-Caucasians and Caucasians is a Caucasian image of God on the cross."2 This statement implies a double-effect Bilalians in a negative way but the Caucasian masses suffer because of this image also.

"It also keeps Caucasian peoples' minds in a false world by making them unable to see their real worth and value as human beings apart from their physical skin color."3

Fortunately there is a simple solution to this form of institutional racism. All racial effects in the worship of God should be abandoned.4

Curriculum Of The Che-Lumumba School

By SONIA NIETO

If we accept the notion that curriculum is not simply a list of activities but is the all-encompassing environment which we provide for children, then we understand that most schools provide a curriculum which is stagnant, reactionary, and representative of the values of the dominant culture in this society. In attempting to break out of this mold, the Che-Lumumba School staff has tried to create a curriculum which is more dynamic, progressive, and representative of the values of Third World and poor people. Each of these characteristics of the curriculum will be described briefly and examples given so that the reader can formulate a more accurate picture of what actually goes on in the classrooms of our school.

By dynamic is meant a curriculum which is open-ended and subject to appropriate changes. For example, several years ago, in providing for the older children to get classes in using cameras, we inadvertently caused the older children, all boys, to become little sexists: "Only the boys get to use the cameras — girls aren't smart enough!" Instead of simply ignoring this outcome, we did two things: first, we discussed these attitudes with the children; and, secondly, we provided for all the children to learn something about using cameras.

In another sense, a dynamic curriculum can bend to allow for different experiences than those planned. Thus, although the children would expect to have music on most Tuesday afternoons, we might instead take them to a rally called the night before to oppose the closing of a day-care center in the area. Although these changes are not frequent, we, as a school, have certain priorities which we clearly state and practice.

Our curriculum is progressive in that it is not limited to the accomplishments of the past, but also presents perspectives for the future. We also try to view the past through the eyes of the real historymakers, that is, the masses of people. This is not to say that the children do not learn about great women and men who have fought for justice. On the contrary, people like Harriet Tubman, Frederick Douglass, Lolita Lebron, and Patrice Lumumba are as familiar to them as are George Washington, Betsy Ross, and Abraham Lincoln to other children. However, we try to temper this with a sense of history as made by large groups of people, not individuals.

By progressive we also mean that the curriculum is not concerned, as is the curriculum in most schools, with maintaining the status quo. Most history books, for example, present history as seen through the eyes of the oppressor; it is therefore presented as accommodating and as just. As a mater of fact, history has never been very accommodating. We therefore try to teach history as a series of changes, some violent, which have taken place since the dawn of civilization and which are based on class and race differences.

Lastly, the curriculum of the Che-Lumumba School is representative of the values of Third World and poor people. We have in the past selected one central core each year around which we plan all our activities. Some of these have been "Workers of the World," "Immigration," and "Alliances." Each of these themes is concerned with the values and viewpoints of Third World and poor people. Using the last core as an example, some of the objectives which the Curriculum Committee derived from it are:

—Recognize the need for, and the basis of alliances among struggling people and groups: race, sex, nationalism, and class.

—Reflect an awareness of the common bonds that unite Third World people

—Identify his-her ancestral roots, ethnically and geographically

—Recognize the necessity to make positive contributions to his-her family, community, nation, human family.

—Appreciate that struggle takes many forms.

Our curriculum obviously has not met all the problems or dealt with all the issues. It is an ever-changing curriculum, one that is spotty in areas and which must accommodate itself to the many needs of the children, the parents, and the teachers. Nevertheless, we feel that we are on the way to providing a curriculum that is at least a challenge to other curricula and at most a positive contribution to the education of Third World children in general.

Who Killed Malcolm X ?

Continued From Last Week

By ALAN BERGER

Malcolm X with Dr. Shirley Graham DuBois

This article first appeared in the Real Paper, copyright the Real Paper, Inc. 1978.

On July 23, 1964, the day before he was to address the summit conference, Malcolm was poisoned while eating dinner in the Cairo Hilton's main dining room. His roommate at the Hilton, Detroit lawyer and civil rights activist Milton Henry, said, "He would have died if he hadn't been able to get to the hospital in a hurry. His stomach was pumped out, cleaned out thoroughly, and that saved him. But as Malcolm said afterwards, he would have died if he had not got immediate treatment."

The food pumped from his stomach was analyzed and found to contain a "toxic substance." The possibility of gratuitous food poisoning was ruled out by doctors. Malcolm told Milton Henry: "Somebody deliberately poisoned me." An effort was made to locate the waiter who had served Malcolm, but the waiter had vanished.

In discussing the poisoning with Henry, Malcolm emphasized "the fact that CIA men were all around him in Cairo." Malcolm's half-sister, Mrs. Ella Collins, who paid for his first trip to Mecca and Africa, said Malcolm told her about the poisoning in Cairo. "He told me that he felt that the CIA was definitely responsible for it. After that he was very careful. In fact, on another occasion, there was an affair given in his honor in Addis Ababa, and in observing the waiter he got a leery feeling and refused the food. He never had any proof, of course, but he always felt sure somehow that he had by-passed another poisoning."

Malcolm's certainty that the CIA was responsible for the poisoning was not founded on mere intuition. For some time before the conference the American Embassy in Cairo tried by quiet diplomatic means to prevent Malcolm from addressing the delegates. The Embassy's diplomatic requests were rebuffed, however, both by the Egyptian government and by the conference organizers. In a New York Times article of August 13, 1964, while Malcolm was still in Cairo discussing his UN project with the African ministers, reporter M. S. Handler wrote: "The State Department and the Justice Department have begun to take an interest in Malcolm's campaign to convince African states to raise the question of persecution of American Negroes at the United Nations...

"Malcolm's eight-page memorandum to the heads of state at the Cairo conference requesting their support became available here only recently. After studying it, officials said that if Malcolm succeeded in convincing just one African government to bring up the charge at the United Nations, the United States government would be faced with a touchy problem.

"The United States, officials here believe, would find itself in the same category as South Africa, Hungary and other countries whose domestic policies have become debating issues at the United Nations. The issue, officials say, would be of service to critics of the United States, Communist and non-Communist, and contribute to the undermining of the position the United States has asserted for itself as the leader of the West in the advocacy of human rights.

Malcolm X with Prince Faisal

"In a letter from Cairo to a friend, Malcolm wrote: "I have gotten several promises of support in bringing our plight before the UN this year.'...

"Officials here conceded the possibility that Malcolm might have succeeded...

"Although the State Department's interest in Malcolm's activities is obvious, that of the Justice Department is shrouded in discretion. Malcolm is regarded as an implacable leader with deep roots in the Negro submerged classes... (Malcolm) has confided in friends that he has been under constant surveillance in New York by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and by the intelligence section of the New York Police Department..."

The incident that persuaded Malcolm in the final days before his death that someone other than the Black Muslims was out to kill him was not the Cairo poisoning, but rather another ominous event that took place beyond the borders of the United States.

Twelve days before he died, Malcolm flew to Paris, where he was scheduled to address the Congress of African Students. In his epilogue to Malcolm's autobiography Alex Haley recounts the unexpected reception Malcolm got from the French officials. "... He was formally advised that he would not be permitted to speak and, moreover, that he could consider himself officially barred forever from France as an 'undesirable person.' He was asked to leave — and he did, fuming with indignation."

It was hard to believe in 1964 that the France of Charles De Gaulle would comply so abjectly with a political whim of the State Department — especially when to do so meant compromising both France's post-Algerian image of tolerance and her Gaullist claims of big-power autonomy. Nevertheless, this is what Malcolm believed. "I was shocked when they told me I couldn't land," he told students at the Congress in Paris over the telephone from London. "They didn't give me any excuse for it. I believe the State Department is responsible."

The day before he was murdered, in the last conversation the two men were to have together, he told Alex Haley, "... You know, I'm going to tell you something, brother — the more I keep thinking about this thing, the things that have been happening lately, I'm not all that sure it's the Muslims. I know what they can do, and what they can't, and they can't do some of the stuff recently going on. Now, I'm going to tell you, the more I keep thinking about what happened to me in France, I think I'm going to quit saying it's the Muslims."

Two months after Malcolm's death "a highly placed North African diplomat" told American journalist Eric Norden something about the incident at Orly which, if true, would confirm Malcolm's last-minute suspicions. According to Norden, "This official, who insists on anonymity, said that his country's intelligence apparatus had been quietly informed by the French Department of Alien Documentation and Counter-Espionage (the famous Deuxieme Bureau] that the CIA planned Malcolm's murder, and France feared he might be liquidated on its soil.

"The diplomat's country, which enjoyed close relations with France, was so informed because Malcolm had visited it on prior occasions, and possibly might have flown there after his expulsion from France.

" 'Your CIA is beginning to murder its own citizens now,' he commented in elegantly modulated French."

By February 1965 Malcolm had developed what amounted to diplomatic relationships with several African delegations to the United Nations. He frequented the UN delegates' lounge in the manner of a working diplomat, the self-appointed ambassador of Afro-America to the United Nations. Not only had he made progress in promoting his plan for having America condemned for violations of human rights, but in November 1964, at the time the United States intervened in the Congo's civil war, Malcolm lobbied with his African contacts to convince them to condemn the American intervention. He was regarded as being partly responsible for the vituperative attacks mounted against the United States during the General Assembly debates that took place toward the end of 1964. On January 2, 1965, M.S. Handler, writing in the New York Times, reported that Malcolm had pressed African delegates to condemn America's role in the Congo and also to use "the racial situation in the United States as an instrument of attack in discussing international problems" since "such a strategy would give the African states more leverage in dealing with the United States and would in turn give American Negroes more leverage in American society.

"The spokesmen of some African states acted precisely within the framework of these recommendations last month in the Congo debate at the United Nations," the article said. "They accused the United States of being indifferent to the fate of blacks and cited as evidence the attitude of the United States government toward the civil rights struggle in Mississippi.

"The African move profoundly disturbed the American authorities, who gave the impression that they had been caught off guard."

The New York Times could not, of course, measure nor say just how "profoundly disturbed" the American authorities were. But Malcolm knew that as a result of his role at the United Nations, as a result of his conscious political decision to internationalize the problems of American black people, he was under constant surveillance. His phones were tapped and at times he found himself shadowed by as many as three different agents. His friends and family were concerned about the effect of his interference in the functioning of American foreign policy. His half-sister, Ella Collins, told him that to take a step of this kind he needed protection, real protection that he felt secure with. But he couldn't even trust his own bodyguards. I've been informed by reliable sources that there were CIA agents right in the Organization (the Organization of Afro-American Unity), and I've been given their names. Malcolm knew the dangers, but he said he had to go ahead."

Malcolm returned from his disquieting trip to Orly and London eight days before he was assassinated. He landed at Kennedy International on Sunday afternoon, February 13. At 2:45 the following morning, while he, his wife and four children were sleeping in their home in East Elmhurst, Queens, four fire bombs were thrown through the windows of the house. The house was destroyed, but Malcolm and his wife managed to carry and lead the four children out into the back yard.

Afterward police officers suggested to reporters, off the record, that Malcolm had set fire to the house himself to procure publicity for himself. The police even produced a tin of gasoline, which they said they had found on a dresser in the room belonging to Malcolm's youngest child.

Commenting on this episode, Ella Collins said: "When they planted the gasoline I knew it was no longer the Muslims. Only the police could have planted it, because as the fire died down, neighbors went into the house to get some clothes for the children from their rooms, what hadn't been burned. And none of them saw this jug of gasoline when they took things from the baby's dresser. And then the police bomb squad arrived and took over the house, and then they produced the gasoline."

At a press conference on Wednesday of that week, Malcolm declared that an official of the Fire Department admitted to him that the gasoline container had been planted on his child's dresser. "Fire Marshall (Malcolm names the man) met me at the airport later and said that yes, it had been planted there."

Malcolm went on to say, "We are demanding an immediate investigation by the FBI of the bombing. We feel a conspiracy has been entered into at the local level, with some local police, firemen and press. Neither I, nor my wife and children have insurance, and we stand in no way to gain from the bombing... My attorney has instructed me and my wife to submit to a lie detector test and will ask that the same test be given to police and firemen at the scene."

None of the newspapers in New York City reported on the press conference and the accusations Malcolm had made about police involvement in a conspiracy.

All those who had contact with Malcolm during his last few days testified that he felt a conspiracy closing in around him, that he felt his death was inevitable, and that he no longer believed the Muslims were the force behind what was happening to him. Ella Collins has said: "On the day before his death, which was a Saturday, we spent the day together. He discussed the fact that the way his house was bombed, and his being barred from France, led him to believe that the plotters of his death were much bigger than the Muslims."

In the days immediately following the assassination, while the major newspapers were dwelling on the war they had hypothesized between Malcolm's followers and the

Who Killed Malcolm X ?

Muslims, Malcolm's New England representative, Leon Ameer, after going from Boston to New York to meet with other aides, declared that Malcolm had been killed not by the Muslims, but by what he called "the power structure." Ameer proposed that a mediator be chosen to meet with Elijah Muhammad and members of Malcolm's organization in order to work out a rapprochement between the two groups.

In Boston on March 13, 1965, in a speech to the Boston Militant Labor Forum, Leon Ameer said, "I have facts in my possession as to who really killed Malcolm." Ameer said he would call a press conference shortly to reveal evidence in documents and tape recordings which Malcolm had transmitted to him before the murder, evidence to show Malcolm had been the victim of the "power structure." "The killers aren't from Chicago," Ameer declared, alluding to Elijah Muhammad's headquarters in that city. "They're from Washington."

Prophetically, Ameer told his Boston audience: "I know my life is worth nothing." The morning after his speech, Leon Ameer was found dead in his room at the Sherry Biltmore Hotel in Boston. The official cause of death was strangulation.

The Boston police told the press that Ameer had died from an epileptic fit. Ameer's wife said, however, that her husband had undergone a complete medical check-up just one month before his sudden death and that "there was no hint of epilepsy." She said that her husband's body was found with his blackened tongue protruding from between his lips, whereas the victim of an epileptic fit would normally die from asphyxiation, as a result of having swallowed his tongue.

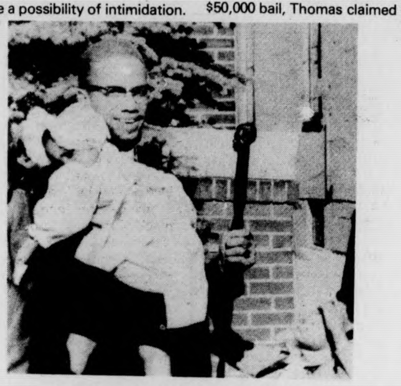
Ella Collins, who lived in Boston and was friendly with Leon Ameer, told journalist Eric Norden: "I firmly believe that Leon Ameer was assassinated... In Boston everything was kept very quiet. The police hushed it all up." Malcolm's sister went on to say, "I spoke to his wife on the telephone. She said that she had been married to him for eleven years, and he'd never had an epileptic fit of any kind. But that's what the police kept telling her did it."

Whatever — or whoever — caused the death of Leon Ameer in Boston, the effect of his death on other aides to Malcolm was flight and silence. Earl Grant, the person who possessed most of Malcolm's tapes and files, fled to Ghana. Presumably, he took the tapes and files with him. Malcolm's second-in-command in the OAAU, James Shabazz, disappeared. And Malcolm's secretary, Reuben Francis, who was indicted for firing the bullet found in the leg of convicted assassin Thomas Hagan, jumped bail. Francis was taken into custody by the FBI eight months later, but he never appeared to testify in the trial, even though his testimony might very well have been crucial. Recently, during the course of an extended interview, attorney William Kunstler told me that, although the transcript of the original trial contains many irregularities, he was particularly surprised to find that Reuben Francis was never called, or allowed, to testify.

Kunstler was brought into the case this winter and convinced to move for a retrial by Thomas Hagan, the fleeing gunman whom Reuben Francis allegedly shot in the leg. When arrested, Hagan was found to have in his pocket a clip of .45 bullets that matched one of the murder weapons left behind in the ballroom. Also, his thumbprint was found on a piece of the smoke bomb that had been set off in the rear of the hall to create a diversion. Hagan had been caught at the scene of the murder; he was incriminated by material evidence; at his trial he eventually confessed to his role in the killing. But for several days after the killing the New York police found themselves in an uncomfortable position. Newspaper reports spoke of four accomplices who were still at large. Eyewitness accounts had reported four or five gunmen firing at Malcolm. Since the police had allowed the "thin-lipped, olive-skinned, Latin-looking" suspect apprehended by Patrolman Thomas Hoy to vanish, they were holding only one suspect for a crime committed by four or five men. The position of the police became less uncomfortable ten days later when, after what was termed as "intensive investigation," they arrested two Black Muslim enforcers associated with Muslim Mosque #7 in Harlem, Thomas (15X) Johnson and Norman (3X) Butler. Johnson and Butler had been arrested two months before for shooting one Benjamin Brown, a Muslim defector. They had both been free on bail and had assault charges pending against them for the nonfatal shooting.

Although there was no evidence connecting Hagan to Johnson and Butler, and although no material evidence existed to place Johnson and Butler at the Audubon Ballroom, the district attorney indicted all three men together for having carried out a criminal conspiracy to murder Malcolm X.

The district attorney's case against Johnson and Butler were founded on the testimony of four witnesses who identified Johnson and six who identified Butler. All ten appeared to have been carefully coached in their testimony, and yet the testimony they gave was marred by contradiction, evasions and apparent perjury. Several of the witnesses — and among them the most important — were out on bail at the time of their testimony. The charges pending against them, which made them vulnerable to the district attorney's will, often seemed gratiutous enough to indicate a possibility of intimidation.



Just returned home from trip abroad

Outside his damaged Elmhurst home the day after it was attacked with fire bombs.

A case in point is Cary Thomas, a bodyguard of Malcolm's and one of the two witnesses most instrumental in convincing Johnson and Butler. Before March 2, 1965, when he was arrested as a material witness in the case, Thomas said nothing to Malcolm's widow or to the other members of the OAAU about being able to identify the killers. Initially, he was held by the police in alimony jail, a rather casual kind of incarceration. But after he applied for release, in June 1965, the police charged him with arson in the alimony jail and he was transferred to a regular prison. Thereafter, he became a pliant prisoner and a willing, if changeable, witness for the state's case.

In March 1965 Cary Thomas testifed to the grand jury, which indicted Johnson and Butler along with Hagen, that the two Muslim enforcers staged the diversion at the back of the ballroom while Hagan, near the front, opened fire on Malcolm with a shotgun. Then Johnson and Butler were supposed to have run forward toward the stage, shooting at Malcolm with revolvers. The .45 bullets discovered in Hagan's pocket were traced to one of the murder weapons after this grand jury testimony was given, however, and so the prosecution version of what happened had to change. Hagan was now located in the rear of the hall with Butler, while Johnson was given the shotgun and located up front, near the stage. As the state's version of the killing changed, so did the testimony of Cary Thomas. In Janury 1966, after being held in prison for ten months under $50,000 bail, Thomas claimed under oath that he had seen Johnson firing the shotgun from a point close to the stage, and seen Butler and Hagan running from the rear to fire at Malcolm with their revolvers. One of the two stories Cary Thomas told had to be perjured. The jury chose to believe that his ten-month incarceration had served as an aid to his memory and that only his grand jury testimony was a lie.

Cary Thomas was an example of why Malcolm could not trust his bodyguards (even those who were not undercover agents). Though Thomas had been armed with a .357 magnum pistol at the meeting in the Audubon, though he was strategically placed to intervene if there was trouble, and though he had carried a gun since the age of fifteen, when the shooting started he dived under a table for protection. The jury might have evaluated his testimony differently if Judge Marks had allowed the defense to enter into the record a Bellevue psychiatric report on Thomas, who was hospitalized in 1963 after running through the streets screaming, "I did not kill Jesus Christ! I did not kill Jesus Christ!"

The other key witness for the prosecution was Charles Blackwell, who also had been a bodyguard of Malcolm's and who also changed the story he had originally told the grand jury. Originally, Blackwell had told the grand jury that Hagan and Butler were seated next to him in the front row and that two men who he could not identify had created the diversion toward the rear of the hall. He had also told the grand jury that he had never seen anyone shooting anybody.

Q: "Did you see anybody fire a gun?"

A: "No, I didn't."

At the trial, however, he told substantially the same story as Cary Thomas told, and offered a graphic recollection of Hagan and Butler firing their revolvers at Malcolm. When he asked whether he had lied to the grand jury, he responded, "Yes, I did."

Far more damaging to the prosecution's version of the murder than the doubtful credibility of its witness, however, was the unexpected decision of Thomas Hagan, midway through the trial to confess. Not only did Hagan admit that he had been one of the killers, but he also stated that Johnson and Butler were innocent. "I just want the truth to be known," Hagan told the court, "— that Butler and Johnson didn't have anything to do with this crime. Because I was there. I know what happened and I know the people who were there."

The New York Times of March 1, 1966, reported that Hagan, "said he had three accomplices, but he declined to name them. He said he had been approached early in the month of the murder and offered money for the job, but he declined to say by whom...One thing he did know, he said, was that on one involved in the murder was a Black Muslim." Perhaps because Hagan had refused to give the names of his accomplices and of the man who paid him, the district attorney was able to argue convincingly to the jury that Hagan had come forward only when he saw that his own situation was hopeless, and that therefore his motivation was to get the other two indicted men off since he had nothing to lose himself in confessing.

But now, a dozen years later, Thomas Hagan has offered to give those names in court and to tell everything he knows about the assassination.

William Kunstler has received information from Hagan that is meant to prove the two main examples of new evidence justify his argument for a retrial of the case.

Künstler says that Hagan has been in contact with a Muslim minister in prison for some time, that he is "a very religious man" and that he is trying now, possibly at the risk of his life to exonerate Johnson and Butler "because he feels bad about it. Two guys — he says innocent men — are serving life terms, and he's had eleven years to think it over. He's still a very cautious man, but he's a strong reed at this moment and we hope to use him.

Kunstler did not want to disclose what Hagan might have said concerning police complicity in the assassination, nor did he believe that Hagan might know who was ultimately responsible for having Malcolm X killed. "Money was spread around," Kunstler said. "He talks about money."

But Kunstler does think that Hagan's affidavit constitutes part of a persuasive argument that new evidence exists to justify a retrial. Meanwhile, Hagan has been placed in protective cutody in an unnamed prison. When I asked him if he weren't worried that something might happen to Hagan in prison, the lawyer said, "Sure, that's why he's in protective custody."

Besides Hagan's affidavit, the second example of crucial new evidence in the case is a transcript from another trial, which Kunstler has submitted to the court. In 1971, twenty-one members of the New York chapter of the Black Panthers were tried in New York for conspiring to blow up Macy's department store and other prominent targets. A key witness against the accused Panthers in that trial was a police undercover agent called Gene Roberts, who had infiltrated the Panthers in New York. The attorneys for the Panthers had been tipped off by somebody that Gene Roberts had been a member of Malcolm's Organization of Afro-American Unity. Defense attorney Gerald Lefcourt asked Roberts about his connection to Malcolm and, as Kunstler says, "The judge let him go a little ways with it."

Alvin Ailey And The American Dance Theater

Alvin Ailey At Fine Art Center Concrt Hall Feb.7,8,9 at 8p.m.

"Carmina Burana" Judith Jamison, Clive Thompson

Alvin Ailey was born in Rogers, Texas in 1931. As a child, Ailey attended Sunday school and the Baptist Young People's Union and it is out of these experiences and memories that two of his most popular and critically acclaimed works were inspired: Blues Suite and Revelations.

At age 12 Ailey moved to Los Angeles and it was on a junior high school class trip to the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo that Ailey discovered dance. "I first saw the Dunham Company there (Los Angeles)," he remembers, "...and there were pictures of Black dancers!"

Ailey's career in dance began with Lester Horton — who organized the first interracial modern dance company in this country. He left Horton for the period he studied at UCLA (Romance Languages), L.A. City College and San Francisco State, but returned and, after Horton's death in 1953, became the company's artistic director and began to choreograph.

A year later Ailey left the West Coast to come to New York with Carmen de Lavallade, where they both debuted as leading dancers in the Broadway musical House of Flowers. And it was here, in the modern dance capitol of the world, that Ailey supplemented his studies: modern dance with Martha Graham, Hanya Holm and Charles Weidman; ballet with Karel Shook; composition with Doris Humphrey; and acting with Stella Adler and Milton Katselas.

With two of Ailey's works premiering as early as 1954 at Jacob's Pillow, the choreographer spent the succeeding years dancing in such musical productions as The Carefree Tree (1956); Sing Man Sing (1956); Show Boat (1957); and Jamaica (1957). Even after he formed his own Company, Ailey still had Broadway in his blood and found time to choreograph Carmen Jones, Dark of the Moon and African Holiday.

Ailey's seven member Company, the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, made its debut in 1958 at the 92nd Street YMHA. Well received by the critics, the Company began touring the country extensively and performing in Europe. In 1962, the U.S. State Department sent the Company on its first successful tour to the Far East; in 1966 to the World Festival of Negro Arts at Dakar, Sengal; and East and West Africa in 1967. In 1970 the State Department arranged an Ailey tour of North Africa and, later that year, Russia — where the Ailey Company was the first American modern dance company to appear in that country since Isadora Duncan. Also in 1970 the company won first prize in the International Dance Festival in Paris. Highlighting a later international tour was Paris also, where the Company triumphantly played at the world-famous Palais des Sport in 1974 for one month, followed by a return extended engagement in 1975 for 6 weeks. And once again in 1977 the State Department sent the Company abroad, where they performed to sold-out houses in Japan, the Far East, Middle East, Africa and Europe.

Remembering the response to the U.S. State Department sponsored tour of Russia in 1970 — when the Company performed in towns where Western dancers had never been seen before and created sensations in Moscow and Leningrad — Ailey says: "The last night in Leningrad the audience wouldn't go home. They stood up and screamed and clapped. I got down in the orchestra pit and signed autographs. I signed people's arms, calendars and programs. It was beautiful."

And that beauty of the human spirit is what the Ailey Company is all about and what people respond to. To Ailey, dance is a "positive expression of the human spirit of people who reflect life." Ailey's vision of his Company is unique — it is not the choreographer's personal instrument — but a repertory company aimed at providing art and entertainment, as well as institutionalizing modern dance, by preserving important works of the past and commissioning new ones. Unlike most modern dance choreographers, Ailey retired from performing to choreograph and direct the Company. The group's roster of choreographers covers as broad a spectrum as John Butler, Louis Falco, Talley Beatty, Donald McKayle, Jennifer Muller, Lar Lubovitch, and George Faison, and it's no wonder that Ailey's high-caliber dancers are well versed in modern dance, ballet, jazz and Afro-Carribean dance. Ailey has succeeded in revolutionizing modern dance; he has created a group with breadth, diversity and vitality that no other modern dance company can rival.

Not only has Alvin Ailey developed a strong and devoted following in New York — with regular seasons at the New York 55th Street City Center — but the Company widely tours the country, performing and educating. In the fall of '77 the Company participated in the first year of the NEA's long-term residency programs, when they traveled to Atlanta for a month's stay filled with lecture-demonstrations, workshops and performances. In 20 years the Ailey Company has toured no less than 48 states and annually spends 6 months on the road.

Ailey's works pulse with rhythm and audiences are usually unable to restrain from clapping along. It is no wonder that the music serves as a major source of inspiration for the choreographer, and Ailey drew on this for his special contribution to the nation's bicentennial — Ailey Celebrates Ellington. Held in August of 1976 at the New York State Theater 15 ballets were created for the occasion for which the Ellington Orchestra (under the direction of Mercer Ellington) provided the music. Some of these ballets were previewed two years earlier with the Alvih Ailey Repertory Ensemble Company during a special CBS Thanksgiving Day Special, Ailey Celebrates Ellington.

This television special was not a first for the Company. In 1973 Ailey re-choreographhd ballets from his repertory for an hour program, Memories and Visions. The program, produced by Ellis Haizlip, was aired on WNET and was viewed nationally in the homes of over one million people.

The forthcoming Fall '78 season will celebrate the Company's 20th Anniversary. The Ailey Company has come a long way since their 1958 debut with seven dancers at the 92nd Street YMHA. Now 25 dancers strong, with a repertory ensemble company, a well-established school, and a repertory that boasts such Ailey classics as Revelations, Blues Suite, Cry, The Lark Ascending, McKayle's Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder, Beatty's Road of The Phoebe Snow, Faison's Suite Otis, as well as 50 ballets by over 30 major choreographers, one could say that Alvin Ailey has brought it all together.

Because of the controversy last semester, there is a need for students to be clear on the meaning of Third World. With this in mind a course is being offered this semester called "Toward the Understanding of the Third World Dynamic". This course shall clarify and strengthen the Third World position with regard to invisible economic and political forces of domination in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. It will be taught by Mukende Wa Nysanga and Stan Kinard. The course, No. SW190S is to meet on Thursday at the Malcolm X center at 7:00.

PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT

All CCEBS students interested in Summer employment should see Brain Maher in Room 209 of the New Africa House immediately. Opportunities exist for Summer jobs in the Federal government. There are also opportunities for Summer internships in other companies and organizations. Application deadlines for these jobs are approaching fast. Other information of interest to CCEBS students is posted on the bulletin boards outside Room 209 of the New Africa House. Students are urged to check out these bulletin boards periodically.

have rural, or even urban southern roots would understand that the core of Black life, the center of Black life, the center of Black institutions in the south are churches, predominantly Baptist, Methodist, etc. I really had no choice when my Uncle asked for my support. It was a matter of either supporting it or cutting myself off from something that was very important to me, and naturally I responded, but even more important the whole request really started triggering my mind by thinking of the importance of this church and this community and what it had meant to me in terms of my development as a human being, etc. I did organize a few parties around Brooklyn, where I live, and was able to collect about $200.00, and then the thought occurred to me since I had a professional job to do in Baltimore, of a commercial nature that rather than send the money that I would just drive on down south and deliver the money myself and in the process re-establish my roots, and that is how I began.

Question: Did you plan on doing any writing or photography when you first went down?

Mackey: No, my initial intention was to visit home to establish my roots, that is re-establish contact with as many people who were still left. I then thought that the rebuilding of this church would make a good photographic story. From the beginning my intent was not to go further than this, that was my original intention when I went home. As you know I had been for many years I had been involved in organizing and running cultural Black history programs, having people like Dr. Clark and Dr. Rogers coming in and giving lectures for those who were interested, and I guess the idea really started formulating in my mind when I was driving home on this trip. I hadn't been in the deep south for quite a few years. As I began thinking, and had already formulated the idea by the time I got home of doing a photo-documentary but not really digging into it. The rest of it, when I began thinking of my past efforts in Black culture, and all the things that should be done to flesh out the important aspects of Black culture, specifically the rural aspects of it, the thought hit me that you could wait forever for someone else to do it, and I felt that I could make a start and set up patterns someone else would follow. I had a great uncle who has subsequently died at the age of 102 who was the elder of my family and the community, and in visiting my uncle and other people, we started talking and reminiscing, and since I always carry my tape recorder with me I started out just with the idea to tape these experiences. I saw immediately what I had to do and it scared the hell out of me at first because I realized that it was a hell of a job because in this small community at that time there were about 15 people over the age of 80 and three or four over 90 whe were sharp, active, and extremely loquatious and had a tremendous amount of information. So I began with the initial interviews which I did with my great uncle, my grandmother's youngest brother.

Emergency declared

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis last night declared a state of emergency as snow, whipped horizontally by winds as high as 92 miles an hour, blasted Massachusetts yesterday, creating extreme hazards for pedestrians and drivers.

University officials contacted last night by the Collegian said a decision about the University closing today would not be made until the early hours of the morning.

The blizzard conditions caused cancellations of nearly all Pioneer Valley activities last night.

According to meteorologists at the Windsor Locks, Conn. Weather Service, the storm will continue into the evening, with temperatures in the teens to low 20's. Snow accumulation is projected to eight to 16 inches.

Area police departments reported generally hazardous road conditions but no major accidents.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night said, "If the weather forecast is right, I can't see not cancelling, considering the wind and drifting snow. Usually if the snow continues like this past midnight or 1 a.m., physical plant won't be able to keep lots open."

"I'll be there tomorrow, though," Bromery added.

UMass Director of Public Affairs Daniel M. Melley last night said, "we used to have a policy that we're always open. Now we have more commuting students and faculty coming in from area towns. The only reason we really close is because of the need to clear the parking lots.

"We have closed already once over intersession in early January, and once let people go home early," Melley noted.

He said the University closed once or twice last year.

Director of Physical Plant George A. Norton last night said "we work 24 hours in shifts and call contractors in after midnight to work on the parking lots. If it tapers off by one or two o'clock we can usually make out alright. We check out the conditions about 4 a.m.," for a final recommendation to the administration.

"In some ways this storm is worse than the storms over intersession," Norton added, "because of the wind and drifting."

The Amherst Police Department reported excellent conditions throughout the town. Roads had been sanded by 8 p.m. and there were no reported accidents and no extra cruisers on the roads, they said.

However, State Police in Northampton reported very hazardous, slippery road conditions with numerous cars skidding off roadways. The State Police said an extra half-dozen cruisers are patrolling for distressed motorists.

Belchertown and Hadley police departments also indicated treacherous conditions but reported no serious accidents.

In addition to class cancellations last night, buses stopped at 6 p.m., the library, swimming, tennis and the acting workshop were closed.

The Graduate Student Senate and Distinguished Visitors Program meetings were cancelled.

Rescheduled events include the International Womens' Week meeting, for tonight at 7:30 in Campus Center 172, and the Asian American Student Association meeting, for tomorrow evening at 6:30 in Campus Center 809.

The Everywomen's Center Council will meet next Monday as usual. Notification will be given on the rescheduling of the Undergraduate Communications Committee meeting at a later date.

UM janitor found dead; second death in four days

A janitor working in George Washington Tower in Southwest was found dead there yesterday morning from an apparent heart attack, according to UMass police.

Fifty-five-year-old Joseph Karcz, of 14 Stewart St., Bondsville, was found yesterday at 11:05 a.m. near a nineteenth floor elevator by a student and was pronounced dead at the scene by medical examiner Thomas F. Corriden.

It is the second death on the campus in the past four days. Nineteen-year-old Scott C. Burgess of 414 Baker dormitory was killed crossing North Pleasant Street early Saturday morning. Funeral services for Burgess are being held tomorrow at All Soul's Church in Braintree.

Funeral arrangements for Karcz have not been completed yet by the Motyka Funeral Home of Three Rivers.

Karcz worked at UMass as a janitor since 1965.

Booze sales up as residents ready for snow

By BILL SUNDSTROM
Collegian Staff

Area residents braved the early stages of the snowstorm yesterday to stock up on liquor for a day stranded at home or dorm, according to local package store proprietors.

At Russell's in Amherst a salesperson reported that several students from Brett House at UMass had arrived on cross-country skis to make their purchases. "We've been busy," he noted, saying beer has been the principal item.

Don Putnam at the Spirit Haus claimed similar heavy business, saying everybody seemed to be in a good mood in anticipation of a day off.

Things were a little less cheerful at Petes Package Store, which had to cancel deliveries due to last night's inclement conditions.

Most other package stores reported relatively high sales until around 7 or 8 p.m. when traveling became virtually impossible.

The Blue Wall had better business than usual, as on-campus students filtered in to spend a snowy evening. But other area bars reported things were very slow. At the Time Out in Amherst, for example, the relatively few customers sat sipping schnapps, according to bartender Mike Fusia. Other bars in town suffered similarly poor attendance.

Sylvanites optimistic in face of arson

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

McNamara residents have adopted a "wait and see" attitude toward arson, in the hopes that the trash room fires that have plagued the dorm for the past three semesters will not continue. Fires of suspicious origin began in fall semester of 1976 during finals week and continued until last semester.

Students in the Sylvan area dorm banded together during finals last semester to watch the trash rooms in an attempt to catch the arsonist. No fires were set, and the arsonist remained undetected after the patrols began, but students who participated in the all-night watches have said they are thankful other residents did not suffer the inconvenienceof middle - of - the - night fire alarms. The 24 fires that have been set have occurred in the middle of the night and only on the first, second and third floors.

The arsonist was not caught despite investigations by UMass and federal law enforcement officers.

"The biggest factor in catching this person is going to be the residents in the building," Keith Holye, a fire safety officer at UMass, said. Hoyle said if the arsonist knows residents are on the lookout it may discourage more arson attempts.

None of the students interviewed have considered leaving McNamara because of the fires but many said their parents expressed concern. Some said parents urged their children to leave the dorm. Several women on the second and third floors said they have ropes stored in their rooms in the event they are ever trapped in their rooms by fire.

Residents on the first, second and third floors said they would have considered moving to a lower floor had they lived on an upper floor, but residents living on the fourth floor and higher did not appear to be as concerned about being trapped on a floor too high to jump from as the other residents.

David Ritchkoff, McNamara head of residence, said the apparent lack of concern was probably due to the fact that those residents had never experienced a fire on their floor and did not share the apprehension of the lower floor residents.

"Concern or not, they (residents) know what to do," Ritchkoff said. Ritchkoff said he has attempted to educate the residents in emergency procedures but he cannot make decisions for them regarding responses to fire alarms.

Several residents said they have not left the dorm during alarms because they assume the fire is contained in the trash rooms. Both Ritchkoff and Hoyle both point out that smoke inhalation will kill even faster than flames, and they said students should weight this possibility.

There have been no fires set this semester but as a preventive measure Robert L. Campbell, director of Residential Resource Management, has authorized trash removal on weekends for the entire Sylvan area, paying janitors time-and-a-half. Campbell said he hoped this measure would prevent further fires in the trash rooms.

Last semester the trash room doors were locked after 11 p.m., but the arsonist kicked in the slats at the bottom of the door and set fire to the trash. Three fires were also set in the mailroom. Ritchkoff said wooden blocks are being placed over the slats to prevent entry to the trash rooms.

Reactions to the recently installed smoke detectors appears to be favorable in the dorm, although residents of McNamara have a number of complaints about them. Many students interviewed said smoke detectors were not enough to protect them from fire and suggested additional fire extinguishers, fire blankets and smoke detectors in the lounges of each suite. Hoyle said detectors will be installed in the lounges during the summer.

Students in McNamara also expressed concern that many residents sleep through some of the fire alarms. The alarms are at opposite ends of each hall and residents said the sound is not loud enough to wake people in the suites in the middle of the hall.

Mary Kelvie, the dorm president, said the experience has created a community spirit within the dorm. "It was amazing how people pulled together," Kelvie said.

UM criminal complaints, arrests rise

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

The annual Department of Public Safety report for 1977, released last week, reveals a slight rise in the number of criminal complaints over the preceeding year with an attendant increase in arrests.

The department received 2,175 complaints and made 165 criminal arrests, about 30 more than the preceeding year. Theft of private property declined slightly, however, and theft loses of state property dropped sharply to the lowest level since 1974, totalling about $41,000. The proportion of goods recovered also declined significantly.

Of the 319 persons arrested, including those taken into protective custody, 303 were male and 16 female. Only about 90 were students, while the remainder were either people from off-campus or juveniles. The average suspect was white, male, and college-aged.

The most common crimes were larceny, 793; vandalism, 244 and breaking and entering, 129. There was also one kidnapping, five sexual assaults, and 27 sex offenses. The report indicates a slight increase in motor vehicle theft with 62 cases recorded. Vehicles were most commonly stolen between 3 and 11 p.m. and were usually locked.

Motor vehicle-related arrests declined slightly to total 47 for the year, two fewer than in 1976. The department issued 830 traffic citations, about 300 more than were issued the preceeding year. Motor vehicle accidents increased by about 30 per cent to 207, the highest total in the past five years. In related categories the number of parking tickets declined slightly to about 17,000, perhaps reflecting the slight decline in the number of vehicles towed to about 3,500.

Aside from investigating and processing criminal incidents, about 70 per cent of the departments resources were devoted to other services aimed mainly at crime prevention and improving community relations. These include Operation Help Eliminate Losing Possessions, a program designed to reduce campus thefts; Operation Identification, which involves inscribing property with a number registered with the department and posting stickers stating the property has been so engraved; and a program to prevent vandalism.

A cash handling analysis for the Amherst campus was undertaken in compliance with insurance requirements. Increased money-handling created the need for greater security. The analysis resulted in the acquisition of a low profile armored van, which is expected to save the University money in addition to providing greater flexibility and control of money movement.

In addition, the department handled 7,019 service calls, mainly via telephone and radio, of which only a small percentage were unfounded or false. The service calls ranged from complaints about intoxicated persons to annoying phone calls to a lone bomb threat. There were also 175 false fire alarms, which resulted in 64 arrests.

Within the department itself emphasis has been placed on personnel retraining and continuing law enforcement education as well as maximizing departmental and University resources. Three officers have completed their masters degrees, four are in the process of doing so, and eleven officers possess bachelors degrees.

A unit combining male and female police officers, specially trained, now exists to investigate sex-related criminal offenses. Drug education and law enforcement, which "remain a constant concern for academic communities," are facilitated by in-service training, including familiarization with latest drug techniques and usage."

Future plans for the department revolve around a victimization survey developed by the Student Activities Research Evaluation Office and members of the police department. The survey is intended to indicate community needs. Currently planned is a COP-IN program to reduce community misunderstanding of the department. The program will foster personal interaction between public safety personnel and community residents during the course of duty, rather than only when a crime has occurred, according to the report.

Sadat sees peace with U.S. help

WASHINGTON [AP] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said yesterday there could be peace in the Middle East "in less than a week" if Israel agrees to return to its old borders and make Jerusalem an open city.

But he foresees little prospect of that unless the United States exerts pressure on Israel. "You can insist," Sadat said in a speech to the National Press Club, "that disputes should be settled through compliance with the rule of law, not by submission to the dictates of force."

So far, there has been no indication that Sadat has persuaded President Carter to lean harder on Israel. A White House statement issued at the conclusion of Carter's weekend talks with Sadat at Camp David, Md., said the U.S. role was that of a "friend of both sides."

At the same time, though, the administration appeared to be nearing a decision to sell a squadron of F-5E jets to Egypt. Carter invited a small group of influential members of Congress to the White House Sunday night, and Vice President Walter F. Mondale met with others yesterday on Capitol Hill.

"It is my belief he is close to a decision," Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said, "and I would like to see him delay it."

Once Congress is formally notified, it has 30 days to veto a weapons sale. Javits wants Congress to have the chance to consider the proposal without a deadline.

Sadat, answering questions after his speech, his first major exposure to the American public on his five-and-a-half day visit, promised not to use U.S. weapons against Israel. "I have chosen my faith — with peace," he said.

The political negotiations between Egypt and Israel have been in suspension since Jan. 18 when they broke up over the Palestinian issue and amid some high-voltage rhetoric between leaders of the two sides.

Over the weekend, it was decided to have Assistant Secretary of State Alfred L. Atherton Jr. shuttle between Cairo and Jerusalem to try to complete an agreement on a declaration of principles.

"It is true that I am rather disappointed, but I am determined to persevere," Sadat said of the snagged negotiations. "I shall continue my mission for the sake of Arabs and Israelis alike."

In outlining the Egyptian views, he gave no hint that any have softened.

Sadat insisted that Israel give up all the territory the Arabs lost in the Six Day War of 1967, permit the establishment of a Palestinian state linked with Jordan and have its capital, Jerusalem, converted into an undivided, but open city.

Israel has offered to give up some territory gained in the war, while maintaining settlements and a military presence, and has opened the possibility of self-determination for the Palestinians in the future.

Egyptian president Anwar Sadat wipes his brow as he addresses the National Press Club yesterday. He said he has made all the concessions he plans in the current Middle East negotiations and called on the U.S. to help make Israel reciprocate.

Meeting today over bus beef

Student government representatives and administration officials meet today at 3:30 p.m. in Campus Center 172 to discuss long term funding for the UMass Transit Service.

Among those expected to attend the meeting are Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance James L. McBee, Director of Balanced Transportation and Parking William Barrett and representatives from the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, the student senate Rents and Fees Committee and the Commuter Collective.

The major disagreement centers around the percentages of the total bill that will come from student government funds as opposed to the portion that will come from funds from the parking office.

The administration wants 85 per cent of the total to come from student government funds and 15 per cent from the parking office. Student government representatives want a 70-30 split.

McBee yesterday said that the parking system does not have enough money to assume 30 per cent of the bill. He said the 70-30 split would not insure the solid financial base that is necessary for the transit system to run smoothly in the future.

Student Government Association Co-President Jon Hite, who will also attend the meeting, last night responded to McBee's comments saying "Students don't have the resources in their pockets to pay for the bus rides of faculty and administrators."

Hite said that all the student representatives want is a fair agreement. "We are willing to pay for the percentage of the bus budget that students ride. Administrators should be willing to pay their share."

Tillson inquiry unnecessary

A counsel for the State Bureau of Building and Construction yesterday said that a request made by two representatives earlier this week for an investigation of the Tillson heating plant at UMass-Amherst is unnecessary.

"There is really nothing for them (the state) to investigate," said Malcolm MacPhail, counsel for the BBC. MacPhail said that the BBC was conducting its own technical investigation into the malfunctioning of the $10 million plant which worked for eight months before it broke down in 1974. The BBC oversaw the construction of the plant.

State Reps. Andrew Card, R-Holbrook, and Philip Johnston, D-Marshfield, called for an investigation of the Tillson plant to be included in an overall investigation of the BBC. This overall investigation began after two state senators last year were convicted on extortion charges for bribing a New York consulting firm which contracted with the BBC in the construction of UMass-Boston.

Allen will hear complaints

Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen yesterday said he would be happy to meet with anyone who feels he ignored faculty opinions when he appointed English department chairman Richard W. Noland as acting dean of the Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts.

The Collegian last week received reports Allen bypassed faculty recommendations when he appointed Noland to the position he himself vacated when he was named acting provost.

Paul L. Puryear last month was fired as provost by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

"You can't please everyone," Allen said, talking about his appointment. "On balance, I think it's the best appointment."

N. England awaits storm

A young New York delivery boy struggles to push and...

[UPI] — A New England blizzard yesterday hurled hurricane force winds and heavy snow on the southern part of the region, leaving the northern tier in a state of anticipation as the second major northeastern within 17 days struck.

Winthrop and part of Revere were ordered evacuated because of surging tides, but high snow drifts blocked rescue efforts.

Thirteen thousand fans at the Beanpot Hockey Tournament in the Boston Garden were stranded there.

The last time New England was battered Jan. 20, a storm dropped nearly four feet of snow — establishing 24-hour snowfall record at some points.

The National Weather Service last night said snow, marine and flood warnings were in effect across the region, with snow accumulations expected to range from 16 inches in the south to six inches up north by tonight.

Fierce, gusty winds lashed the region's three southern states, causing sudden snow drifts and near-zero visibility. The Cape Cod community of Chatham, Mass., last night reported winds gusting to 22 mph.

Boston Mayor Kevin White yesterday declared a city-wide snow emergency and state legislators on Beacon Hill called it a day early and scurried home.

A 682-foot Greek oil tanker, the Global Hope, was reported taking on water in the choppy waters of Salem Harbor last night.

A Coast Guard spokesperson said the boat was taking on water about five miles out in the harbor near Bakers Island due to a split seam in the engine room. Rescue vessels were sent out to aid the 682-foot long tanker and its 34-member crew, but their efforts were being hampered by rough waters.

The spokesperson said the Coast Guard had lost communication with the tanker and was unable to determine how serious the vessel's problem was. It contained 3,500 barrels of oil.

Low temperatures last night and today are predicted to range from around zero to 10 above in the north to the teens in the south, weather officials said. They warned travelers not to "venture out unless absolutely necessary."

Police across the state reported roads in poor condition, despite plowing and sanding.

"The roads are bad, driving is bad, visibility is bad," a spokesperson for the Boston police said. "We have problems on all streets."

He said it was too early for police to compare effects of this storm to those of the Jan. 20 near-blizzard, which dumped close to 22 inches of snow on the city.

The Boston School Department announced there would be no school today.

In Connecticut Gov. Ella T. Grasso, unable to get through snarled traffic, walked more than one mile through blizzard-like conditions yesterday trying to get to the state's storm control center.

The snow-covered governor was about a block away from the center at the state armory when she hitchhiked a ride from a telephone company truck driver to complete her journey.

"I've never been out walking in a storm this bad. I thought I was going to get frostbite," she said. Officials handed Grasso black army socks to warm up her feet as soon as she arrived at the shelter.

The storm center reported snow accumulations in Connecticut ranging from 6 to 8 inches.

Snow hits seaboard

[AP] — Millions of East Coast residents struggled through a wind-driven snowstorm yesterday as schools closed and traffic, business, and government slowed to a near standstill for the second time in 17 days.

From Washington, D.C., through the Middle Atlantic states and into New England, authorities reported drifting, blowing snow that started before dawn and continued through the day, cutting visibility to almost zero.

By midmorning, there was as much as half a foot of snow piled on the ground in some places. Forecasts generally called for anywhere from one to one - and - a - half feet by the time the storm ends today. Commuter train and bus lines reported lengthy delays; airport runways were closed while crews tried to clear the snow; major roads were passable — but just barely.

In New York City more than a foot of snow fell yesterday closing businesses and schools, stranding tens of thousands and bringing railroad and air transportation to a halt.

The National Weather Service predicted 12 to 18 inches of snow would fall in the city before it all ends early today. Up to two feet of snow was predicted for parts of northern New Jersey.

A total of 13-inches had fallen in New York City's Central Park by 7 p.m.

Mayor Edward Koch declared a full snow emergency in the city shortly after midnight severely restricting auto traffic.

The storm did not come anywhere near the all-time record snowfall of 26.4 inches that hit the city in 1947. Only last month, a total of 13.6 inches fell on the city.

A weather service spokesperson said the storm, which reduced visibility to near zero in many parts of the city, was not a blizzard because "you've got to have sustained winds of 30 mph or more and temperatures in the teens."

Newark Airport was closed at 12:30 p.m. because of the snow. Planes were still departing from Kennedy and LaGuardia Airports at midday, but there were long delays. Arriving flights were diverted starting at midmorning.

Children in hundreds of communities got an extra holiday as classes were canceled. Public offices and courts were closed. Legislative sessions were called off. Many businesses said they planned to send employees home early. Snow emergencies were declared in several areas as authorities tried to limit traffic as much as possible.

....pull a cartload of groceries across second Avenue as blizzard belts East coast.

Getting around in the storm was difficult as cars got stuck in huge drifts on the city's side streets.

In the outlying borough of Queens, Kenneth Kaltman and his wife Alice, put their snowmobiles at the service of police. They each took a police officer with his radio aboard a snowmobile and set out to find stranded motorists.

Most subways were running on near normal schedules, but some service was suspended because of snow and ice on the tracks of above-ground, elevated sections.

The Long Island Rail Road commuter line reported 12 of its trains were stranded at various points and some were delayed for many hours before diesel engines reached them and pushed them along the line.

Trading on area stock exchanges was light. The New York and American exchanges announced 2 p.m. closings — two hours early — but said they hoped to open at 10 a.m., today as scheduled. Also closing early because of the weather were the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, the New York Mercantile Exchange, Commodity Exchange Inc., New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange and New York Cotton Exchange.

The Midwest, still digging out from a blizzard that hit a little more than a week ago, reported relatively few problems yesterday, but the West Coast was suffering torrential rains. Five people in Southern California died Sunday in traffic accidents caused by rain and mudslides, and forecasters predicted heavy rains for Northern California during the coming week.

In the East, the National Weather Service issued blizzard warnings for many areas. Forecasters said up to 20 inches of snow might fall in some New York City suburbs as the storm continued yesterday night. The one-day record for the city — 17.5 inches — was set on Feb. 5, 1961; the Jan. 20 snowstorm brought 13.6 inches.

Weather officials, who failed to predict the severity of last month's storm, had been warning of yesterday's snow since Saturday and authorities tried to take extra precautions.

Blizzard cuts Belchertown budget

By RICHARD BARRELL
Collegian Staff

BELCHERTOWN — Selectman Kenneth Snow here last night told other selectmen he expects the highway department will spend a little less than half of the money left in the snow removal budget removing snow dumped in the town last night and today.

The town has spent $55,000 so far this winter clearing snow, and approximately $18,000 is left in the account. The town spent $60,000 last year, according to Snow.

The selectmen in a two-hour meeting also instructed an operator of a halfway house, which is part of the UMass Advocate Program, to appear before the town planning board for possible zoning violations.

The selectmen also approved a transfer of a liquor license and a transfer of town funds to pay school-crossing guards.

Jeff Roberts, of Chauncy Walker Road, appeared before the board last night to explain the operations of his School for Independent Living.

Neighbors to Roberts reportedly complained to selectmen about the school.

Roberts told the board his school is similar to a halfway house where young male adults, referred by the state Division of Youth Services, learn skills needed to make the transition to living on their own.

He said the school is approved by the state Office of Children. Roberts was instructed by the board to meet with the town planning board to discuss zoning laws.

The selectmen approved the transfer of the liquor license of the Park Lane Inn on Walnut Street from Helen A. Smith to town resident Dave Cote and his brother, Robert J., of Chicopee. The new owners said they will re-name the lounge to the Common Pub Inc.

Board approval of the license transfer is contingent upon routine approval by the Secretary of State's office, according to selectmen.

Selectmen also approved the transfer of funds from the police department to the school budget so that the town won't have to pay unemployment to the three school crossing-guards employed during the school year.

State law says the guards do not have to be paid unemployment during the summer if they are guaranteed jobs in the fall. The guards are paid $6.50 a day.

The selectmen also agreed to request in writing a representative from New England Telephone Co. explain to them poor telephone service in the area. Town residents have complained to the selectmen about numerous problems with their telephone service.

Women's group scores victory

"Women Against Violence Against Women (WAVAW) scored a major victory recently when a New York judge ordered an obscenity trial for the film "Snuff."

The film shows the rape, torture and death of a woman who is said to have been actually murdered in order to film the sequence.

New York County Court Judge Louis Scheinman reversed the 1976 dismissal of charges brought by WAVAW against theater owner Richard Dames, who screened the film in March 1976. Scheinman said in his decision that the action of the lower court had been an "abuse of discretion."

The film has been widely distributed, despite protests from women's organizations around the country. WAVAW, which has been organizing a nationwide boycott against record albums which depict violence against women on their covers, hired a special prosecutor after District Attorney Emmanuel Gellman refused to prosecute Dames.

Dames' lawyer plans to appeal the recent decision.

Mandela visitors jailed

Four white South African women said they will accept jail terms rather than answer police questions about their visits to "banned" black nationalist Winnie Mandela.

Mandela, a moderate leader of the country's black movement, was banished to the Orange Free State in South Africa after she was accused last year of encouraging students in the black township of Soweto to resist police during confrontations.

The four women said they were arrested after they visited Mandela in her dirt-floored hut in the village of Brandfort. Each of them spoke to Mandela separately, they said, to conform to her banning restrictions. Under South African law, a banned person may not speak to more than one person at a time, is subject to continuous house arrest, and must obey a dusk-to-dawn curfew.

The women said that while visiting Mandela, they were arrested and taken for questioning, but refused to answer any questions posed by South African security police. Under South African law, the women said, if they made a statement to police, they could later be called as state witnesses.

Said one of the women: "We refuse to participate in the continued persecution of Winnie."

Mandela has spent more than a decade in prison on various charges relating to her political activities.

Her husband, Nelson Mandela, is the leader of the banned African National Congress, and is serving a life sentence for alleged subversive political crimes.

Three of the women charged with violating the banning order were sentenced to one year in prison for "obstructing the course of justice." The fourth woman, 72-year-old Helen Joseph, was sentenced to four months in jail after the judge was advised that she had a bad heart. Joseph, herself, was once banned for five years and has spent nine years under house arrest for her anti-apartheid activities.

Child sexual abuse increasing

Two St. Louis physicians report that sexual abuse is probably the most unreported and underdiagnosed type of child mistreatment.

Doctors Barbara Herjanic and Ronald Wilbois report that among 132 children treated at the Saint Louis Children's Hospital were victims of sexual abuse.

The oldest, a 13-year-old girl, was pregnant after having been raped by her grandfather. Two three-year-old girls, the doctors claim, had gonorrhea.

Doctors Herjanic and Wilbois warn that the sexual abuse of children appears to be on the increase in the United States.

Civil Rights Act; Blacks only?

The Kerr-McGee Corporation, in a bizarre legal move, has asked a federal court in Oklahoma City to throw out the Karen Silkwood civil rights suit, alleging that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 only protects black people.

In a related move, the F.B.I. has also asked that the Silkwood suit against the bureau be dismissed, claiming that the F.B.I. is immune from lawsuits under the Civil Rights Act.

The Silkwood family is suing Kerr-McGee and the F.B.I. for conspiring to cover up the circumstances behind the death of Karen Silkwood. Silkwood was an atomic fuel worker who was killed in a 1974 car crash just before she was scheduled to make public evidence of alleged safety hazards at the Kerr-McGee nuclear facility in Crescent City, Oklahoma.

Attorneys for Kerr-McGee last week filed a motion asking that the $160,000 (dollar) suit by Silkwood's family be summarily dismissed. The firm contended that even if it had been in the conspiracy it was accused of, there was no cause for a civil rights suit. The 1964 Civil Rights Act, Kerr-McGee lawyers said, only protects black people.

Lawyers for the Silkwood family say that because of the new legal motions filed by Kerr-McGee and the F.B.I., and because a new judge has been appointed to the case, the trial, which was set for April, will probably be postponed.

Wife-rape law remains misdemeanor

An all-male committee in California's state legislature has decided not to make it a felony offense for a man to rape his wife.

Under present law, wife-rape, like littering, is a misdemeanor offense, punishable by a fine of $500 (dollars) or less and a possible short prison term.

The State Assembly's criminal justice committee, in deciding against more severe punishment for wife-rape, reasoned that passing the proposed law would mean a man convicted of raping his wife would be branded as a sex offender for the rest of his life.

The committee's chairperson explained that passing the bill would intensify family battles if a wife had the legal right to prosecute her husband for rape.

NOW chapter fighting slogan

A chapter of the National Organization for Women in Mississippi is trying to get something done about a tee shirt being marketed in a Biloxi shopping center.

The tee shirt reads, on its front, "in case of rape ... this side up."

NOW says the shirt is manufactured by a firm using the brand name "Rat-Hole" on its products.

Volunteer army costs more

WASHINGTON [AP] — Six years of the all-volunteer military force have cost $18.4 billion more than the military draft system, far in excess of the Pentagon's own estimates, the General Accounting Office said yesterday.

The congressional auditing agency said in a new study that there is unlikely to be any reduction in the current $3.6 billion higher cost of the volunteer force annually.

The study was released by Comptroller General Elmer Staats at a hearing of a Senate armed services subcommittee chaired by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.

Nunn said the 2.1 million-member volunteer military is costing so much that it is taking away from other major defense programs and will inevitably mean a "steady erosion" of U.S. defense capabilities.

The GAO found that $14.2 billion of the additional cost since the draft ended in 1971 has gone to pay substantially higher salaries to new enlistees and junior officers in all the services.

Assistant Defense Secretary John P. White acknowledged that the $14.2 billion should be attributed to the volunteer force, but said military pay would probably have risen anyway far above the low salaries paid low-ranking soldiers in the 1960's.

Nunn, an early critic of the all-volunteer concept, stopped short of calling for a return to the mandatory military draft. But he said a broad military-civilian national service conscription plan should be examined.

Fire leaves fourteen homeless in Lynn

LYNN [AP] — A four-alarm fire raged through a three-story apartment-business building near downtown Lynn yesterday leaving 14 persons homeless.

Fire officials said five persons including three firefighters were hurt, but were released after treatment at Lynn Hospital.

District Fire Chief Vincent Vassallo said the blaze apparently began on the top floor of the building, causing the roof to cave in and portions of the upper story to fall to the second floor.

The gutted building also housed two businesses on the first floor.

Men and equipment from six surrounding communities joined in battling the blaze which broke out about 9:50 a.m.

BU chem lab burns, several examined

BOSTON [AP] — Fifteen firefighters and 16 school workers were tested for breathing burning chemicals after fire heavily damaged two floors of laboratories yesterday at Boston University.

Though none of the 31 people suffered any apparent serious injuries, they were taken to Boston City Hospital and Beth Israel Hospital to be examined for inhalation of fumes.

A few of the firefighters were found to have high blood pressure after fighting the fire, a department spokesperson said.

The Boston arson squad was investigating the early morning blaze that broke out in a third floor chemistry lab in the Stone Science Building on Commonwealth Avenue.

Exploding chemicals spread the fire, which destroyed the third floor and heavily damaged chemistry labs on the fourth floor.

The Fire Department said doctors were trying to find out what chemicals were stored in the labs so they could determine whether the fumes could have harmed the people who breathed them.

Senate urges gov. to repeal state tax

BOSTON [AP] — In a bipartisan attack on Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, the Massachusetts Senate overwhelmingly urged the governor to repeal the state income surtax.

The Senate voted 27-1 in favor of a resolution urging the tax cut. The resolution has no ffect other than to express the sense of the Senate on the issue.

The resolution was proposed by the six Senate Republicans but then amended by a motion of Senate Majority Leader William Bulger, D-Boston.

The Bulger amendment replaces the general resolution urging a tax cut with a more specific measure calling on the governor to file legislation to repeal the seven-and-a-half per cent surtax on the state's personal income tax.

Locke, in arguing for the measure, said, "The governor's budget is nothing more or less than an election year attempt to convince the people he's on an economy kick."

Referring to the governor's estimated $134 million surplus, Locke said, "In my mind that's the people's money to begin with.

"We knew the governor's 1975 tax bill would overtax the people," he added.

Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, said he favored repeal of the surtax as "the only way to directly put money into the pockets of the taxpayers of this state."

Buckley enters race for governor

BOSTON [UPI] — Middelsex County Sheriff John J. Buckley jumped into the Republican gubernatorial campaign yesterday, attacking Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for "mismanagement of the worst sort."

Buckley, 48, of Belmont, blamed Dukakis' mismangagement for eroding the confidence of business in the state. His announcement emphasized the state's fiscal concerns, his administrative abilities and Dukakis' failures.

The former seminarian was very low key about social issues — decriminalization of marijuana and a ban of handguns — which he backed and worked to give him statewide publicity.

However, Citizens Against Buckley, comprised of members of Massachusetts Council of Sportspeople clubs and other anti-gun control groups, vowed to work active to defeat Buckley, said Victor Anop of the sportspeople clubs.

Buckley announced his candidacy at a half dozen cities throughout the state but cancelled his last stop of the day, Hyannis, because of yesterday's snow storm.

He is the third candidate to enter the GOP primary which already includes House Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch of Beverly, and Edward F. King, a Boston businessperson.

Buckley also joined the ranks of the other republiians and Democratic hopeful Edward J. King in reminding voters Dukakis promised no new taxes four years ago and was governor during a period when there were hikes in corporate sales, meals, income, cigarette and liquors taxes.

Parents pull girl from school

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — A Nashua couple, who refused to let their 15-year-old daughter attend public school because they felt she was exposed to obscenity, was jailed indefinitely yesterday.

Robert and Carin LaMon of Nashua were found in contempt of court and sent to the Hillsboro County Jail by Nashua District Court Judge Aaron Harkaway until they agree to bring their daughter, Juanita, to a truancy hearing.

"I will stay in jail as long as they want me there," said Ms. LaMon, as she was led to her cell. "If protecting our daughter's moral values is a crime, we are guilty."

The couple has refused to keep the girl in public school because they claim she was not receiving a proper education. They objected to certain books in the school library, such as a book on the Rolling Stones rock group, which they characterized as "obscene."

Before entering jail, Ms. LaMon circulated excerpts from the books she considers obscene. They included definitions of four-letter words from the American Heritage Dictionary.

"Books taken at random from the school's library dealt with perversion, pornography, blasphemy and the promotion of sex activities and family planning," said Ms. LaMon.

Earlier, the daughter was expelled from a private school after Ms. LaMon objected to "open-ended discussions on things like prostitution and pimps" in the required religion classes.

The couple had appealed the contempt finding to Hillsboro County Superior Court last week, but the appeal was denied. They said they removed their daughter from public school after the board of education and the state's education commissioner failed to act on their complaints.

Ms. LaMon said her daughter is living away from home and will "stay where she is" while the couple goes to jail.

"I am sick of it. I might as well grab the bull by the horns, go to jail and do what I must. I have my proof that what they're getting in school is absolutely nothing that would make her a good citizen. Until I have my chance to prove why I am taking her out, I will accept the jail sentence," Ms. LaMon said.

The couple contended that the teaching of humanistic principles in the Nashua schools was "anti-God."

Cleanup begins for Maine oil spill

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — Cleanup crews began clearing pockets of oil from ice-coated rocks and beaches yesterday after 23,000 gallons of heating fuel leaked from a coastal tanker that struck a submerged ledge in Portland Harbor.

The spill — Maine's biggest in more than five years — took place when the Harold Reinauer, carrying more than 500,000 gallons of No. 2 oil, ran aground in 15 feet of water on Diamond Island Ledge, the Coast Guard said.

Within hours, concentrations of the light, easily dispersed oil washed ashore in at least four areas of South Portland, but the Coast Guard said most of the spillage appeared to be headed out to sea.

A winter northeaster moved toward the state as the cleanup effort got under way. While the storm was expected to cause problems for work crews, officials were hopeful that heavy waves would help disperse the oil.

Neither the Harold Reinauer nor her seven-member crew was in any danger from the time she ran aground shortly after 1 a.m. while shuttling oil from the King Resources tank farm on Casco Bay's Long Island to the Texaco pier in South Portland.

Cmdr. John Ekman of the Coast Guard Marine Safety Office in Portland said Boston Fuel Transportation Inc., which owns the 223-foot tanker, was financing the cleanup effort.

The cause of the accident was not known, said Ekman. He said an investigation will be conducted Thursday "to determine what happened, why it happed and who was at fault."

The spill was confinnd to the tanker's No. 1 port tank, which contained nearly 60,000 gallons and was punctured below the water line. The leak as halted when the pressure of water entering the ruptured tank became equal to that of the oil seeping out.

After refloating on the incoming high tide, the Harold Reinauer transferred some oil to another tanker, then headed under her own power to the Texaco terminal, where the remainder of her cargo was unloaded.

The Marine Safety Office and a nine-member team from the Atlantic Strike Force directed the cleanup operations. Absorbent materials and vacuum pumps were being used to clear oil along the shore.

The strike force, based in Elizabeth City, N.C., is a team of oil spill experts on call 24 hours a day to respond to tanker emergencies.

Fire officials in Portland asked that booms be strung outside the city's waterfront area to avert the threat of fire under the piers, said Ekman.

He said the spill was the largest in Casco Bay since 1972, when the Norwegian tanker Tamano spilled 100,000 gallons of industrail oil.

News in Brief

Commodities head held without bail

NEW YORK [AP] — Alan Abrahams, the prison escape suspected of fleecing commodities options investors, was held without bail yesterday by a Manhattan federal judge in connection with a probation violation charge.

Judge Gerard L. Goettel, revoked $50,000 bail set last Friday after defense lawyer F. Lee Bailey submitted a motion designed to contest the charge.

Bailey asked the judge for permission to launch a defense based on Abrahams' claim that he was unfairly convicted of a bad check charge in late 1972 and sentenced to four to six years in New Jersey State Prison.

Bailey said Abrahams, who has been using the name James Carr in his Boston commodity options business, served 44 days at the Trenton prison before escaping.

"He claims his escape was predicated on the fact that he was unfairly convicted," Bailey added.

The judge reserved decision on the motion, allowing Bailey 10 days to submit a meorandum.

The government contends that Abrahams, 52, automatically violated a probation sentence for tax evasion issued in New York by a federal judge.

The sentence became effective in March 1973, when Abrahams finished an 18-month federal sentence for forging a $38 check to a sum of $7,438, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Beller.

He also told the judge setting bail for the defendant was "like putting cheese in front of a mouse."

Illegal aliens lose Social Security cards

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government, hoping to prevent illegal aliens from getting Social Security cards, is going to make it a little more difficult for everyone to get a card.

Starting later this year, anyone who applies for a new card will have to submit "documentary evidence of their age, identity and citizenship or alien status," Social Security Administration spokesperson Michael Naver said yesterday. Currently, only adults 18 and older are required to submit this evidence.

The adults also will have to appear in person at a Social Security office for an "in-depth" interview to make sure they never held a Social Security card, Naver said. They have been able to mail their application and documentary evidence in until now.

The government has not yet decided the youths will be able to mail their forms in or if they, too, must appear in person, Naver added.

Eighty per cent of the 8.2 million new Social Security cards issued in fiscal 1977 went to persons under 18, Naver said. The government expects to issue seven million new cards this year and 6.8 million in 1979.

It does not want them to fall into the hands of illegal aliens, estimates of whose numbers range from four million to 12 million.

Congress passed legislation in 1972 requiring the Social Security Administration to tighten up its card-issuing procedures to deal with the illegal alien problem as well as fraudulent use of Social Security cards by Americans.

The more than two million Americans who report losing their cards and ask for duplicates annually "also will have to submit evidence to show that they are who they say they are." Naver aid.

The government has issued 256 million Social Security cards since 1937, with 170 million held by persons alive today, he said.

The appliiants will have to submit two pieces of evidence, with a birth certificate being the preferred document.

Coal agreement may end 63-day strike

WASHINGTON [AP] — Negotiators reached agreement on a tentative contract yesterday that could end the 63-day old coal strike, the longest in the nation's history, sources said.

Officials at the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service called an afternoon news conferences and one source said, "I think Arnold Miller is planning to announce a tentative settlement."

Miller is expected to present the proposed terms to the UMW bargaining council, which is scheduled to meet today.

The council must approve the pact before it can be submitted to the union's rank and file for a ratification vote. The council rejected one proposed pact in 1974 before accepting a second one.

The 130 members of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, the industry bargaining arm, also must approve the terms of the tentative settlement, but that is largely a formality.

Even if the ratification process goes off without a hitch, the strike is not expected to end for several days.

The union's ratification process takes an estimated ten days and it is likely to be several more days before coal moves through the supply pipeline.

While terms of the pact were not officially announced, it was previously reported that bargainers had agreed to provisions aimed at curbing wildcat strikes and dealing with worker absenteeism.

One provision reportedly would require miners on wildcat strikes to reimburse their health and pension benefit funds for money their absence costs. The responsibility for payments would fall on industry if an arbitrator ruled a company were responsible for the strike.

Union bargainers also reportedly have agreed in some form to industry's demand for company-run benefit programs, but no details were available.

The tentative settlement also reportedly includes an industry agreement to guarantee health and pension benefits at an undisclosed level. Such a guarantee had been a major UMW demand at the bargaining table.

Wages for union members, now averaging about $7.80 an hour, were expected to rise by at least $2 an hour over the term of the contract, but it was not immediately known what terms were settled for other economic issues such as increases in pension size.

Telephone company makes $217.2 mill

BOSTON [AP] — New England Telephone Co. reported yesterday that 1977 was "an unusually good year" as profits rose to $217.2 million.

President William C. Mercer said last year's gain in new telephones was the best in four years, and the number of long distance calls also showed "healthy growth."

Profits in 1966 were $191.2 million. Last year's earnings per share rose to $4.10 from $3.61 in 1976.

Mercer said the telephone company will spend about $450 million this year on new equipment.

The company had operating revenues last year of almost $1.9 billion, compared with $1.7 billion in 1976.

Mayor receives strangler's letter

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Mayor Tom Bradley disclosed yesterday that he had received a letter from a man indicating he is the "Hillside Strangler" of 12 young women, wishes to surrender himself and "is a friend" to the mayor's office.

Bradley declined to say why he considered the letter genuine, but said he wanted to give the writer assurance that he could surrender in his office, not to the police, with no fear for his safety.

The mayor called a special news conference to announce the latest development in the bizarre case in which 12 victims, ranging in age 12 to 28, have been sexually molested and killed in the same fashion since Sept. 9. The last victim was found Dec. 14.

Bradley's statement took less than two minutes and afterwards he declined to answer any questions from reporters, saying "you can understand the delicate nature of the situation."

Bradley said the letter was postmarked Jan. 19, the day the assistant police chief declared at a news conference that the person or persons responsible for the killings would be caught and calling on anyone involved to surrender.

"The writer said he wanted to turn himself and a friend in only to the mayor's office, not to police," he said.

The writer also indicated he would forward a "certain item" after receiving assurances of his safety, Bradley said.

The mayor advised the writer to mail the item to him and to address the envelope exactly as the original was addressed so he can be assured he is receiving the information from the same individual.

Cooperation needed

Friday night's accident on North Pleasant Street which resulted in the death of Scott Burgess, a UMass sophomore, points up the hazard of having a major road cut through a well populated campus. Crossing North Pleasant Street is necessary for the large body of students that live in Orchard Hill, Northeast and Central, along with any student who has classes or labs in the science buildings on that side of the campus.

Re-routing this street has been an issue long discussed in the town of Amherst, with no resulting plan of action. Such stalling and indecision will probably result in the continued occurrence of accidents involving UMass students and drivers. If the town of Amherst and UMass cannot come up with a cooperative plan to alleviate this hazardous condition then UMass should consider building a tunnel like the one crossing under Massachusetts Ave. or the construction of pedestrian overpasses.

A call for disclosure

The construction of state buildings in Massachusetts seems to be a venture frought with shoddy workmanship and scandal. Two senators have been convicted of extortion in connection with construction at UMass Boston, and at the moment there are various proposed committees to investigate the questionable dealing the Bureau of Building Construction has had with the firm of McKee, Berger, and Mansueto, consultants for the construction of UMass Boston. Yesterday it was announced by Representatives Johnston and Card that they will propose that the UMass Amherst Tillson heating plant malfunctioning be investigated.

Statements made by Board of Trustees member Spiller, Chairman of the Trustee's Building and Grounds Committee called such an investigation politically motivated and ridiculed Rep. Johnston's ''incredible hindsight.'' Such statements sound very much like Watergate era smokescreen and so not address the basic question of why UMass spent 10 million dollars on a heating plant that does not work. Obviously the trustees are worried that their poor planning and judgement will become apparent to the state as a whole, especially if proff of illegal activities is uncovered.

The investigation proposed by Representatives Johnston and Card is a significant step in the direction of full public disclosure of questionable building practices in Massachusetts.

> Such statements sound very much like Watergate era smoke screen and do not address the basic question of why UMass spent ten million dollars on a heating plant that does not work.

Men's Center to reopen

To the Editor:

The South West Men's Center is opening its doors again for another semester of public service. Since the center's inception in April of 1975, SWMC has focused on meeting the needs of men in and around the university community.

Men experience many contradictions in the myth-ridden standards which we're expected to live by. This creates a great deal of tension that we're not allowed to readily acknowledge or openly express. Traditional means of resolving such stress are often personally frustrating and lead, as well, to our oppression of other people.

In response, SWMC tries to foster a non-competitive atmosphere where men can share common experiences and explore alternatives. Among the activities sponsored are: continual formation of support-consciousness raising groups; screening of the celebrated film ''Men's Lives'' [with a discussion facilitator in attendance]; a near-future 'Men and Rape' workshop sponsoring the film ''Rape Culture'' [participation reserved for men only]; assorted workshops designed to meet specific needs ranging from 'Street Coping' to 'Creative Cooking'; drop-in and short term peer counseling; Men and Masculinity colloquiums taught generally in the S.W. residential area; and lastly the Second Annual Spring Conference to be held this coming April.

As always SWMC is in need of work-study, volunteer or internship support. We encourage any men who have suggestions or want to become involved in media commentary, publicity or any of the programs above to get in touch with us soon. Beginning February 13, SWMC will be open every day, Monday through Friday, 12-5. Additional information is available from SWMC 545-0263, Ed Eitzer 546-8575, or Scott Douglas Weston 549-6082.

Rape counselor/advocates on call

To the Editor:

This letter is to provide you with information about our services to the UMass community for victims of sexual assault. We are a group of university and community women functioning to provide counseling and advocacy for such victims.

As counselors we provide crisis intervention and, when appropriate, long term counseling around issues related to sexual assault. As advocates we are present to support, aid, and be a source of information to the victim following the assault. We encourage a victim to receive immediate medical attention. If desired, we will accompany the victim to the University Health Services and will stay throughout the examination. Moreover, if the victim wants to contact Public Safety and-or press charges against the assailant, we will help in this process. We can serve as a resource and support for the victim during all aspects of the legal procedure.

A rape counselor-advocate is on call every night from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. The name and number of the counselor advocate on call can be obtained through the University Health Services [549-2671]. During the day calls should be made to the Everywoman's Center [545-0800] requesting to speak to a counselor-advocate. Any agency or individual may contact a counselor-advocate with a victim's permission.

Thank you for your attention and assistance in helping us to serve victims of sexual assault.

'The Bed' is here

The sybarite has arrived: The Bed is here. In circumstances where many students feel compelled to filch every benefit and bedpost, thousands of us sleep through expensive classes. Absenteeism is rampant.

The average morning offender may be found spread in sleepy splendor within the accommodating depths of The Bed. Slithering out of this fetal velleity has become a ritual of comic proportions. With long face and lugubrious demeanor they lament the early hour over lunch.

The afternoon class often sits in a torpid stupor on The Bed. They suck greedily on glowing herbal embers and cling tenaciously to the pernicious vapors. Such indolence is disturbed only when devouring prodigious quantities of edibles conveniently located near The Bed.

A horizontal attitude habitually replaces evening classes. The absentees stare with fascination at the stationary phosphorescent spots on the ceiling from The Bed. In supine trance, s-he arrives at the moment of truth. The social hour is nigh.

Dark and dubious dives are frequented during the social period, a time spent nursing an equally dark and dubious stranger and fraternizing with fermented spirits. Well rested from a sedate day, the truant retires to The Bed with one or both of these. Once again morning classes will play second violin to The Bed.

The Bed is the epitome of a society whose long range goals are retirement and recreation. Until recently, oozing into this institution more than eight hours a day was considered idle. Now, however, we know that most mental exertion is completed in an undisturbed subconscious state. Given this fact, I submit we should accede to the demands of our frail and mortal bodies in favor of our collective subconsciouses.

The ancient Romans never rose before noon if possible. At meals they reclined on couches. Their backs were straight and they were well read and witty — a far cry from the conquering barbarians. We, too, should enjoy this accomplishment of classical culture. Why go to classes when one can read a book in The Bed? Why, indeed, do anything elsewhere? We study on The Bed, work on The Bed, relax on The Bed, eat, play, and exercise on The Bed. From this perspective we may dream our way into unexplored depths of civilization — notably the hypnotic paralysis, the clammy handshake, and the vacuous blank stare of the burgeoning sybarite.

Fighting city hall

jim paulin

Boy oh boy, last semester it was ''poor me'' all the way; self pity, self righteousness and both self indulgence and self denial at the same time.

One incident after another. You try to walk the other way and there's another one coming down the sidewalk and you turn towards the road but the cars have the green light and then you try to back up but you can't go too far because if you do, you go through a window. So you sidestep the window but the incidents have got you up against the wall and after a while you can't tell friend from foe and life becomes one big vendetta and one thought controls your mind: ''I'm going to get the bastards.''

But after a while you realize that if you can forget about the idiots, they might forget about you, so why remind them?

And so, in the interest of promoting your own peace, you get sick of fighting all the time and you decide the best thing to do is to try to get your own house in order first, although you know that around here you have to pay a lot more for houses than you should, and maybe you think to yourself ''I wouldn't be paying this much money for rent anywhere else, except that around here the landlords know they can gouge us because it's a seller's market, and our presence in this area sends property values skyrocketing, yet we're treated as second class citizens by the locals, even though the university is the reason so many of them have jobs. Maybe we should all register to vote right where we're living right now instead of registering to vote where our parents do because this is where we're living right now. And maybe, since we're the bulk of the population or a very large hunk anyway, we should be treated as such. And maybe we can get some more public housing around here, in addition to the fun-but-frustrating dorms, UMass owned University Apartments and Lincoln Apartments (married student housing), North Village (also UMass property), and publicly subsidized by privately managed complexes like Village Park and Puffton Village. Good luck trying to find your way around Puffton Village — it seems the apartments were randomly assigned numbers by pulling them out of a hat, or maybe the people who put up the numbers did it by putting numbers on darts and, wearing blindfolds, they tossed them at the blueprint hung upside down on the wall.

So, even after you've decided to mellow out you're not going to let the bastards get you down anymore, you've got a long memory and a long list of grievances in your hand that won't disappear, that you can't wish way and you've got no choice but to deal with one way or another.

Like this newspaper I write for here that has a budget of over $300,000 but doesn't pay anything for writing or photography and that's why I've been walking around with a copy of a constitution of The Newspaper Guild I found over in the labor library in Draper Hall.

And as Jerry Rogers, who canonized me in his last column, says since everybody else around here has a union students may as well too.

But then again the United Electrical Workers lost a very close race at the Greenfield Recorder last year. The U.E. recently brought one of the striking miners from Kentucky to speak at the Greenfield Jr. High School and it was certainly a relief to people of all ages in the audience after having to suffer through so many ideologues at the University and their formulas to save the world they've learned from their books even though a lot of students don't really have as soft a life here as a lot of the ''my taxes pay for your education so shut up'' crowd might have you believe.

And sometimes, if you're a Collegian regular, you feel like a prisoner of the nerve fraying fluorescent dungeon of the Collegian office, and you walk around the hive of offices in both the Campus Center and Student Union and you think to yourself, ''all these politicians and bureaucrats and media people around here, this must be city hall, and maybe Whitmore's the State House, but none of those people up there were elected by anyone.

And then there's poor old Dean Field and his wonderful secretary Gladys Rodriguez. I first met Dean Field after I got a letter from him requesting my presence in his office for shining moons on the Campus Center Concourse, the UMass midway, and I was told I also mooned the student senate and he said the senate deserved it and one senator remarked later ''why doesn't he come down here and do it himself?''.

Reevaluating friendships

julie melrose

As women have come out of the linen closets and into the streets, one of the things they've discovered has been each other. The entry of women into public life has provided many new opportunities for women to meet and form friendships. While social interaction between women appears to be nothing new, a look at the dynamics of female friendships tells us they've not always been as close as they've seemed.

Traditionally, women have viewed each other as rivals. In order to be ''successful'', a woman had to associate herself with a man. Heterosexual women who were ''unattached'' competed for men's attention and affection. Once they entered relationships, they viewed other women as threats to their security. This rivalry made genuine female friendship almost impossible.

Until recently, scenerios like the following were never questioned in terms of acceptability: A woman, not having a date on a certain night, would make plans with a female friend. If a man (even one she didn't particularly like) called at the last minute and asked her out, she would accept his invitation and cancel her previous plans. Her female friend, who ''understood'', would wish her a fun evening.

This scenerio implies that male company in any form is preferable to the best of female company. The understanding attitude of the abandoned female friend shows the extent to which women, themselves, had internalized this message. This is only one small example of the way in which women, because their status and security has depended on connections with men, have learned to neglect and take advantage of each other.

The feminist movement has prompted a reevaluation of female friendships. Many women have begun reassessing all their relationships and asking some very important questions:

Who among my friends has shown a real interest in identifying and meeting my needs? With which of my friends have I been able to openly and comfortably discuss all aspects of my life; not only those that require no exploration of feelings? To which friends have I felt free to go when in need of support or affection, and which have made a genuine attempt to come through?

Often, those who ask such questions discover that more female friends than male come to mind. Most women have had lifelong training in the ''art of nurturing.'' They have learned to be good listeners; ready shoulders on which others may lean and cry. In preparation for careers of wife-and-motherhood, women have learned many skills that can be positively applied to friendship.

Men, in preparation for the ''breadwinner'' role, have been discouraged from assuming qualities of openness and emotional expressiveness. Those qualities have not been considered appropriate for men, and have been thought to be of little use in the working world. But their absence often serves as a barrier to close friendship.

Such friendship has long been viewed as a desirable base upon which solid relationships of all kinds might be built. Because of the discrepancy in male and female socialization, however, close friendships across gender lines are often difficult to establish and maintain.

Many heterosexual women have found themselves relying heavily on female friends for emotional intimacy and support while turning to men for satisfaction of their sexual and status needs. Such a fragmented approach to relationships can be unfulfilling. All the bases have been touched, but each relationship seems incomplete.

Some women have found that by relating sexually to other women and building a community in which association with men is not a requirement for success, more ''complete'' relationships can be formed. That is one option.

Other women have chosen to seek out individual men who have been able to overcome their socialization to the extent that they can nurture and deal openly with emotions.

Whichever option women choose in terms of sexual relationships, it is important that they remain aware of just where their day-to-day support and companionship is coming from. If it comes from women, then to continue to attach such heightened importance to dealings with men is to take other women solely for granted.

In a society where women have been exploited in so many ways, the last thing they should be doing is exploiting each other.

N.H. trooper dies; many attend funeral

HENNIKER, N.H. [AP] — Hundreds of police from New England and Canada attended the funeral of a New Hampshire State Trooper who died while making an arrest last weekend.

Charges of public intoxication, assault and resisting arrest were filed by state police yesterday against Mark Avery, 21, of Stratford, Vt., in connection with the incident.

Trooper Richard Champy, 32, of South Newbury, collapsed during a scuffle with Avery, a passenger in a car the trooper had stopped Friday night. Police said the car was wanted for a hit-run accident.

An autopsy showed the trooper died from a combination of a heart attack, aspiration and arterial scelrosis, said James Kruse, Merrimack County attorney.

Aspiration, he said, can be caused by choking on food.

Avery was charged with negligent hoxmicide Saturday but Kruse ordered the charge dropped pending further investigation and the results of the autopsy.

Grasso thumbs to Conn. storm center

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Gov. Ella T. Grasso, unable to get through snarled traffic, walked more than one mile in blizzard-like conditions yesterday trying to get to Connecticut's storm control center.

The snow-covered governor was about a block away from the center at the state armory when she hitchhiked a ride from a telephone company truck driver to complete her journey.

Grasso left the Governor's Mansion on the West Hartford-Hartford town line in her state police cruiser about 3:30 p.m. After 30 minutes the vehicle had traveled less than one mile in the fierce northeast storm.

Grasso told her driver she'd decided to walk.

"You can't walk governor," Grasso quoted her state police driver.

"I told him to just watch me," she said moments after she arrived at the armory, her coat covered with snow.

Grasso walked alone down Farmington Avenue and Woodland Street to the armory where officials gathered to direct state efforts to cope with the storm.

She said she hitched a ride the last part of the way "because the traffic started to move.

"I've never been out walking in a storm this bad. I thought I was going to get frostbite," she said. Grasso, dressed in a pant suit, blue sweater and heavy coat, was handed army socks by officials to warm her feet soon after arriving.

"You've got people with small feet around here," she said.

Grasso said many of the beleaguered motorists unable to move, "were hanging out their cars looking as I walked down the middle of the street."

Minorities win contracts

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Federal Judge Raymond J. Pettine yesterday upheld a law requiring that ten per cent of Congress' $1-billion appropriation for public works projects be awarded to minority contractors.

Pettine, ruling on a challenge by the Rhode Island chapter of the Associated General Contractors, denied a permanent injunction that would have suspended $17.9 million in state projects.

The judge said Congress has the constitutional authority to use "non-stigmatizing, benign racial classifications" for the distribution of such funds.

Pettine also said that Congress has 14th Amendment powers to prevent governmental involvement in discrimination practices in the marketplace.

The builders association was representing in the suit 31 unionized contractors doing about 90 per cent of the commerical construction in Rhode Island.

The action was one of 23 court challenges the ACC said it is bringing by member chapters throughout the United States.

"In the long run, the courts must protect the vision of a color-blind society free of legal divisions based on the color of one's family," Pettine wrote.

"But it would be wishful thinking to believe that a color-blind society can be created in a short time. It is too early, far too early, to argue that the legislature may not use race-sensitive classifications to remedy past discrimination."

Disguised police catch hijacker

HALIFAX [AP] — Police disguised as attendants at Victoria General Hospital disarmed a man yesterday who hijacked an ambulance at New Glasgow.

Police said he was admitted under police guard but no details were available as whether or not charges would be lodged.

Some television viewers said the incident followed the pattern of a fictional ambulance hijacking in an episode of the Barnaby Jones detective series, shown last week.

The incident began at the Aberdeen Hospital in New Glasgow, 100 miles northeast of Halifax.

New Glasgow police said a man carrying rifle entered the hospital and demanded to be taken to Victoria General, Nova Scotia's largest hospital.

The man disarmed a New Glasgow police member and left for Halifax with the hijacker holding the driver and the constable at gunpoint.

When the ambulance arrived at Victoria General, several white-coated police were waiting.

New Glasgow police said the man had been a patient at both hospitals.

Dr. M.R. MacDonald, Victoria General administrator, said the man has a "physical condition."

MacDonald said the hospital contacted Halifax police after receiving a call from New Glasgow.

Costa Rica elects leader

[AP] — As tiny Costa Rica, one of Latin America's few civilian governments, elected an opposition leader as its president, neighboring Nicaragus faced mounting protests yesterday against the strongarm rule of President Anastasio Somoza.

Two other nearby Latin American nations, El Salvador and Colombia, were troubled by peasant unrest or guerrilla attacks.

With the vote count from Sunday's election in Costa Rica nearing an end, opposition leader Rodrigo Carazo has what political analysts say is an irreversible winning edge.

Carazo has more than 51 per cent of the vote as compared to 46 per cent for his nearest challenger, Luis Albert Monge of the ruling National Liberation party. The remainder was divided among six other candidates.

Carazo, of the Unity Coalition, has promised to expel fugitive American financier Robert Vesco, wanted in the United States after $224 million vanished from a mutual fund he controlled.

Emperor needs new clothes: Kimono demanded

TOKYO [AP] — Emperor Hirohito is under pressure from two Japanese groups to shed his Western suits for the traditional kimono, the broad sashed, wide sleeved robe worn here by both men and women.

The groups, including one called "League to Dress the Emperor," complain the emperor is never seen wearing a kimono.

Kazuo Tamaki, a member of the Japanese Diet, or parliament, said yesterday he plans to bring up the issue next month in a committee of the House of Councillors, the Diet's upper house.

According to Tamaki, the custom of having the emperor wear Western dress originated more than 100 years ago with a government policy to imitate the West.

The emperor is most often seen today wearing a formal morning coat on official occasions, though it is said he dons a kimono at night in the privacy of his official residence.

The imperial household agency, which oversees the emperor's personal affairs, has refused comment on the sartorial flap.

Tamaki told The Associated Press in a telephone interview, "There is no reason for the emperor not to wear Japanese clothes now that we have caught up with the West. This is a time to re-evaluate the good things in our own Japanese tradition."

Tamaki, a member of the ultra-conservative Seirankai-Young Storm-faction within the ruling Liberal Democrat Party, heads a foundation for the promotion of Japanese dress, an organization supported by Japan's kimono industry.

Another group, founded by a popular radio broadcaster, also called on the emperor to start wearing traditional dress. Broadcaster Rokusuke Ei says he has received more than 100 cards from listeners all over Japan interested in forming local chapters of the organization he facetiously calls Tenchakuren, the League to Dress the Emperor.

Far East New Year excites shoppers

HONG KONG [AP] — The Year of the Horse replaced the Year of the Snake at midnight yesterday and millions began lunar New Year festivities here and in China, Vietnam, Thailand, Korea, Burma and Taiwan.

Tens of thousands of last-minute shoppers swarmed Hong Kong streets in the afternoon and night. Most were fighting for time to round up all the necessary New Year goodies — candles, lotus seeds, fruits, nuts as well as new haircuts, clothes and shoes.

In China, more televisions were for sale in Shanghai department stores, the official Hsinhua news agency reported. Concerts featuring the American classic "Old Man River," and ethnic songs highlighted the Spring Festival or Tet, as the three-day Asian holiday is called.

Colorful streamers hanging in Peking windows urged shopkeepers to "promote economic prosperity and ensure supply," and stores were well-stocked with goods and crowded with buyers, Hsinhua reported.

"Tet is somewhat like Christmas and Western New Year rolled into one," the Vietnam News Agency said as its citizens heralded the new year despite the pall of food shortages and a border war with Cambodia.

The news agency said Saigon's market was overflowing with fruit, meat and vegetables. "Homeguard teams" patrolled the markets to guard against pre-Tet cheating on state-fixed prices, VNA reported.

Vietnamese President Ton Duc Thang sent Tet bouquets to military units along the Vietnamese-Cambodian border in an apparent gesture to boost troop morale. In 1968, the Communists used the occasion of Tet to launch a major offensive against the U.S.-backed South Vietnamese.

Cambodia's official radio has not mentioned the Chinese New Year and refugees claim the government has been persecuting ethnic Chinese living in the country.

Thailand's prosperous Chinese community closed down its shops and restaurants in preparation for Tet festivities. In Burma, celebrants painted their gilded temple altars a traditional bright red.

Nationalist Chinese gunners on the offshore islands of Quemoy and Matsu will observe a four-day cease-fire during the New Year holiday in their shelling of mainland China. The mainland earlier announced a similar cease-fire for the islands.

In South Korea, the government refuses to make Tet an official holiday, but that doesn't dampen festivities in the Chinese community. This year, a cabinet minister asked the public to limit celebrations to three days so as not to disrupt South Korea's drive for increased exports.

Workers build new pyramid

CAIRO, Egypt [AP] — Egyptian workers in flowing robes laid the cornerstone yesterday of what will be a Japanese-built, 36-foot-high pyramid, the first in the land of the pharaohs in nearly 4,500 years.

Chanting, "pray to the Prophet" as sand whipped their faces, 20 workers strained at the ropes and moved a one-ton limestone block into place. Nearly 3,000 blocks, some weighing 2.5 tons, will be needed.

Japanese archeologists from Wasseda University near Tokyo are testing various theories on how the pyramids were built, including one by the Greek historian Herodotus suggesting wooden cranes and ramps were used.

★Celts' trek

Maxwell, when he plays he plays superbly but he tires quickly when he's out there for any long stretch of time. His only hindrance is lack of experience.

Guards: There is a desperate need for a youth movement here. Kevin Stacom, age 26, is the youngest member of this group and the only one under thirty. Unfortunately he plays like he's two years old or fifty-two, not twenty-six. The next to the youngest is JoJo White, he's thirty-one and on a ten day vacation with bad heels and a contract dispute. Even when he has played he's been extremely erratic. Moving up the age ladder we arrive at Don Chaney, 32, who has returned after an absence of two and a half years. Chaney has lost none of his scoring ability which he never had and still plays solid defense despite losing a step or two of his speed and quickness. The guard situation rounds out with Dave Bing, 34, and on occasion, John Havlicek, 38. Between shots of Geritol Bing shows some of his old magic but not enough and Hondo just doesn't have the speed to play guard anymore as witnessed when he was assigned to cover San Antonio's George Gervin who promptly scored thirty-seven points.

To sum it all up, this team is in bad shape and the only hope is that Red lets someone else do this year's drafting and hope for a miracle or more properly the luck of the Irish.

Notices

Applications are available until Feb. 24 in the Admissions Office, Whitmore Hall, for undergraduates interested in going on exchange for the fall or for the 1978-1979 year. Spring exchanges are not feasable.

Students applying for an exchange should be sophomores; the exchange would be during the junior year. We prefer not to exchange students in their senior year. Students must have at least a 2.5 cumulative average. Students interested in participating in the program next year must complete an application and return it to the box marked "NSEP Applications" at the Office of the Registrar. Final selections, including a list of alternates, are expected to be completed by the end of April.

GRAD SCHOOL COUNSELING

A new Pre-Graduate Advisor has recently been appointed by CASIAC to assist students who are considering graduate school. Beth Schneider, a Ph.D. candidate in the Sociology Department and an instructor of undergraduate Sociology courses for the last several years, offers advice about careers and graduate training in most academic fields, as well as the special problems of women in grad school.

Juniors should begin thinking about graduate school if they plan to attend in the September following their June graduation. The formal procedure for admissions starts in the fall. However, selecting schools and investigating financial aid sources take much time and should be done before this.

Later this semester, the Pre-Graduate office will offer workshops for students planning to take the Graduate Record Examination at the April 22 and June 10 test administrations. Students should check with the CASIAC office, E27 Machmer, or watch for announcements in the Collegian for dates of these workshops:

Call for an appointment at 545-2191 or 545-2192.

Celts: Futile trek for playoffs

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

It was evident from the start of the current NBA campaign that this was not going to be a banner season for Boston's men in green, more aptly called the Causeway Street Clowns. Presently the team is 17-30 and talk of the playoffs has dwindled to talk of a .500 season and escape from total humiliation.

Why such a rapid decline from perennial champion to NBA lowlife? Perhaps a closer look at the team will shed some light on the answer.

Let's begin with the Dynamic Duo — Irv Levin and Red Auerbach. While these two have little to do with the physical playing of the game they have contributed their share to the present woes. Levin, the overpowering man in charge, suffers everytime an opponent scores a basket on his team and he is one to let his team know that he is quite upset with their consistently losing. Ranks up there with Idi Amin for 'morale builder of the year' award.

commentary

Auerbach performs his disaster making in the off season when the time comes for the NBA draft. While Cedric Maxwell appears to have been a success, a look back at some of the recent Celtic drafts will show you that Red's talent at drafting is fading fast. Remember these Celtic "greats": Clarence Glover, Mark Minor, Steve Downing, Ben Clyde, Glenn McDonald, and the immortal Garfield Smith?

Auerbach's talents also include his trading genius. His most recent accomplishment, the Charlie Scott for Don Chaney, Kermit Washington, cash, and draft choices, looks good on the surface, but there is an underlying occurrence of major proportions. As revealed on a CBS telecast earlier this season, Washington will be a free agent at the end of the current season. Earlier in the year Red pulled off his greatest deal ever — the I don't want Johnny Johnson but here's two second round draft picks anyway (courtesy of Commissioner O'Brien) deal.

From the management ranks we descend down the ladder to the coaching level formerly occupied by Tommy Heinsohn, Mr. Get Up 'n' Yell, now controlled by the suave and sophisticated Mr. Tom 'Satch' Sanders who prefers to use the "stare down the referee but don't yell at him" approach to the game. Sanders has succeeded in upgrading the Celtics' defense to the point where they can now hold an opponent under one hundred points in a ball game. The task at hand is to improve the offense to the point where it can score over one hundred points in a ball game. This leads us to the players, to be looked at by position.

Center: Like most teams in the league, the Celtics carry two centers on their roster. Unlike most teams in the league, only one has the ability to play at center. If you guessed that the one who can play is Dave Cowens, congratulations. Physically Cowens is at the top of his game, scoring better than before, rebounding solidly, and even ranking among the top free throw shooters in the league but there seems to be a bit of the mental desire lacking ever since his "vacation" a while back.

Backing up Mr. Cowens is one Tom Boswell.

"He's (Boswell) stronger than Paul Silas and a better scorer. — Red Auerbach, Hoop Magazine, '77-'78"

For Mr. Auerbach's information, Paul Silas is a forward, not a center. Tom Boswell should be a forward, not a center.

Strong Forward: This position is occupied by Tommy Boswell, when he's not being humiliated at center, Curtis Rowe, who is actually a slow shooting forward and not a quick rebounding forward, and the one and only Sidney Wicks, the only professional basketball player I have ever seen booed off a court. To prove how weak the Celts are at this position, they held out on Wicks until the first day of the season when they finally realized that he was better than no strong forward at all, or is he?

Quick Forward: — Here is an interesting situation. A 38-year-old forward who is retiring at the end of the season, a fourth year forward who never gets a chance to take off his sweat pants, and a rookie who practices freethrow shooting without the ball. This contingent is better known as John Havlicek, Fred Saunders alias the Forgotten Man, and Cedric "Cornbread" Maxwell. Havlicek, despite his advancing age, still performs admirably but the season is wearing on and it's doubtful he'll be able to continue playing thirty minutes a game. Believe it or not, Saunders is the fastest man on the team and why he isn't getting more court time is a mystery. He's not that bad a shooter when he puts his mind to it. As for

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7

Born today, you are impetuous, especially in establishing relationships, which at times puts you in danger. You delight in seeing how close you can come to personal loss. You dare others to take advantage of you, and when they do, you do nothing about it. You are not impervious to pain, physical or emotional; you suffer as much as the next person when insulted or victimized.

You know precisely what another wants or needs, and it is your habit to try to fulfill that if you can. Such generosity is not often repaid, and you may find that you have gone without or allowed another to do so, with little hope of being thanked or repaid. You have an unconscious desire to be subordinated by another. There are times when you think you wish to lead, but when the opportunity to do so presents itself, you usually back off.

You are an excellent conversationalist on intellectual topics, but you do not encourage personal exchanges. You may spend a lifetime trying to uncover motives for your decisions and deeds; until you have done so, you have no desire to discuss yourself with others.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Artistic temperament threatens to bring trouble today. Keep emotions under control.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Your search for perfection hits insurmountable obstacles today. Be wise; go around them!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Refine your nature where you can. Don't react to another's teasing. Concentrate on your business.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)—Study is vital to a new project. Refuse the opportunity if you can't prepare properly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Analyze actions of younger family members. Know what children are about.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Nourish the young's viewpoints. Encourage them to speak their minds and hearts; don't be hard on them.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — You may see another's slow, withdrawing of friendship. Try to discover why and act accordingly.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — You may be lauded for a "splendid character" today. Take praise modestly and with a grain of salt.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Use commercial training from long ago. You can offer special "ancient" techniques.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Say yes with reservations, and you cannot go far wrong. Reconsider a recent answer to the elderly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Be encouraged by another's independence. Loosening family ties may be difficult but essential.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.18) — Don't tax your mind with inessential study. Enjoy your reading; don't fight against information.

Bowlers fall

This past weekend, the UMass men's and women's bowling teams suffered defeat as they competed in the ACU-I's hosted by Worcester State College.

Although the Minutemen place fifth, it was a victorious day for one member of the UMass men's team, Roger Norcross, who won both Singles and All-Events. Norcross, a senior, bowled sets of 597, 609, and 628, averaging 204 for the nine games. As the All-Events winner, Roger will be sent to the men's National Collegiate Bowling Championship at St. Louis, Mo. in April.

Tim Welch bowled some fine games for the UMass team, averaging 194 for the day. Other bowlers for the men were Dave Tursky, Mike Berard (who participated in the Nationals last year), and Kirk Peters.

The UMass men bowled well, coming in only 140 pins behind the first place winners from Worcester Polytech. The University of Connecticut came in second.

The women's team, consisting of Cyndy Adams, Gina McEvoy, Beth Schneider, Jackie Cashen, and Amanda Garcia, placed third. First place was captured by Southern Connecticut State College, while Central Connecticut followed in second.

The bowlers' next tournament is February 25 at Bryant College.

"In the middle of the men's run, the third radio failed and we couldn't finish the race," said McConnell. According to the coach, the remainder of the meet will be run at next weekend's competition. As it now stands, Plymouth State leads UMass by only 1:14 seconds, on with Northeastern in third.

Sunday was a different matter, though, when the UMass men won the Giant Slalom with a combined time of 489.14. Coming in second was Plymouth State (492.38), followed by Northeastern (492.48), B.C. (519.07), Amherst, and U.Conn.

After the race McConnell stressed the quality of depth in his skiers. "The men don't come in one, two, three like the women do, but all the members are excellent skiiers which makes for a very strong team," he said.

The Minutemen's best times in the Giant Slalom were set by Scott Prindle with a time of 96.06 and Dale Maynard, with 96.44.

Swim team drops Rhody

The swim-men of UMass set three school records in their come from behind win over URI Saturday night, 66-47. This most recent victory boosts their season's record to 4 wins and 1 loss.

It was a meet plagued by problems with the starting gun but the swimmers did not lose their concentration and performed very well in all the races.

The first UMass record to be broken was the 200 yard butterfly. Senior captain Russ Yarworth swam an outstanding time of 2:01.2 despite difficulties in the start.

The next record fell to Jim Leland in the 200 yard backstroke. He swam a very smart race and won in 2:06.2. The third record was set in the final event of the meet when a 400 yard freestyle relay team of Bill Tyler, Leland, Tom Stevens and Yarworth went 3:21.8 to win.

There were many other fine swims made by the UMass men. The medley relay team of Leland, Harry Fulford, Tom Nowak and Stevens showed some surprising depth when they won the event with a time of 3:48.0 Tyler swam a very well paced 200 yard freestyle and won it, coming from behind at the 150 yard mark, in 1:50.5.

Yarworth and Nowak took first and second places in the individual medley, while in the 200 yard breaststroke, Fulford swam a good race with a winning time of 2:17.4, just slightly slower than his record swim against Tufts on Wednesday.

Orange crush gym-men

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team didn't fare too well this past weekend in terms of overall score, as it fell short of defeating Syracuse, 195.10-182.15.

Coach Dick Swetman was very pleased with the performances and insisted that it was the best yet for the gymmen this year. But, the overpowering Syracuse team proved too much for the young inexperienced UMass squad.

On the floor, the shining light was once again senior John Forshay, who led the team to a three point head start over Syracuse in the first event. Along with Forshay, sophomore all-arounder Bob Donahue helped out with a beautiful set and his highest personal score of the year, 8.75.

When it was time for the pommel horse event, the Orange showed that it was not to be denied of a victory by defeating the Minutemen and evening the score of the meet.

Only Dave Kulakoff kept Syracuse from sweeping the event with his first place score of 9.10.

On the still rings, UMass was totally outclassed by Syracuse, and if not for the efforts of freshman Dave Fellemen, would have been swept. His second place score of 8.5 kept Syracuse from totally running away from the disadvantaged gymmen.

Once again Forshay won the long horse vaulting event with a score of 9.30, but it was to no avail. Syracuse crushed the gymmen in the event and built up an insurmountable lead which could not be overtaken.

On the parallel bars freshman John Nelson led the way for the gymmen but, the outcome of the meet had already been decided. While on horizontal bar Tommy Thompson scored the highest for the gymmen with an 8.55.

The next important test for the gymmen will be this weekend when they take on the midshipmen from the Naval Academy in Boyden Auxiliary gym.

Randy Smith gets attention

ATLANTA [AP] — Randy Smith has come a long way.

An All-American soccer player and track star at Buffalo State, Smith's basketball exploits as a collegian went largely unnoticed. He's always had lighting speed and quick reflexes, but his outside shooting, shaky when he came into the league, has shown steady improvement.

Two years ago, the 6'3" 180-pound Smith averaged 21.8 points per game and was named to the all-NBA second team.

Last year he was 10th in the league in steals, 11th in assists and 20th in scoring while grabbing more rebounds than any other guard in the game.

This year, he's seventh in scoring with a 24.5 average and his defense has improved to the point where he ranks fourth in the league in steals.

Smith is proud of being a complete basketball player.

"My game is to run, fill the middle on the break, pass off and sometimes take a couple of jump shots," he said, a sharp contrast to those players around the NBA who shoot first and think second. "I've learned to use my speed, because that's the best thing I have going for me."

Smith's speed and shooting ability proved decisive in Sunday's 28th annual NBA All-Star Game. He scored 14 of his 27 points in the fourth quarter, helping the East rally to a 133-125 victory and earning Most Valuable Player honors.

"My wife, Terrion, predicted I would win MVP," said Smith, who shot 11 for 14 from the field and also contributed seven rebounds and six assists. "She didn't keep me out too late last night so I had all the rest in the world. I was ready."

Smith, 29, is well aware of the long road he's traveled from low-round draft choice to All-Star MVP.

"I made between $20,000 and $25,000 my first year in the league," he said. "But that's gone up considerably since then, Winning the MVP has got to be my highest achievement in sports. It should give me a lot more recognition than I've been getting."

All-Star player: Hondo

Question: Is 'Hondo' waving goodbye to his hoop-bound shot or to the Springfield Civic Center and its sparse gathering? (John) Havlicek possibly has played his last game in the Civic Center. However, his buddy and teammate in the background, Dave Cowens, may return someday. Don't hold your breath, though.

Peter Cox

Thanks for everything, Hondo

The sad and inevitable has happened this week.

John Havlicek announced his retirement after 16 memorable seasons with the Boston Celtics. The 38 year old captain said he has had enough.

He's more than accomplished all his goals. Now it is time to lay rest a career that perhaps tired legs can no longer sustain.

These were his thoughts and feelings last week. And it was no surprise when the announcement came. What will take some getting used to is no longer seeing number 17 leading the fast break, making the quick pass, and taking the desperation shot. Yes ... that will take some getting used to.

And now, until sometime in May at the season's end, we'll hear homage rendered to Capt. John. They'll tell us how he played more games than any other player. They'll say how he was third in career points scored. They'll say how he played in more play-off games, how he led the drive to more NBA championships, how he was the finest in the intangibles of defense; setting up plays, leadership, guts. They'll say he was the greatest basketball player that ever lived.

They will say all these things and the record will back them up. But we remember John Havlicek, not in statistics and averages, but at the "Garden" or in front of the television set.

We saw him steal the ball to clinch the '65 championship series, as Johnny Most screamed, "Havlicek stole the ball, Havlicek stole the ball," over and over again.

And down in Philly in '66 the fans chanted "Boston is dead, Boston is dead," during the 4th quarter of the last game, only for Havlicek to lead the Celts back for another Boston title.

And then, of course, there was the 6th game against Phoenix in the NBA finals two years ago. It was triple overtime due to Havlicek's last second shot. Our throats have not quite recovered.

He did that all for us. He entertained us, made us scream, and gave us delight and excitement that is the intended ideal of every sport. But for me there was more.

Through all the glory and success, the bad years (1969-'73) and injuries, he showed me a lot of class. He was steady, always giving it his best shot, even though his efforts might have been in vain.

He did this because he had pride and guts. He is that rare breed you seldom see in sports, in the entertainment world, and in life — a pro. Yastrzemski is one, and so are Jean Ratelle and David Cowens. They are artists, unconsciously so, for in their use of their bodies and minds they enact a drama of struggle — of winners and losers, dreams and despair that is but a reflection of life, our life.

You gave me some thrills, number 17. You gave me some memories I'll never forget. And you gave me most of all an example. You showed me how to win right, how to lose right, how to keep up that good fight in spite of all and because of all.

Thanks Hondo.

Scarlet Knights foe for Minutemen cagers

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Weather permitting, the UMass varsity basketball team will play the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers at the new Rutgers Athletic Center in Piscataway, New Jersey tonight at eight.

Rutgers gained a 78-74 decision over the Minutemen early in January as the Knights front line of James Bailey, Hollis Copeland and Abdel Anderson combined for 59 points. Rutgers is currently 3-3 in the Eastern Athletic Association (EAA) and is 15-4 overall.

UMass, which is 2-2 in the EAA after Saturday's 67-65 win over West Virginia, lost three more games in a row after the Rutgers loss, but has won three of four games since the Colonial Classic, including a last second victory over Holy Cross in the Hart Center in Worcester. The overall record is 11-5.

Three keys to the UMass plan of attack will be the contributions of Derick Claiborne, Alex Eldridge and Mark Haymore.

Claiborne, after being in a semi-slump shooting from the floor, has hit 23 points in the last two games on 61 per cent shooting. He has continued to provide his own brand of sticky defense.

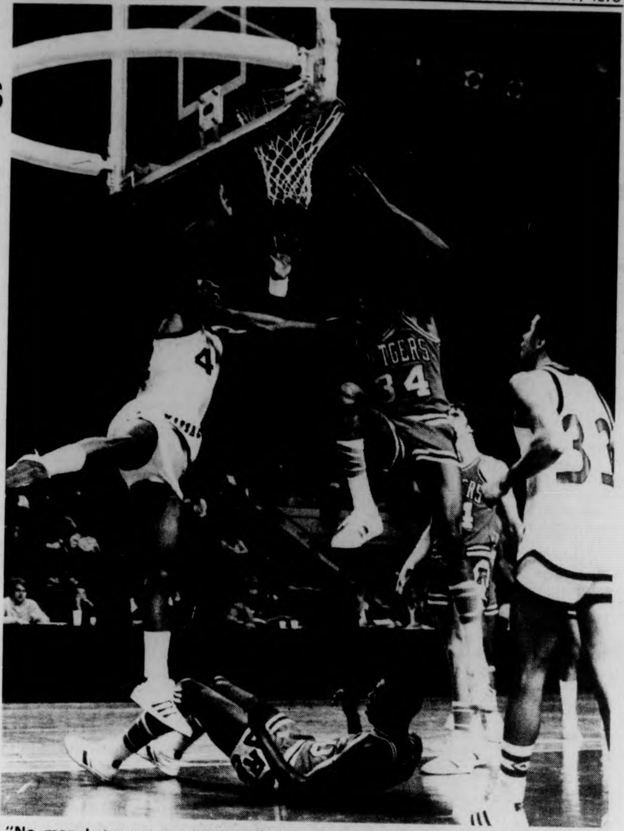
Eldridge, along with scoring 22 points and controlling the action on the floor, has handed out 23 assists in the last two games, several of the spectacular variety. He is rapidly closing in on the career assist record, as well as the 1,000 points scored plateau.

Haymore, though shooting at slightly less than his former nation-leading 75 per cent-plus clip, has still scored 33 points in the last two games, but more importantly has grabbed 27 rebounds. He still heads the country in FG percentage.

Another factor will be the play of Len Kohlhaas. He played a good game against WVU, but had been playing as if in a trance lately. He was a big plus in the first Rutgers game, however, as he scored 18 points and took down 10 rebounds.

UMass held a halftime lead of 37-34 and led early in the second half before succumbing to Rutgers strong front line. Containing them will be the primary task of coach Jack Leaman's squad, which seems to have an edge over the Knight's backcourt of Rodney Duncan and Steve Hefele.

Bailey, a 6'9" junior from Boston, is leading Rutgers in scoring and rebounding, averaging 25 points and 9.6 caroms per game. The All-American candidate, who prepped at Xaverian, also leads the team in a less official category — dunks — with 79. In fact, it was the dunk shot, more than anything else, which did the Minutemen in in Springfield.



"No, man. Let me stomp his face," is what Rutger's howling Hollis Copeland (34) seems to be saying as he fouls Mark Haymore (4) in a January 7 game in Springfield, won by Rutgers, 78-74. # Hoopwomen vs Bears

By JIM GOMES
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team returns to Curry Hicks Cage to do battle with the Bridgewater State College Bears tonight at six.

After a heartbreaking loss last Thursday night to Providence, 56-55 in overtime, the Minutewomen are hoping to rebound with an emotionally charged victory.

"The emotional factor will certainly be in evidence tomorrow," said coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "In Providence, the girls just weren't up for the game." The emotional level of the team is an important ingredient in women's basketball, more so than in the men's game, Ozdarski added.

The Minutewomen, 11-5, will use the same starting lineup of Cathy Harrington, Cheryl Carey, and Maura Supinski at the forward positions. Sue Peters and Mary Halleran, who will start her third game in place of the departed Sue Henry (personal problems) will start at guards.

The Bridgewater State women will start an inexperienced team. "They graduated seven seniors from last year's varsity team," Ozdarski said. Their starting squad is composed of sophomores and juniors and will come out in a 2-3 zone defense. Ozdarski also said Bridgewater is a young team, but "we are not taking them for granted and it should be a good game."

The Minutewomen need to improve on their shooting percentage from the field. Against Providence College, they shot 33 per cent from the field for the game and only 25 per cent in the first half in which they trailed 29-19.

"The team has to learn to play a forty minute basketball game," Ozdarski said. "I thought we had learned our lesson when we had that scare at Central Connecticut, when we were down at the half, but I guess we didn't."

The front line of Supinski, Harrington, and Carey will be called upon to supply some offensive power.

"We are trying to get more offense out of our big girls," Ozdarski said. 6'2" Julie Ready might see action in order to bolster the inside game.

Sue Peters remains as a steadying influence on the team. The sophomore guard continues to score over 20 points a game, leading the Minutewomen's scoring attack.

Coach Sue Walas's junior varsity women's team takes on a talented Bridgewater JV quintet in the preliminary game at 4 p.m. Walas, a 1977 graduate of Bridgewater State and a starter on last year's varsity team there, said, "Bridgewater has a fine JV squad each season." The first year coach is looking for her first collegiate victory as her Minutewomen JV's are winless in two outings.

Skiers top hill, foes

The UMass women's and men's ski teams won their races this weekend at Roundtop Mt., Plymouth, Vermont, despite the extremely cold weather, according to coach Bill McConnell. UMass was the host team of the competitions which were run on the Saltash trail.

The Minutewomen were once again dominant, according to McConnell, leaving a large margin between themselves and the next best team.

Cathy Donovan came in first in the slalom race on Saturday, which McConnell described as "an unbelievably cold and windy day." Donovan's time for the two run course was 87.65 seconds. She was followed by teammates Kathy Shinnick who came in second and Nancy Haydon who placed third. Their times were 90,104 and 102.89 respectively. Diana Vilenti of UMass placed seventh and coming in fifteenth was Minutewoman Valerie Hanson.

Boston College came in second in the slalom, followed by Smith, UConn., and Merrimack.

In the Giant Slalom held Sunday, the UMass women again placed first, second, and third. Haydon won it with a time of 107.93, Shinnick came in second with a time of 110.58, and Connie Pratt third at 118.66. Cathy Donovan was seventh and Meg Hussie came in eleventh.

Racing after the women on Saturday was the UMass men's team. However, it was so cold that only half of the slalom race was completed.

Boston buried under snow...

Compiled from Wires — Eastern Massachusetts yesterday staggered to recover from the ferocious, record breaking blizzard that paralyzed highways, crushed coastal homes with towering surf, and blacked out thousands of Boston homes.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis banned all traffic on car clogged roads in the eastern part of the state and ordered businesses across the state to stay closed yesterday.

The 682-foot Greek oil tanker Grand Hope lay aground off Salem, threatening what the Coast Guard termed a "major oil spill". The tanker is loaded with 160,000 gallons of oil.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island were declared federal disaster areas, making them eligible for federal disaster assistance. Army units mobilized at Ft. Meade in Maryland, Ft. Bragg in North Carolina, and Ft. Dix in New Jersey to bring in snow removal equipment and helicopters for search missions.

But their help was stalled because no airports were open to receive them. Logan International Airport in Boston was closed yesterday and is expected to remain closed today.

Seventy-five thousand of Boston Edison's 200,000 customers were left without power for some time yesterday when a piece of tar paper blew into the lattice work of the wires at the company's largest generator on the South Boston harborfront. Power began being restored beginning at 8 a.m.

All cars were ordered off Boston streets to aid snow removal crews. In an accident on the Boston waterfront, the sidewheeler "Peter Stuyvesant" was lifted from its concrete pilings near famous Anthony's Pier Four restaurant by high wind and waves and thrown into Boston Harbor.

Travel in eastern Massachusetts will remain virtually impossible today, as Governor Michael S. Dukakis extended indefinitely his ban on using all but emergency vehicles on state roads.

There was no bus service in Boston yesterday and none expected today.

Revere and Provincetown suffered serious flooding, as did many other low lying coastal areas. The Provincetown town manager said tides in his community crested 15 feet above normal.

Melvin Demit, 61, drowned yesterday morning trying to start a pump in the basement of his home in Nahan.

Snow removal crews in Boston were hampered by the lack of anywhere to put the snow.

"There's no place to push it," said one private snow remover. "You get it, clean it out and you have to go back over the same thing again because the wind just keeps pushing."

...Western Mass. fares a bit better

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

UMass and the western Massachusetts region appear to have fared better than most of the rest of southern New England in the fierce winter storm which began late Monday and ended yesterday.

Yesterday's cancellation of classes, including both day and evening sessions, was the first since the spring semester of 1975 when students last awoke to find school for the day cancelled.

Today will be windy and partly sunny with highs in the twenties and a ten per cent chance of precipitation. Fair skies are expected tonight while temperatures drop to a low of ten degrees.

Eastern Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island were all hit extremely hard by the two-day blizzard. One to two feet of snow fell on most of the region, and gusting winds hampered clean up efforts.

UMass Vice-Chancellor James L. McBee yesterday cancelled classes at 4:30 a.m. after consulting with various campus officials.

UMass students for a time yesterday didn't know whether school would be held today. UMass student-run radio station WMUA was apparently tricked into announcing there would be no school some eight hours before the actual no-school decision was made, according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Bromery said the station began broadcasting no-school announcements after an unknown caller identified himself as Bromery and said school would be cancelled. Bromery said the administration uses a code to confirm the authenticity of such messages and the code was never checked when the station received the call last night and later broadcast the message.

"They should know better than that," he said.

Bromery also indicated classes will be held as usual today. Massachusetts Govenor Michael S. Dukakis yesterday ordered all schools in eastern Massachusetts closed, and allowed schools in western Massachusetts to make their own decisions on whether to open.

Smith and Amherst colleges will be open today. A spokesperson for Hampshire College said she didn't know if that school would be open and it could not be learned if Mt. Holyoke College would be open.

Amherst and Smith were open yesterday.

UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield yesterday said Physical Plant had an assortment of small and large plows, tractors and trucks working to remove snow. He said the trucks were initially dispatched Monday

Olver avoids UM building inquiry

By GAYLE YOUNG

Vice-Chairperson of the Senate Ways and Means Committee John W. Olver, D-Amherst, yesterday said he would not like to see the UMass-Amherst campus brought into the same investigation as the one requested for UMass-Boston.

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, recently said he would like to see construction of some buildings on the Amherst campus to be included in the investigation of the state Bureau of Building Construction, as requested by two other state representatives.

Reps. Andrew Card, R-Holbrook, and Phillip W. Johnston, D-Marshfield, have requested a legislative committee investigation of the state building bureau following the scandal involving the bureau and two state senators in the construction of the UMass-Boston campus.

Card and Johnson had also requested that the legislative committee investigate the construction of the $10 million steam plant at Tillson Farm here at UMass. The plant, completed in 1974, operated for only eight months before expensive defects were detected. UMass has since used the older coal-fired plant.

"I would not like to see the Amherst campus drawn into the same case as the Boston campus," Olver said. "All the bad actors would be found in a single investigation, there's no need to look into every one of them."

Collins was in Boston yesterday and could not be reached for comment. Collins had said the construction of the Fine Arts Center, and main library as two structures on the Amherst campus which should be investigated.

Olver said he does not know if there were any kickbacks involved in construction of UMass-Amherst buildings as there reportedly were at the Boston campus.

"One never knows," he said.

Amherst campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday said he thinks the "legislature can decide what they want to study."

Student Senate holds first semester meeting

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate will meet tonight to discuss the spring concert and student government work done over intersession.

This will be the senate's first meeting of the semester.

The meeting scheduled yesterday between student government officials and University administration on bus funding has been postponed indefinitely.

The meeting was called to work out an agreement on conflicting proposals from the administration and the student government for funding the UMass bus system.

Senate Rents and Fees Chairperson Bob Dion said the meeting probably would not be held until early next week.

Stevie Wonder will not appear at the spring concert as some senators hoped. Director of Security Saul Chafin said he was unsure if Alumni Stadium could be secured for the type of concert Wonder would have given and the number of people who would attend. The crowd, for example, would have included people from out of state as well as UMass students.

Some members of the student government feel there was never a realistic possibility of getting Wonder to perform at UMass.

The spring concert would now include Aretha Franklin, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, the J.C. White singers, Archie Shepp and others. The concert would be called "The Black American Music Festival."

The Senate should decide tomorrow night if it wants to commit itself to paying for the concert, Senate Speaker Pat Whalen said. The Music Festival will be a benefit for the "Duke Ellington Foundation." Whalen said he feels a "contradiction" exists since benefit performers are charging for their appearance. The speaker said he is also concerned the concert may not succeed without Wonder.

The Senate will also hear reports from committees which were at work at UMass over intersession.

If time remains, Senators will break into groups to discuss issues such as Funding the Bus System, the Course and Teacher Evaluation, a dorm lease and upcoming student government elections.

Charles Woolsey Cole, local scholar, dead at 71

Charles Woolsey Cole, former president of Amherst College and U.S. Ambassador to Chile, died of a heart attack Monday night while returning home from a cruise through the Carribbean. He was 71.

Cole served as president of Amherst College from 1946 to 1960 and as U.S. Ambassador to Chile under the Kennedy Administration from 1961 to 1964. Upon his retirement from Amherst in 1961, he was elected President Emeritus by the Board of Trustees.

Cole, who had lived in Seattle, Washington since 1971, graduated summa cum laude from Amherst in 1927, earned his M.A. and Ph.D in economic history at Columbia University, where he taught from 1928 to 1934, and joined the Amherst faculty in 1935. In 1940, he returned to Columbia to teach history at the University's graduate school.

During World War II, Cole worked for the Office of Price Administration in Washington and served as its regional price executive in New York City for two years. He also served as a member of the Hoover Commission on the reorganization of the executive branch and as a member of the Hershey Selective Service Committee.

Cole wrote a number of books about French mercantilists including "French Mercantilism ... 1683-1700" and "Colbert and a Century of French Mercantilism." He received 11 honorary degrees from 1943-1958, including one from UMass.

Born in Montclair, New Jersey on Feb. 8, 1906, he is survived by his second wife, Marie (Greer) Donahoe; a sister, Lois Taylor of New York City; two daughters, Mrs. Hugh M. Hamill, Jr. of Mansfield Center, Connecticut and Mrs. John C. Esty Jr. of Concord, Mass. and nine grandchildren.

His first wife, Katharine Salmon, whom he married in 1928, died in 1972.

There will be a Memorial Service at three p.m. on Sunday in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College for Cole. He will be buried at Wildwood Cemetery in Amherst.

Joseph Karcz, dorm janitor

BONDSVILLE — Funeral services for Joseph Karcz, a janitor in George Washington Tower, will be tomorrow morning at 10 at St. Adalbert Church here.

The 54-year old Karcz was found near an elevator by a student Monday morning and was pronounced dead at the scene. He had worked at UMass since 1965.

Karcz, a WWII veteran, belonged to St. Mary's Polish Club. He leaves his wife, Veronica Maslar Karcz; a son, Peter, at the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.; his mother, Julia Pietres Karcz; three brothers, John Karcz, Bolac Karcz of Ware, and Stanley Karcz of South Deerfield and two sisters, Mary Trelo and Polly Koss of Palmer.

The burial will be at St. Peter and Paul Cemetery.

Sadat threatens Senate on arms

WASHINGTON [AP] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat told members of Congress yesterday he will not be shy in asking for U.S. weapons, adding "I shall raise hell" if Congress does not approve them.

Although the comment was made with a laugh after a meeting with members of the House of Representatives, he seemed more somber as he emerged later from a similar session with a Senate group.

"I threatened them," Sadat said after his closed door talks with the senators.

After talking with the House members, Sadat offered the "raise hell" comment with a laugh, but said in a serious tone about his request to buy U.S. arms: "The last time I was here I was shy. But I am not shy any more."

Then, after meeting with members of the Senate, Sadat said: "I am not any more shy at all. I am speaking as a partner and I am threatening." He refused to say how he threatened the senators and it was not clear from his manner how serious the threat had been.

Sadat said he had lost his "shyness" after what he saw as an overwhelming American response to his Middle East peace initiatives.

He suggested that congressional approval of the arms sales to Egypt would demonstrate that the United States is behind Egyptian efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East and would be a demonstration of "partnership and cooperation."

After their meeting with Sadat, several House members said the Egyptian president told them he wanted more than the 120 lightweight F-5E jet fighters he reportedly is asking the Carter administration and Congress to approve. But the House members said Sadat did not specify what other arms he wanted.

When reporters asked Sadat if he also wants the Air Force's sophisticated new swingwing F-15 jet fighter, he refused to specify but said he has given a meticulous list to President Carter.

After the meeting on the House side of the Capitol, Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas said he believes that whatever President Carter requests for Sadat: "I think we'll give him."

Congress must approve cash sales of U.S. weapons abroad as well as credit sales and outright gifts of arms.

Local authorities respond to Sadat's plan

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Local authorities, in response to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's statement Monday that he has already made all the concessions he plans to in the current Middle East negotiations, yesterday reacted with various degrees of concern.

In a major speech to the National Press Club Monday, broadcast live over television and radio, Sadat accused Israel of taking a hardening position in the negotiations.

"The Israeli position is hardening, rather than softening, as we go along," he said. "This is an impediment to peace."

Sadat emphasized that he will not wait indefinitely for Jerusalem to respond to his peace initiatives.

"This is the case where one party has voluntarily declared its willingness to meet its obligations on the basis of reciprocity," he said.

"I am willing to give the experiment every possible chance until I reach the conclusion that enough time has elapsed without achieving any tangible progress," he said.

"I am not going to rush to this conclusion, but the other side has to demonstrate the same spirit."

UMass Political Science Professor Irving Howards said in a telephone interview yesterday that he commends Sadat for his peace initiative but that it is impossible to expect Israel to concede to all the points he has insisted upon.

"The insistence of Palestine, supported by the Arab nation, that an independent state be established is an impossibility," said Howards. "If the Arabs insist on establishing an independent Palestinian state, that cannot be accepted by the state of Israel."

Howards said this point does not suggest that some sort of Palestinian state shouldn't be accepted.

"However," said Howards, "it is an impossibility for not only Israel, but also neighboring Arab states. Frankly, I am mystified by Sadat's insistence on this point."

American Studies Professor Gorden Levin at Amherst College, differed with this view, saying that an opportunity has been missed by Israel for possible peace settlement of the whole conflict.

"Israel should have accepted the principle that the territories gained in 1967 have to go back to the Arab nation," said Levin. "If Israel were willing to give back the '67 occupied territory, adequate security arrangements for the area could then be made."

Levin specified an arrangement whereby demilitarized zones with international inspection would be established. These zones could not be changed without the consent of both Israel and the U.S.

What is being lost by Israel's insistence of holding on to certain territories is a chance for a settlement," concluded Levin.

Smith College professor of Government Donna Divine said she felt the problem with the negotiations was two-fold.

"The first problem," said Divine, "is that in view of Sadat's situation, he has very little room to maneuver."

Divine pointed to the ties Sadat has with other Arab nations, with Syria and Saudi Arabia.

Divine said Sadat needs these ties very much, and therefore could not afford to ignore them.

"The point of Sadat's negotiations with Israel," said Divine, is not only to secure peace for Egypt, but also with other Arab countries. Sadat needs their support in this matter, and consequently now has little room to move.

"He must bring tangible results from Israel for their support," she added.

"The second problem," said Divine, "is that there is a very different use of the word negotiation going on in the Middle-East."

Sadat's definition of negotiations, Divine said, was one in which a nation declares its willingness for peace and to make peace, whereby each side does anything for it.

In contrast, Israel's definition is one in which a security arrangement is worked out to be as air-tight as possible. It involves details which could take a long time, while Sadat's definition involves just a number of weeks in negotiations.

"They are working in very different notions of what negotiations are," she said.

However, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, of the UMass Jewish Student Organization, said of the Middle-East situation, "Despite what people say, negotiations can be made.

"Israel is willing to reciprocate Sadat's move by returning nearly all of the Sinai. And, Israel is willing to talk about the West Bank," he emphasized.

"For Israel to decide to give up the West Bank on the basis of talking only with Sadat, who will not be controlling the West Bank, does not make too much sense," he said.

"Sadat has said he's willing to recognize and live in peace with Israel, but neither King Hussein of Jordan nor the Palestinian leadership of the West Bank has done that."

"And I would hope if such declarations were forthcoming greater progress toward peace could be made," said Perlmutter.

President to announce more aid for students

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter will announce a major program today to provide at least $700 million to college students from middle-income families because he fears a 71 per cent jump in college costs has put their chances for higher education in jeopardy.

Hoping to stave off a move in Congress to give a $250 tax credit to the parents of all college students, Carter will propose a combination of grants and loans using $700 million he set aside in his fiscal 1979 budget, said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell.

Powell said the program, to be announced personally by the president and explained in detail by Joseph A. Califano, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, will be targeted mostly at the middle class.

The press secretary did not specify what families Carter would include in the middle class. Under the government's current $2.2 billion program, most basic grants go to students from families earning less than $10,000.

The grants drop to a minimum of $50 as income and assets increase. The cutoff point for a family of four with one child in college is roughly $17,500 in income.

At present, some 2.4 million students attending college next fall are expected to receive basic grants averaging just under $900 apiece.

For fiscal 1979, Carter has proposed $4 billion for existing programs to help college students and has proposed raising the maximum grant from $1,600 to $1,800. He also has proposed making more students eligible.

Unwet water washes put on product paradox

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

After sidestepping hucksters of such significant inventions as "sea monkeys," "invisible dogs" and "pet rocks," students may now welcome a new product that, for once, isn't all wet.

As of the first of this month, Oxymoron Enterprises introduced "dehydrated water." The directions printed on the back of the small paper envelope which holds the "super product" are simple and easy to follow. Just pour the contents of the package into a glass, add water, and stir and presto — instant water.

According to promotional material, the booklet will advise on how to utilize "Dehydrated Water" to 1) cut government spending, 2) aid consumer education, 3) cut divorce costs as well as provide interesting "watered-down facts" by the author Hy N. Dri.

This labor-saving device and panacea to world ills is available for $1.99 (plus 50 cents handling) through the Oxymoron Enterprises P.O. Box 200, Vernon, NJ 07044. Your own little do-it-yourself kit comes complete with booklet, three packages of dehydrated water, and accompanying warning labels that proclaim "WARNING: THE SURGEON GENERAL MAY DETERMINE THAT THIS PRODUCT IS A PUT ON."

Author Hy N. Dri writes the Collegian that although he was unsure as to whether his product would "produce a flood of interest," "incite a storm of protest," or "take a bath among other things," he was confident that the mere report of this scientific wonder would be taken as the "Water Story of the Millenium."

To convince skeptical students that the product was more important and influential than "Waterloo or Watergate," Hy N. Dri sent along a free sample to satiate curiosity.

Opening the packet, I followed directions and was less than amazed that I had truth in advertising — instant water appeared in my experimental glass. I suppose the secret to how this scientific breakthrough "treats dozens of other critical issues facing all mankind and politicians too" will have to wait until I receive my booklet.

The fad of the semester may well be dehydrated water. Should the Carter administration get a hold of this we may well see some 'damp yankees' from New Jersey explaining their energy saver. No shoddy product, Oxymoron Enterprises attaches the slogan "Quality Equal to the King's New Clothes" to every package.

Last semester science majors were soaking in the controversy surrounding DNA experiments. Now this from Oxymoron. Water'll they think of next?

Eighteen dead; storm continues

[AP] — A vicious winter storm that assaulted New England yesterday left at least 18 dead, uncounted millions of dollars in damage, snow drifts of several feet and forced thousands to flee their seaside homes in the face of widespread flooding.

The governors of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire declared states of emergency, and Rhode Island and Massachusetts were declared federal disaster areas. Maine Gov. James Longley also declared two southern counties of his state as emergency areas.

The army mobilized units at Fort Meade, Md., Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Dix, N.J., to send snow removal equipment and helicopters to New England. However, the arrival of the aid was delayed because New England airports were closed because of the storm.

The official accumulation of snow in Boston for 24 hours was 26 inches, a new record. A record 27.6 inches fell in Rhode Island.

The worst blizzard in Rhode Island history subsided yesterday, but not before killing ten people and burying thousands of cars in a crazy-quilt fashion that blocked almost every street and highway.

Carrying 100-mile-an-hour winds to coastal areas, the storm was severe enough to prompt President Carter to declare the state a disaster area at the request of Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy.

The governor also said he was ordering all streets and highways closed again today so that emergency vehicles could remove stranded cars and trucks and make rescue runs.

Giovanni Folcarelli, executive director of Council 94 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said chances were good that union would go on strike tomorrow, slowing state snow removal efforts.

President Carter last night ordered federal troops to Connecticut to cope with a blizzard that piled two feet of snow into shoulder-high drifts and brought the state to a virtual standstill.

At least six persons died as result of the storm in Connecticut and thousands of others were stranded on highways and forced to take emergency shelter.

Gov. Ella T. Grasso late yesterday extended until noon today a ban on driving by all but emergency vehicles to give officials a chance to clean up the winter mess.

In Maine, hundreds of people evacuated their homes along the coast yesterday as the storm churned up a record high tide and monstrous surf that caused widespread destruction.

Gov. James B. Longley declared a state of storm emergency yesterday in Cumberland and York counties and ordered in the National Guard in the wake of scattered looting in Old Orchard Beach.

The famous amusement pier at Old Orchard Beach was swept apart by stormy seas. Dozens of other oceanfront structures were destroyed or heavily damaged.

Elsewhere in the state, heavy snow and winds gusting to 50 miles-per-hour paralyzed transportation, causing numerous highway accidents. Four persons were hospitalized in

SW president resigns

Southwest Assembly President Dianna Fessenden resigned last night in the assembly's first meeting of the semester. Thirteen of the 42 representatives were present.

A special election is scheduled for Feb. 21 for an acting president, who will serve until the annual election in April. Residents of the Southwest Residential Area are eligible for the office.

The assembly also decided to write a letter of recommendation for Floyd Martin, assistant master director of Southwest, who is applying for the position of dean of students at the University of Hartford.

New Course Offering:

ACADEMIC COLLECTIVE BARGAINING:

WHERE STUDENTS FIT

Readings and discussions will explore the history and structure of faculty unionism (in general and at UMass) as well as the impact of faculty unions on student's lives and education. Guest discussion leaders will include representatives of the MSP (faculty union), UMass administration and student government. Student work will focus on the issues of the faculty-administration bargaining contract as they affect students such as contract hours, tuition, evaluation process, academic calendar, etc. Class members will have the opportunity to help draft the "student platform" that will be presented by student representatives to the current bargaining talks. The course is open to both graduates and undergraduates for 3 credits. Permission of instructors required. For Pre-registration and further information, contact Larry Magid or Virginia Logan at SCER, 406 Student Union. Class meets on Tuesday and Thursday 2-3:15. First meeting is Tuesday, February 14th.

ARTISTS

There will be an important meeting tonight in the INDEX office (room 102 Campus Center) at 6:00. Ideas will be discussed and assignments will be given. Any interested artist is cordially invited to come, or if unable to attend, please call Joan at 545-2874. Please bring a copy of your work.

PHOTOGRAPHERS

Tonight...at 7:00...in room 102 Campus Center...pictures...lots of 'em...assignments...film...sex ...oops, watch that Rob...all budding photographers and enthusiasts are encouraged to come ...ideal working conditions...if you're interested but can't come call Rob at 545-2874.

SENIOR PORTRAITS

Appointments may be made beginning February 27 by calling 545-2874 or by going to room 811 in the Campus Center. Sittings will begin March 6th through March 17th.
Day or evening appointments can be made to accomodate your schedule. All portraits will be included in the 1978 Index...

FINE ARTS

The 1978 Index is looking for a Fine Arts Editor. You must be ambitious, prepared to work long and arduous hours; you must be somewhat familiar with the fine arts happenings on campus; if you've read this far chances are you are the person. Experience isn't necessary...you'll learn by doing. There is a slight financial reward for the deserving person. If interested, stop by the INDEX office or call Rebecca at 545-2874 for more details.

IDEAS

If you live in Sylvan, or are a Greek, and you have an idea how to cover either of these living areas, or ··· if you are at all knowledgeable about these areas and wish to offer your assistance, please contact Cathy at 545-2874 or 102 Campus Center.

Appointments may be made beginning February 27 by calling 545-2874 or by going to room 811 in the Campus Center. Sittings will begin March 6th through March 17th.

LAYOUT

All section editors are strongly urged to attend this important seminar tonight at 7:00 in the office. The Don will be running this show. Bring old magazines to cut up, and an open mind ready to accept and invent new design techniques. Anyone else who is interested in learning layout is welcome.

WRITERS

What would a yearbook be without copy? A wordless year~~book~~ (please excuse the poor pun). We need people to interview the faculty and administration, other students and certain others. The INDEX is also looking for people who like to write articles, or who want to help with the copy in general. Dial Rebecca or Patty at 545-2874 or stop by the INDEX.

Panel discusses rights

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

A panel of four experts from UMass and the Five College area will begin the "Great Decisions '78" series tonight with a debate on the question of human rights abroad and what the United States can and should do about the problem.

The debate, which is open to students and the public, will be held in the lounge of Noah Webster House in Orchard Hill Residence Area beginning at 7:30. It will also be broadcast live over WFCR (88.5 FM).

Participating on the panel will be Mabel Garis, an author and former U.S. Bahai Representative to the United Nations who is currently living in South Amherst; Vaclev Holesovsky, a UMass economics professor from Czechoslovakia who is also a scholar on international relations; Charles Robertson, a professor of government at Smith College, and Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American Studies at UMass.

Moderating the panel will be Luther Allen, political science professor at UMass. Allen, who is a faculty resident in Webster, has organized these sets of debates since 1966.

"Great Decisions" is a national program which is set up by the Foreign Policy Association in New York City to inform the American people about questions on American foreign policy.

This year's series, which includes eight questions, will continue every Wednesday until March 29.

"Although there are the same sort of topics in each series of debates, each year has its own character," said Allen.

The other topics in this year's series are the global power balance, the changing middle east, dilemmas of world energy, international development, Japan and America, Canada, Mexico, and the U.S., and people and foreign policy.

Allen said he "finds it easy" to get participants for the debates, but says he also "likes to find new people".

Each panelist gets to make a short presentation at the beginning of the debate in which they make one or two points and express their opinion if they want. After an hour, the audience is brought into the discussion.

"The student participants are the most important part," said Allen. "They don't have many chances to do this sort of thing."

Many of the students who come to the series are students in Allen's political science classes such as World Politics and International Relations.

Allen also teaches a class OH 151 A, which is based entirely on the series. At the end of the eight debates, some of the students in this class will put on a panel of their own, which will also be broadcast on WFCR.

Although other schools around the country put on these debates also, we are the only ones who have ours broadcast over the radio, said Allen. "We get a good audience in the Connecticut Valley, which includes six neighboring states," he said.

The "Great Decisions" series is subsidized by the Orchard Hill Area Government.

Biting the hand that feeds

bob melia

My mother always told me that it's the thought that counts. So thanks, I really appreciate it. In these difficult economic times I'm touched that you dead flesh-eaters are subsidizing my vegetarian meals.

What? You mean you didn't know that everytime you buy something at the Coffee Shop, or Hatch part of what you pay goes to subsidize us vegetarians?

Then let me fill you in. SAGA foods, the people who run the Campus Center food service, have hatched a new plot. Yes, the corporation that brings you greasy hamburgers and cold meatball subs now offer you (or us) limp salad greens and watery yogurt from what they have the nerve to call the Hatch Vegetarian Corner. In their advertisements they say 'You don't have to be a vegetarian to enjoy the new Hatch Vegetarian Corner. And they're right. No veggie worth his tofu would risk being seen there.

I'd compare the 'Vegetarian Corner' to Earthfoods or Peoples Market, but I'm afraid I'd be sued. The Constitution explicitly prohibits cruel and unusual punishment. Suffice to say the food is less than appetizing, the atmosphere is non-existent, the workers are unpleasant (not primarily because of their personalities but because of the unfulfilling environment in which they must work), and the prices are high.

The underlying problem with the Vegetarian Corner (and also the Hatch and Coffee Shop) is that they are being run by a management firm which cares far more about profits than food (or students, for that matter). And since they have a virtual monopoly, they serve high priced, low quality food. If you ate all your meals at the Hatch or Coffee Shop you would likely die of malnutrition, unless you first went broke.

Another issue which affects the food you eat and the price you pay is the financial squeeze on the Campus Center. Costs have sky-rocketed, revenues haven't kept pace, and student are grumbling about paying the $79 a year Campus Center fee. To help close the gap between costs and revenues, the CC management has been guaranteed a certain amount of money by SAGA foods. SAGA doesn't get a piece of the greasy pie until that maximum has been raised. Thus, even more so than usual, to keep profits high ('healthy', SAGA would say, even if it means making us sick) revenues must be kept high.

Which is why you carnivores will be subsidizing us veggies. We will continue to eat at Earthfoods and Peoples Market, so the Vegetarian Corner is going to be a financial disaster (unless their advertisements lure in people who don't know any better). To make up for this loss (and keep profits 'healthy') SAGA will have to raise its already bloated prices.

The underlying problem with the Vegetarian Corner (and also the Hatch and Coffee Shop) is that they are being run as a management firm which cares far more about profits than food for students for that matter.

So, absurd though it sounds, you carnivores will be subsidizing us vegetarians for meals we will not be eating! And as the CC financial squeeze accumulates, the upward pressure on prices will intensify. As long as the food service is run on a profit-making basis, prices will continue to be high and the quality of the food low.

The only way out is for students to assume responsibility for the entire operation. With few exceptions, outside or administration-run enterprises are simply not as good as student-run enterprises. Student businesses are more responsive to student needs, are not nearly as alienating places to work, and can usually offer a better price and product than can enterprises restricted by the need to show a profit or bow to administration whims.

The incredible injustice of it all is highlighted by the fact that we are paying for the building (and will continue to pay, I am told, well into the next century) and yet have no control over it. Last semester the student senate meeting was moved to accommodate a bankers conference. Aside from the inconvenience, we subsidized the free refreshments and relatively inexpensive hotel acomodations for men who are probably earning (well, making) $50,000 a year.

The Campus Center has been a disaster. It is poorly built, inefficiently and very possibly corruptly managed, and used for purposes which are irrelevant and even hostile to academic and student interests. And, as always, we pay for administration mistakes.

Within an institution, as in the wider society, the constituent elements are stratified. At the top are those with wealth and power. Descending the ladder, each group has progressively less power. Naturally enough each group uses its power to secure advantages and transmit down the ladder disadvantages. The process is such that those with the least power, those at the bottom, accumulate only disadvantages.

Students are, of course, at the bottom. To reverse this process, at least regarding the Campus Center, several possibilities suggest themselves, from fee withholding and boycotts to more subtle approaches. But none of them will work unless we are organized.

Our power lies in our numbers and our energy, primarily. But a disorganized mass is no mass all, and energy diffused is energy wasted. An interested, informed and organized student community is an absolute prerequisite to any meaningful action.

At its best, college is a time for reflective judgement and constructive change. But to engage in the latter we need power; it is the medium of exchange with this school. And we shall never acquire it by eating at the Vegetarian Corner.

Students unite against snow

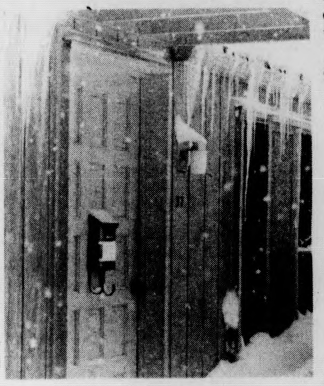
The amount of snow that has fallen in our area is simply ridiculous. Who needs to wade through four feet of snow on his-her way to class? Who needs the constant fear of being bombed with a snowball when you walk past a dorm? Who needs the slush, ice, and water in their boots? Something must be done.

In the past, when students have encountered problems that they considered too large to tackle they would give it the old college try and leave defeated but better for the experience. This is not adequate in these days of unreasonable weather conditions. If we simply sit around in the coffee shop and gab about how rotten things are and which roofs caved in we will always be at the mercy of nature's dictatorial fury. We will always be subject to too cold Januaries and too warm Mays.

So what do we do. Writing letters to your representative about the snow is a good start but not adequate for the long run solution. They don't have much sympathy when it comes to the needs and the wants of the student population in Massachusetts higher education.



Students need a unified and concerted effort. Yes, this situation calls for demonstrations, a takeover of the U.S. Weather Bureau, and a general strike every year on groundhog's day until the people responsible for our trouble succumb to a show of unity.

It is going to be an uphill battle; the weather is not going to look kindly upon change after millions of years of having its own way. But the inherent rightness of our fight is becoming more and more apparent as the months go by. We will overcome.

Toward tomorrow

By SANDRA CARABINERIS

"Our generation, like those of the past, aspire for a world worth living in. A world where no one need know hunger. Where no nationalities are discriminated against and kept down. Where people use their muscles, brains, and labor to contribute as fully as possible to overcome social problems and the problems of nature. Where peace is the rule and not just a pause.

"These are high ideals but not idealism. Fundamentally these are the demands of our generation. At times these desires may be in the back of our minds, deep in our hearts or on the tip of our tongue. But every time youth, or anyone else for that matter, enter into the struggle it is not merely against how things are but also for how things should be. This is what we come to this convention to discuss... to help build up and contribute to a movement that will someday smash that fetters on constructing a new world — the political power of the capitalist class."

With these words a major two day convention began, in which the Revolutionary Student Brigade and Youth in Action were both dissolved to form the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade (R.C.Y.B.). Over six hundred college students and working class youth traveled to Champaign, Illinois from around the country the weekend of November 19. Throughout the 2 days, people debated what the new organization should stand for and how to build a powerful movement among youth to link up with the growing American workers movement.

People testified to the increasing attacks and abuses facing us, as well as the many lessons we've learned in fighting back. Youth from New York City spoke about blocking Wall Street's Stock Exchange this past summer demanding jobs. In a city where unemployment has jumped to over 60 per cent for minority youth while hospitals, firehouses, and construction projects are closed down for "lack of funds" the RCYB plans to continue to target the source of the crime. Someone from Chinatown in San Francisco described the battle at the International Hotel where hundreds of mounted police broke through crowds of demonstrators to evict retired tenants. Why? A parking lot near the business district is a better investment than low-cost housing. Another woman told about joining with others to break up a public Ku Klux Klan rally in Columbus, Ohio, and how these hooded scum of the land are nothing but tools of the rich ruling class. We saw a film made by students in California in the course of fighting the Bakke decision and University ties with corporate investments in South Africa.

Alan Canfora spoke of another key battle that raged in the fall, the building of a gym at Kent State University. He pointed out that when threatened the authorities called out riot police and used tear gas against demonstrators in 1977, just as they'd called out the National Guard seven years ago. Exploding the myth that Vietnam was a mistake and U.S. imperialism a thing of the past, the Iranian Students' Association exposed President Carter's latest arms deals with the fascist Shah of Iran. Our country's rulers are still up to their elbows interfering in other countries and creating new weapons faster than the old ones can be tested. Meanwhile they tell us to watch out for the real imperialists in Russia. To us one mafia boss looks as bad as the next.

This is the situation we youth are faced with in 1978; only the particulars vary from the big city ghettos to the college classrooms. On campus, as tuitions rise and budgets tighten up the trustees sincerely promise us that back-stabbing competition will get us everywhere, despite the shaky state of the economy. However, should our grade point averages droop the best the corporate planners can promise us is a hot seat in a cab. The RCYB says "The Future is Ours if We Dare to Take it." Instead of sticking our noses in textbooks for four years while these problems continue to grow throughout society. Our organization plans to take on the different abuses heaped on us, mobilize youth in support of the workers of this country, and put forward a different future to look to-fighting to overthrow the rule of the capitalists and to establish the rule of the working class-socialism.

Bob Avakian, Chairman of the Revolutionary Communist Party, pointed out that in struggling to transform society we need to learn from history and take up the historical outlook of the working class, Marxism-Leninism. Only this philosophy explains the problems of today, while pointing the way forward to eliminating exploitation altogether and establishing classless society, communism. The RCYB will take on other ideas promoted by our nation's rulers, ideas like white supremacy or the religious mysticism of the "Moonies". At the same time we intend to popularize just what communism stands for, basicly the exact opposite of what we've been taught since kindergarten.

To start off the semester, we'll be organizing support for the national miner's strike, presently in its tenth week. This showdown between the United Mineworkers of America and the coal operators is a key battle for the whole working class right now. As students and youth we can aid them in striking a blow against the same class of people responsible for our own problems.

'Friend' of the working man

By DAMON THOMAS

> "Another thing is to deal with our needs in the central cities, where the unemployment rate is extremely high. Here a CCC type program would be appropriate," Jimmy Carter
>
> "A CCC type program in New York City is critically important—where so many youth are out of work and all social services have been cut down."
> Vice-president Walter Mondale

It's interesting to observe how Jimmy Carter and the Democrats are trying especially hard to come off as the "party of the working man" and the "common people." With proposals like the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill and recent promises like the ones above, they say they will put the government to work in the interests of the people, and wipe out unemployment and inflation.

They like to point to Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal as examples of how they would deal with economic crises. The legend has it that Roosevelt and the Democrats bestowed many rights on the passive, starving people, like the rights to unions and unemployment insurance, and that they saved the country from the depression through the government programs like the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps) mentioned above. Now Carter is talking about instituting the same sort of programs.

The 1930's were hard times. Millions of families had no one working — rents could not be paid, food could not be bought. Youths rode the railroads from city to city, desperately looking for jobs. Huge factories stood idle, the capitalist owners unable to continue production because there was no profit in it. At the same time, millions of people began questioning why life had to be this way, what this capitalist system was all about.

Roosevelt, a man backed by bankers and millionaires, also tried to paint himself as a friend of the working man, appealing to people to rely on him and to get out of the streets. Faced with the massive struggles of millions demanding unemployment insurance, he and the rest of the bankers and capitalists were forced to concede it - only then to act like this was a gift out of the goodness of their heart. He then used this same mask to cover the real purpose of his work programs.

The CCC was one of these programs, and is a good example of the way politicians then and now pose as friends of the working man. It called for establishing 250,000 jobs for youth between 18 and 25, who would be paid $1 a day for work at "reforestation" (planting trees). Even at face value this was no more than a crumb thrown to the four million youth who were out of a job in 1933. Still hundreds of thousands of youth, many who had lost complete hope of ever getting work, signed up for the program, seeing it as certainly better than nothing.

However this was not the main problem with the program — a lousy job at a lousy wage. It's main problem was its hidden attack on people like the youths' parents, who had been laid off from millions of jobs, and its moves to "militarize" the youth and to develop them into shock troops for the needs of the government.

Instead of the 40-hour work week that was promised, the people were forced to work all seven days of the week, twelve hours a day, with an additional two or three hours of military drill daily. All for the same $1 a day. A system of fines and "pay dockings" was developed by the military officers for those who got out of line or stopped working. This was a big part of the CCC programs that Carter and Mondale praise so highly. Youth were used as a slave labor force, taking up the jobs of workers who needed to feed families — while the capitalists and their government made a needed extra profit by getting the same things built (roads, dams, bridges) for much lower wages.

The facts show that the U.S. government was clearly trying to use the CCC to drive unemployed youth out of the cities — where they could be a rebellious threat to capitalist rule — and into labor camps where they could be organized and potentially used by the government in the interests of the ruling class either in a war or against the workers movement at home.

As early as 1933 Chief of Staff MacArthur made "CCC Reports" part of his annual military reports to the Department of War. In 1936 the War Department had a detailed plan drawn up for tightening the military control of the camps and using them against the "coming union drives" and strikes. The camps were completely under the control of the War Department (now named Department of "Defense") and were located mainly in old army camps. The youth wore uniforms and were bossed by regular military instructors.

The CCC type programs "like that of Roosevelt" that Carter and Mondale talk about would certainly not be a carbon copy of the one in the 30's, but they would have many of the same purposes. Something like it might be used on the "city crises" going on throughout the country which are bringing on thousands of layoffs of city workkrs, wage cuts, etc. With millions of youth unemployed, who according to the Labor Department can expect to go for a number of years without work, the Carter-Mondale CCC would drive the youth into taking up the workers' jobs at a third or a quarter of the wage costs, all under the guise of "Jobs for Youth" and patching up our collapsing social services. Whether or how these new CCC's would attempt to militarize and develop the youth into a government won't hestitate if it's in the interests of the ruling class to develop such programs.

There is a need for a job program for youth with decent jobs at decent wages. The CCC type program that Carter and Mondale reminisce about for the coming years is no such program and should be opposed.

night and encountered no major problems.

Plows and other snow removal vehicles were out in neighboring communities also.

The Transit Office said UMass buses would "probably" be running today. A spokesperson said the system shut down at 6 p.m. Monday but no major problems were reported.

Peter Pan buses from Springfield did not run yesterday.

Long lines built up in dining commons on campus. A spokesperson there said many workers were not able to report to work and the normal number of serving lines had to be cut back.

Area taverns and package stores reported business as being mixed.

The Blue Wall was reported as doing a "fairly good business." All but the lounge of the Top of the Campus was closed yesterday.

Local taverns that were open reported both good and bad business. Package stores also reported varying business.

Meanwhile, conditions were worse outside the western Massachusetts area.

Connecticut Governor Ella Grasso declared a state of emergency in her state. All roads in the state were ordered closed Monday night at 10 p.m. National Guard troops were called out, and coastal flooding was reported as storm-whipped waves inundated low-lying areas.

Flooding was also reported on the Massachusetts coast. Provincetown and Revere were hardest hit. Governor Dukakis ordered cars off state highways, and cars were banned from the streets of Boston. Seventy-five thousand customers of Boston Edison were without power for a time, and two storm-related deaths were reported in the state.

Nine people were killed in storm related deaths in Rhode Island. Thirty-three inches of snow fell on Providence and President Carter ordered federal disaster assistance.

a 15-vehicle pileup on Interstate 295 in South Portland.

A handful of cottages in the Camp Ellis section of Saco, fishing shacks at South Portland's Willard Beach and a newly rebuilt sea wall in Scarborough were other casualties of the storm.

No deaths and few injuries were reported, despite the furious seas and near blizzard conditions throughout much of the state.

In New Hampshire the blizzard caused some of the worst flooding in decades on the seacoast.

Winds of near-hurricane force slammed waves over seawalls along the coast, forcing the evacuation of a least 90 people who live along the beach in Rye and Hampton.

Rye police said in some spots, water stood three feet deep on the coast road, Route 1A. Area residents said the waves leveled an eight-foot-high pile of boulders that had served as a breakwater at Rye Beach for at least three decades.

The Traveler

New England's seasons boast of change:
Variety's the spice!
Why then, when lovers do the same,
Do people call it vice?

The sun comes up and down each day,
The tide goes in and out.
Since elements enjoy this play,
It must be fun, no doubt.

To be one's self is natural,
But nature's virtues dim
As Calvin says our actual,
True nature is to sin.

I love New England, that's quite sure,
Not only seasons, either.
But abstinence I can't endure—
I often take a breather.

TV mini-series portrays Dr. King

NEW YORK [UPI] — Portraying a living person or one still vividly remembered is no easy job for an actor.

Paul Winfield admits he thought twice before agreeing to portray the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The famed American civil rights leader's widow, Coretta King, would be standing by in judgment. Four King children would be taking part in the drama, produced as a three-part, one-hour television mini-series on NBC 9-11 p.m. Eastern standard time Feb. 12, 13 and 14. And the film would be made in Georgia where thousands of people have their own strong memories of personal association with the late Nobel Peace Prize recipient killed by an assassin just a decade ago.

"I thought about the part a lot before I took it." Winfield said one recent afternoon. "First, I felt an almost overburdening sense of responsibility, not only to him but to an awful lot of people who had given up their lives for his beliefs. I knew I'd have to get over that sense of awe very quickly."

Once Winfield accepted the role, the real challenge began. "There was a lot of confusion," he remembered. "I talked to a lot of people. And there are literally thousands of King experts who knew exactly what he was like. Some people say he was always laughing, others that he was extremely serious. Some say he was extremely volatile, that he had a very short temper. Others say he would never lift his hand.

"Obviously he was a very human person with as many faults as the rest of us. Others think he was a saint. There are aspects about that that are very difficult for me to disbelieve. He certainly came at the right time — and used his time well. He brought about a lot of changes."

The drama is entitled simply "King" starring Cicely Tyson as Coretta King. Winfield and Tyson had only recently completed a movie about teenage drug addiction, "A Hero Ain't Nothin' But a Sandwich." "King" would be their second collaboration since the 1972 film "Sounder" brought each an Oscar nomination.

Winfield, a resident of San Francisco, first became involved in the "King" project a year ago. Filming was done between June and September, mostly in Macon, Ga. "We finished the last voice-overs a few weeks ago, so it's been almost a year," he said.

"I think the best advice I got was when I spoke to Daddy King. They introduced me to him as the man who was going to play Martin. I said, 'Is there anything you'd like to tell me about your son that might help me?' He sort of looked at me and said, 'Well, there was only one Martin.' That was the end of the conversation.

The eldest of King's children, his daughter Yolanda, will be seen as Mrs. Rosa Parks, the black woman arrested in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1955 for refusing to surrender her bus seat to a white passenger. The incident was the first to cast King in the role that would name him a world leader in the struggle for human rights. Martin Luther King III and two other sons appear briefly in the drama along with his sister Edith.

The "King" series early on set off a controversy along lines King himself would have recognized. Coretta King praised the script by writer-director Abby Mann for its portrayal of her late husband as a "great and noble man."

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, King's successor as head of the civil rights organization he founded, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, declared the project "very much displeased him" for showing King as weak.

Winfield said he found the role deeply affecting. He had never met King but recalled first seeing him speak in Los Angeles, his own hometown, in 1960.

"At my age — I was about 16 — I had a kind of urban chauvinism, I guess. I was much more impressed by other black speakers. Dr. King had this southern accent and talked slowly and reasonably. He didn't seem to be talking to the problems of my neighborhood.

LECHEROUS LIMERICKS... a contest for college students offers $50 for the best example of this "folk art" submitted by March 1 to President Robert N. Rue, Mohegan Community College, Norwich, Conn.

Rue says he hopes to rejuvenate limericks and discourage bathroom graffiti. "A ought to be bawdy... but should not be crude," he says.

Popular early in the century, limericks have been collected since 1820. The Encyclopedia Britannica lists this example: "A tutor who taught on the flute/ Tried to teach two tooters to toot./ Said the two to the tutor/ Is it harder to toot, or/ To tutor two tooters to toot?"

TENUOUSNESS OF TENURE in Academe is even reaching college presidents, these days. Latest victim is Dr. John Pruis of Ball State U., Muncie, Ind. He comes up for the third renewal of five-year contracts, if he survives a move by the Faculty Senate to win a majority no-confidence vote in his administration.

Complainants charge Pruis had "shifted the school's priorities from education and charged a lack of communication." Until 1960, Ball State U. had been one of the few remaining state teachers colleges in the country.

CAMPUS JOCKS are giving up their bar bells in the Indiana U. gyms after discovering coeds ignore the Mr. Atlas physique for "moderately proportioned males with small buttocks and a moderately large chest."

A story in the Indiana Daily Student gives the results of a recent study of sexual preferences of college undergraduates that also reveals that male undergrads prefer moderately built women with larger than average busts.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8

Born today, you have good business sense, though your interests may not complement it. You may dislike business involvements and look forward to activities that employ your artistic talents. You are instinctively very creative. You may rebel against training that would channel your creativity along profitable lines, which is at odds with your business sense, but you will satisfy yourself through intuitive application of the creative urge.

Your aptitude for finances should bring you a small fortune by your middle years, but with your penchant for life's luxuries you could go through that fortune in short order, leaving you later as much in need of lucrative enterprise as when you started. You enjoy working with others, though you are not communicative about the pleasure you take from it. Your quiet, determined attitude sometimes leads coworkers to believe erroneously that you are disinterested.

Impulsively extravagant at times, you must guard against overspending, particularly if you are responsible for others. Children who depend on you must be protected from the impulsivness that could cause them to go without life's necessities as well as the luxuries.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Indulge your speculative streak. Choose wisely and investments should pay handsomely.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- Cleverness with finances make you valuable to friends in an economic bind. Give an opinion.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – Don't be surprised at financial reverses today. Friends of friends bring new hope at evening.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – You can save much of what you recently earned, if you know when to say no. Don't be persuaded unwillingly.

GEMINI(May 20) -- Seek the truest, best-meant advice. Loved ones may be too involved to be objective.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Rose colored glasses may be worn safely today. You know what is real without having to look at it.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- You should get along well with a partner. Don't propose too many unusual notions about the future.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – There should be no cause for fear today. Don't expect another to share profit if you haven't shared work.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22)-- Your knack of seeing a good business venture beneath an unassuming facade should stand you in good stead.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Seek personal as well as intellectual knowledge of another, or you cannot expect gain.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- A partnership is extremely successful today, especially if you take a personal approach to problems.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- Your ambition should prevent your easing your effort at the wrong time. Keep to a moderate approach.

In a game that matched the current No. 1 and No. 4 teams in New England, Derick Claiborne prepares to let go a jumper in a one point loss to Providence College. In a poll released today, the Friars were named the top team in NE, with the Minutemen 4th. (Staff photo by P. Dobbs)

Friars number one in NE, Massachusetts rated 4th

BOSTON [UPI] — Providence keeps losing to teams out of the region, but in New England the Friars still are on top.

Despite three losses in a week's span, Providence received 4 of 15 first place votes cast by New England's coaches to retain its No. 1 rating in the weekly UPI ratings.

Providence, which thrashed Rhode Island, 79-59, Saturday after straight losses to DePaul, Villanova and St. Bonaventure, collected 69 of a possible 70 points. The Friars are 17-4.

Fairfield, 17-2, picked up the other first-place vote cast and a second-place total of 48 points. The Stags' last win on Saturday night was an 82-78 squeaker over Manhattan.

Holy Cross and Massachusetts, two teams who had been No. 1 earlier in the season, staged a third-place battle that was won by the Crusaders. The fight for third reflected the recent head-to-head competition between the two teams: Holy Cross clubbed the Minutemen in the Colonial Classic final on Jan. 28 and Massachusetts came back five nights later to nip the Crusaders in Worcester on Eric Williams' 30 foot buzzer beater.

Holy Cross, 16-4 heading into tonight's game at Notre Dame, garnered 39 points, while Massachusetts, 11-5 going into tomorrow night's eastern Eight contest at Rutgers, received 36 points.

Boston College, 14-7, including a stunning win against Georgetown last week, jumped into fifth place with 11 points, one ahead of Rhode Island, 14-7.

Maine received three points to finish seventh.

Points are awarded on a descending scale, with a first-place vote worth five points.

Cinderella icemen defying odds

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

Two events in the UMass — University of New Haven hockey game last Saturday night (won by UMass 8-3) at Orr rink, reflect the growing confidence and capability of a team that the so-called hockey experts said "would be lucky if they win four games this year."

Both events involved UMass goaltender John Riley.

In the first five minutes of play, Riley came charging 10 feet out of his net to poke the puck with his stick behind the net, which prevented a dangerous New Haven scoring threat and gave the Minutemen control of the puck.

In the last five minutes of the game, Riley skated over to the bench with a 7-2 UMass lead in favor of back-up Paul McCann to take a well deserved rest.

Both events would have been unthinkable a month ago when the UMies possessed a disappointing 3-6 record, but the icemen have won four games in a row after opening 1978 with a tie and are now the proud owners of a respectable 7-6-1 record.

"It was nice to go to the bench," said Riley, "it's been a long time since I've been there."

After opening the 1977-78 season with a 4-1 win over New England College last November 16, the Minutemen lost five games in a row and the season seemed a lost cause.

But early last December something happened — the Minutemen snapped their losing streak and at the same time realized they could not only play with, but beat a Division II powerhouse. The icemen knocked off Army 4-0. A team that had posted a 21-6-1 mark in the 1976-77 season.

Since the Army victory, the Minutemen have won 6 lost 1 and tied 1. The Minutemen have also added two more Division II powerhouses to their list of victims — Holy Cross (3-2) and Merrimack (7-6).

The Merrimack victory last Friday night at Orr rink was particularly sweet because the Warriors were the defending Division II champs and the Minutemen hadn't beaten the Warriors in four years.

"They deserved the victory," said Merrimack hockey coach Thom Lawler. "They (UMass) were fired up tonight and were able to come from behind. I'm a little disappointed in our kids though."

There was bedlam in the UMass locker room after the Merrimack game.

"It's great being part of a team like this," said defenseman Barry Milan. "All the kids pulled through and never gave up. The fans were great. They helped us a lot. Playing in front of a large crowd is a lot better than twenty people."

Riley, who has been a tower of strength in goal all year, was practically speechless, "all I can say is this is a great team and an unbelievable victory."

"We're finally getting together as a team and starting to win," added left winger Nick Carney.

Co-captain Bill White reiterated his statement that the UMies are going to "surprise people" and brother Bob, the other co-captain, said, "this game (Merrimack) shows what this team can do."

"This was the biggest win I've ever been involved in, including tournament play in high school," said defenseman Dean Liacos.

The 1977-78 UMass Minutemen hockey team is the Boston Bruins of college hockey in Division II. As co-captain Bill White says, "There's no 40 goal scorers," but everybody covers for a teammate's mistake.

All the players emphasized the fact that the Merrimack victory was a team effort, but Lincoln Flagg perhaps summed it up best when he said, "You should take a quote from everybody on this team because it was a total team effort."

REDLINE RHETORIC — The Minutemen entertain Bowdoin College this Friday night and Colby College Saturday night. Both games will begin at 8 p.m. at Orr rink. DIRECTIONS TO ORR RINK: take route 116 south (Main Street-Amherst) from campus. Go through two sets of traffic lights, up and over a hill beside Amherst College and the hockey rink will be set away from the road on the left side of the road.

Wrestlers to face Wildcats sans Otsuka

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team will do battle with the Wildcats of New Hampshire tomorrow night (7:00, Boyden Auxiliary Gym), but the MInutemen will be without the services of star grappler Larry Otsuka.

The junior co-captain, who wrestles in the 134 pound weight class, dislocated a rib in last week's tri-meet at Massachusetts Maritime and will be out of the lineup for at least ten days. Otsuka, 12-2-1 on the season, will be replaced by Keith Dixon.

The Minutemen are also injured in the 118 pound weight class, as Dana Rasmussen and Tony Perry are still out of the lineup.

"This is really going to be a tough meet because of all the sickness and injuries," said coach Dave Amato. "We haven't lost to UNH in nine years, and I don't want to start now."

Amato will send in sophomore Dave Daly at 118 pounds. Daly saw extensive varsity action last season, but this will be his first varsity appearance of this season.

"Dave's good on his feet," said Amato. "and if he can avoid being caught on the bottom he should do alright."

Amato is still undecided as to who he will employ in the 126 pound class.

At 142 pounds, Charley Rigoglioso will be in the lineup. Rigoglioso was impressive at the Mass Maritime meet, as he beat his Buccanner opponent and lost a 5-4 decision to a runner-up national champion from Montclair State.

Also injured is Monty Payette, so Amato plans on using co-captain Timmy Fallon, usually used at 150 pounds, at 158 pounds. Mike Carroll will go at 150 pounds.

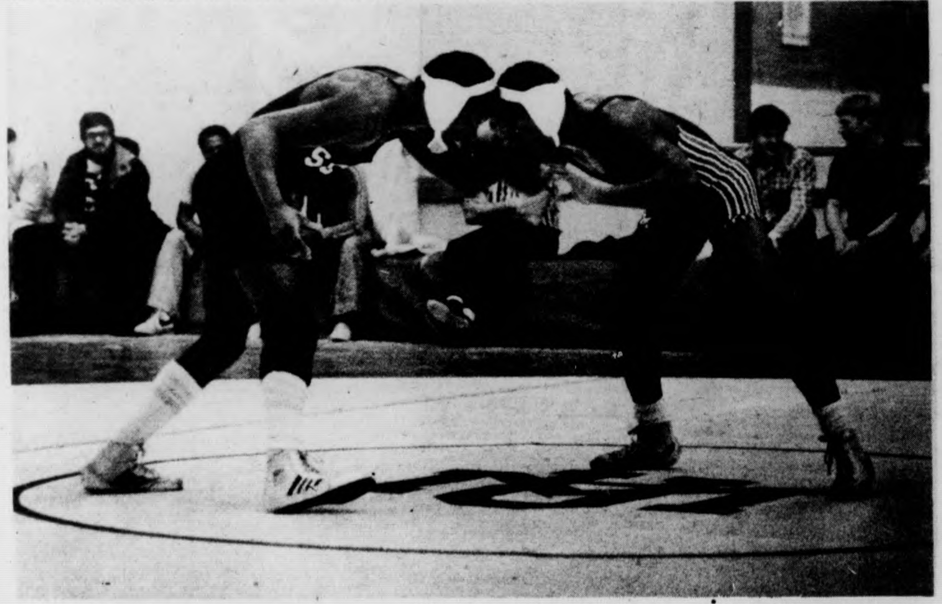
Amato is still undecided over who he will use in the 167 pound weight class. Either Fred Rheault or Dave O'Brien will see action.

Bob Radiwitz will wrestle at 177 pounds, Bob Clark will go at 190 pounds, and John Allen will compete as the heavyweight.

"I admit we're in trouble," said Amato. "The guys in the heavier weight classes really have to come through with big matches for us to win.

WRESTLING NOTES — Marty Rogers has a dislocated left shoulder and he maybe out for the remainder of the season. This leaves coach Amato with only one more heavyweight — John Allen.

The next UMass competition is when the grapplers travel to West Point for a tri-match this Saturday.



Like bulls locking horns or jousting Bighorn Rams, Tony Perry and Southern Connecticut's Percy Watson tie up in a recent match. Perry will be sitting out today's match against New Hampshire in Boyden. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

Snow budget depleted

By DAVE RODGERS
Collegian Staff

UMass' Planning and Operations department has been forced to request additional funds for snow removal.

Head of Planning and Operations Jack Littlefield yesterday told the Collegian that due to the series of severe storms that have recently battered New England and the area they have had to ask for either a supplemental $40,000 or a transfer to their budget of that amount.

The Amherst Department of Public Works is facing a similar problem. Superintendent Stan Ziomeck reported that their budget as of late last week was $48,000.

Ziomeck expects the costs of this past storm to wipe out their budget. This will force the DPW to either ask for a transfer of funds from the finance committee's reserve account or to continue to run a deficit budget until the next town meeting.

No major snow related incidents were reported yesterday as Amherst and surrounding areas continued to dig out from the second great blizzard of 1978. A storm in January dumped close to two feet of snow on the area.

All of the five colleges, and the Amherst Public schools held classes yesterday.

UMass received Civil Defense clearance to open school at 7:00 p.m. Tuesday night. This came after administration officials reported lots and roads clear.

A spokesperson for the Amherst Junior High reported low attendance there yesterday could be attributed to an incorrect WHYN announcement that failed to include the Amherst schools in their list of schools that were holding classes. Many people mistakenly believed there was no school when Amherst was inadvertently omitted.

The student senate transit service yesterday reported all buses ran on time or close to it yesterday. The same is expected for today.

Few schools were open in the western Massachusetts region yesterday. Governor Michael S. Dukakis ordered closed all schools in the eastern part of the state, but allowed schools in the western part to open after receiving clearance to do so from the Civil Defense agency.

Clean-up operations in the Pioneer Valley region at large were all reported to be proceeding smoothly yesterday.

Strangler suspect seized

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Ned T. Yorke, 37, a 6-foot-4 inch bit actor at Universal Studios, was booked on suspicion of murder Wednesday in connection with the Hillside Strangler killings of 12 girls and young women.

Assistant Police Chief Daryl Gates said Yorke had not confessed to the slayings but that he had made certain statements indicating he might be involved in them.

"I don't want to raise any expectations on anyone's part to believe this case has been solved," Gates told a news conference.

"Yorke's statements were such that we felt it would be improper to release him and it would also be improper not to go ahead with an investigation of what he told us."

Yorke telephoned police Wednesday morning from his Hollywood Hills home and was rushed in a police squad car to Parker Center headquarters where he began discussing the slayings.

Police spokesman Dan Cooke said after a time he "lapsed into incoherency and then fell asleep." He was removed to a hospital ward in the police headquarters.

Gates said detectives would resume their interrogation once he recovers from what appears to be exhaustion.

Yorke's arrest came two days after Mayor Tom Bradley disclosed he had received a letter from a man indicating he was the killer of the 12 young women whose bodies have been found between Sept. 9 and Dec. 14.

Bradley had called on the author of the letter to surrender, promising that he need not fear for his safety. Police Tuesday revealed part of the letter, in which the writer said his mother had "told me to kill those bad ladys."

Gates was asked at the news conference whether Yorke's statements indicated that he had knowledge of the letter. He said they had but he did not want to go into any detail.

Gates said he had no further background about the suspect, except that he had told him he was a bit actor and lived in the Hollywood Hills area where many of the victims, some of them prostitutes, came from.

He said Yorke was a white man.

The tenor of assistant police chief's remarks did not indicate he felt that Yorke was necessarily a prime suspect in the case.

He said the booking charge of "suspicion of murder" was routine as a means of holding a man until the investigation is completed.

A spokesman for Universal Studios said a check of file cards showed he had not worked for the studio.

Radio station KFWB reported that Yorke had a 1976 bit role as a policeman in the "Starsky and Hutch" television show.

Northeast-Sylvan area office to relocate

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Office of Residential Resource Management plans to move its Northeast-Sylvan offices out of Johnson House to solve a problem of space shortage and to further define the office's autonomy from the Office of Student Affairs, according to Sandra L. Anderson, area Resource Management Coordinator.

The resource office acts as a general business agent in the residence areas. It is concerned with such duties as dormitory upkeep, dormitory damage bills and the provision of dormitory equipment and furniture.

Presently, the resource office shares its office space with the Northeast-Sylvan Office of Student Affairs, a situation which Anderson said may be convenient for students, but is one which cannot realistically continue.

"This is the only residence area on campus where the two bodies are housed together in the same office space, and we're packed in there like sardines," Anderson said. "We need more space and the Office of Student Affairs needs more space too."

The present office space on the first floor of Johnson consists of four refurbished double rooms and two single rooms, taking up 10 bed spaces from the dormitory. Anderson said the resource office uses two of the double rooms, one for herself and one for her staff of six. The remaining rooms are used by the Office of Student Affairs.

Anderson said the search for "two or three rooms in a dorm in the Northeast-Sylvan area" would continue until "we find someone who wants us."

"We don't have much of a space request, but we won't go anywhere we aren't wanted," Anderson said.

Anderson said a choice will have to be made concerning the move before students choose rooms in the spring, and the move would be made" probably during the first couple of weeks in June".

"I've got two places in mind, but I'd rather not say what they are," Anderson said. "All I can tell you is that it will have to be a dorm, because that is the only type of building we can be housed in, and for convenience it will probably be in Northeast."

The decision to move the resource office completely out of Johnson House has raised the question of what to do with the two office rooms vacated by the move. Anderson said she assumed the rooms would be absorbed by the office of Student Affairs, but James C. West, Director of Student Affairs for the area said he was unsure of what will happen with the rooms.

Expected this time of year

Flu hits home

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

You wake up one morning with a headache, the chills, aching muscles, weakness, and a burning in your eyes. You feel nauseous and the sunlight irritates your eyes.

Is it the aftermath of several hours of serious socializing at a local discotheque? Or, is it possibly the result of that keg party on your floor last night when you bravely (and foolishly) stated that you wouldn't stop swallowing until every last drop of draft was gone?

Both are distinct possibilities but most likely they are wrong. If you have these symptoms, especially during this time of year, you probably have a case of the flu.

According to the University Health Center, the symptoms mentioned above are the common signs for a variety of viral illnesses which, over the years, have come to be known as "the flu." Other symptoms to watch for include soreness in the throat, a dry cough, lack of appetite, fever, and a head cold.

Presently, it may seem as though everybody you know is battling the flu. But, according to Dr. James Ralph, assistant director of the Medical Staff at the University infirmary, there have been no more cases fof flu reported than usual for this time of year.

"We really don't know the full impact yet," he said, "it's not as though we have people flopping on the floor as they wait in line to be treated."

He also said that it is difficult to gauge the exact number of cases of "the flu" because people tend to categorize a whole variety of sicknesses, from the common cold to diarrhea, under "the flu."

Diane N. Smith, director of nursing at the infirmary, said people experiencing the normal aches and pains of everyday life tend to think they have the flu just because they know this is "flu season." She said that this tends to exaggerate the number of flu sufferers.

Influenza and these other viral diseases usually take one to three days to develop, last only briefly, and are very contagious, according to the Health Services Office. They are especially serious for the elderly, those with a chronic disease, and for pregnant women.

The best way to avoid coming down with the flu is to eat three good meals, avoid undue socializing (especially with those that have the flu), and get plenty of rest, according to Smith and Ralph.

Ralph said that everybody has probably had the germ that causes the flu in their system sometime in the past couple of months. Not everybody gets the flu, he said, because some people are more resistent than others. Their bodies, with the proper diet and amount of rest are able to battle and contain the germ until it is killed off, said Ralph.

He said students living in dorms where they are in close contact with people who have the flu are no more susceptible than people living in relative isolation as long as they follow the guidelines that maintain strong bodily resistance.

"If this were finals time and students were not getting adequat rest, that would be a different story because their resistance would wear down," said Ralph. He said it is still a mystery why some get it in worse degrees than others.

The infirmary prescribes the following advice if you have the symptoms associated with the flu:

First, go to bed and stay there for at least 24 hours after the fever is gone, using a humidifier if one is availalble.

Take two aspirin every four hours, keeping warm and drinking plenty of fluids. The best fluids are flat soft drinks, bouillon, other clear soups, and tea. Solid foods should be taken as your appetite desires.

Also, the Health Center warns that drinking only water is not going to help you get better and that antibiotics are not helpful for viral illnesses.

It's all in the weather: While Chuck Hickey sees that his temperature is 101.8 yesterday at the Health Center, United Auto Workers have a snowball fight with bankers. Both groups were holding conventions at UMass this week. (Staff photos by Marilyn Mankowski, left, and Dale Griswold)

Snow prohibits parking

The University parking office is being flooded by parking appeals from students who have parked in prohibited areas mainly due to adverse weather conditions.

University snow regulations prohibit overnight parking in snow lots during the period from December 1 to April 1. Officials say the regulations will be strictly enforced during this time period regardless of weather conditions.

Parking during snow season is permitted only in lots 21, 22, 24, 32, 41, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50 and all peripheral lots except the lot in front of the stadium. Most of the designated snow lots are for faculty and administration parking.

Officials warn that ticketing and towing will result from any violation.

Scott Burgess memorial service

A memorial service is being held this Sunday for Scott C. Burgess, a Baker house resident killed early Saturday morning while crossing North Pleasant Street. The service, which is set for 2:30 p.m. is being held at the First Baptist Church in Amherst. Funeral services were held yesterday in Braintree.

The driver of the car which hit Burgess, David Sukol of 543 Puffton Village, has been charged by Amherst police with driving to endanger and speeding in connection with the accident.

Graduate Student Senate establishes no smoking zones

Smokers move over! Persons caught lighting up in certain sections of campus eating spots other than Dining Commons may be asked to relocate.

The Graduate Student Senate yesterday announced their success in establishing non-smoking sections in the Hatch, Blue Wall, and Campus Center Coffeeshop. Working in co-operation with Center for Environmental Quality, Campus Center Director William Harris, and Building Operations Director Dudley Bridges, the senate has arranged for University Food Services to post signs reading "This Is A Designated Non-Smoking Area" in the entire back half of the Hatch, and the window-lined sections of the Blue Wall and Coffeeshop.

According to Senator Allan Kolker, "these actions were taken by popular demand. A survey conducted among 150 graduate and undergraduate students in September 1976 revealed that some 75 per cent of those enterviewed favored some restrictions on smoking in various campus areas, including eating establishments other than the Dining Commons."

Kolker explained that enforcement of the specific areas would be "up to individuals." University Food Service in no way accepts responsibility for the enforcement of non-smoking areas. Kolker did express confidence in "non-smokers standing up for their rights." He added that "most campuses have non-smoking areas and they seem to work."

Egyptian-U.S. talks conclude

WASHINGTON [AP] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat ended his talks here yesterday without an immediate decision by President Carter to sell him jet fighters. But he said the United States would step up its drive for an Arab-Israeli peace settlement.

"The United States is not an observer, or a go-between, or a mediator," Sadat said. "No, the role of the United States now is complete partnership."

With that statement to reporters, Sadat claimed success in one of the two principle objectives of his 5½-day visit — more direct involvement by Washington in the on-again, off-again peace talks.

However, disappointment loomed for Sadat as he prepared to take his lobbying campaign to Europe when administration officials said no decision was imminent on selling him jet fighters and other weapons.

Sadat's request, made to Carter on an urgent basis, "is under review and until the president has made up his mind there will be no announcement," said one key U.S. official who declined to be identified. "It'll be a little bit longer," he said.

Pressing his case hard, Sadat had told members of Congress that he would "raise hell" if they did not approve a weapons sale. "I am speaking as a partner and I am threatening," he said.

After a final talk with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance the Egyptian leader stressed the diplomatic aspect of his mission.

"I came really disheartened and discouraged, but I shall return with more perseverance so that we can attain our goal," he said.

Sadat said he could make a greater effort now that the United States was enlarging its role. In effect, he wants the administration to push Israel into concessions.

Sadat planned to fly to New York and then on to London after a brief courtesy call on Carter.

In asking for arms, Sadat specifically requested 120 F-5Es, a short-range jet fighter, and expressed interest in more sophisticated F-15s and F-16s, a second U.S. official said.

"The best bet is that he'll get some F-5Es," said the official, who also preferred to remain anonymous. But the official said he doubted that Congress, which can block arms sales, would approve supplying Egypt with the more advanced planes. Even if that deal went through, Egypt would not get F-15s and F-16s until 1983 or 1984.

Sadat has cited "urgent messages" from Somalia and Chad, two allies which have conflicts on their hands, to underscore his weapons request. Sadat told a group of American newspaper editors while he was here that he has already sent Soviet-supplied Arms to Somalia and might provide troops for Somalia in its war with Ethiopia.

This prospect may have caused some second thoughts within the administration, which is committed to ending that war through negotiations.

Sadat will be followed to Washington next weekby Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan. The principle U.S. mediator in Middle East pease diplomacy, Assistant Secretary of State Alfred L. Atherton Jr., will meet with Dayoan in New York on Thursday, U.S. officials said.

College students to gain from Carter aid proposal

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter called upon Congress yesterday to provide a record $1.2 billion in new aid to college students, including $250 grants to at least two million students from families with gross incomes between $16,000 and $25,000.

"No one should be denied the opportunity for a college education for financial reasons alone," the president declared as he unveiled an aid package designed to head off moves in Congress to provide tax credits of $250 or more to parents of all college students, regardless of income.

In addition to making two million students from middle-income families eligible for direct federal grants for the first time, the Carter plan also would provide subsidized loans to students with family incomes as high as $45,000 before taxes, and expand federally subsidized work-study programs.

The extra money would be available for the school year starting in the fall of 1979. Students in families with incomes below $25,000 would apply individually to the government for the grants as part of the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program. Grants are credited directly to students' accounts at the colleges.

Carter wants to add $1 billion to the $2.16 billion basic grant program, which now aids 2.2 million students, primarily from low-income families.

The president already proposed $250 million in extra student aid last month. The entire $1.46 billion package would boost federal spending on college student aid programs in fiscal 1979 to $5.2 billion, an increase of almost 40 per cent.

Carter said more than five million college students could get federal aid in the school year starting in the fall of 1979, an increase of at least two million.

Rep. William D. Ford, D-Mich., who heads the House Education and Labor subcommittee on higher education, called it "the biggest single infusion of funding for middle income college students since the adoption of the GI bill at the end of World War II."

Five other leaders of House and Senate committees that handle education legislation joined Carter and Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. at the White House for the announcement of the program.

The six lawmakers all hailed the administration's proposal, but some later expressed reservation about limiting the grants to $250 for all students in the $16,000-to-$25,000 range.

Faculty Senate to discuss this fall's school calendar

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

A recommendation to revise the academic calendar for the school year 1978-79 that would result in the opening of the fall semester after the Labor Day Holiday is one of the proposals on the agenda of today's Faculty Senate meeting to be held at 3:30 p.m. in SBA 120.

Peter B. Manning, Chairman of the Space and Calendar Committee, yesterday predicted approval by the Faculty Senate of the proposal. Approval would result in classes starting Wed., Sept. 5, 1978 and continuing through Sat., Dec. 23, 1978. Opposition to the proposal would be sentiment against ending the fall semester two days before Christmas, Manning said.

Also on the agenda in the first meeting of the semester are an annual report from the Teacher Evaluation and Improvement Committee, and numerous proposals. Proposed are establishment of a Provost's Advisory Board, adoption of a Code of Professional Ethics for faculty members, and approval of new courses recommended by the Graduate Council and Academic Matters Council.

The revised calendar for the fall semester was drawn up by the Space and Calendar Committee at the request of the Student Senate last October, Manning said. Complaints that current scheduling disrupts job plans caused the request, he said. Presently, classes begin the Wednesday before Labor Day and the final exam period ends the Wednesday before Christmas.

Student Senate meets

Black music festival not yet approved

By JIM KASSNER
And JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Final approval of the Black American Music Festival was delayed by the Undergraduate Student Senate last night, pending receipt of written contracts and other specifics concerning the upcoming Spring concert.

In other business the Senate heard reports on student government committeework done over intersession. Treasurer Priscilla West, sat in for speaker Pat Whalen, who is ill. The Treasurer criticized Student Activities Coordinator Armand H. (Bud) Demers.

The concert, which will be held in place of the Spring Concert, will hopefully include singer Aretha Franklin among other performers. Earlier reports had Stevie Wonder slated as the top billing, but senate treasurer Priscilla West said security problems would prevent Wonder's appearance.

Third World coordinator Stan Kinard said ticket prices for the concert to be held in the stadium, will range from $6 in advance for UMass students to $10 the day of the concert. All revenues from the concert are earmarked for the Duke Ellington Foundation, a charitable organization dedicated to the creation of a Duke Ellington museum and record archives.

The motion passed by the senate requires the concert committee to obtain a list of available and interested performers within 2 weeks, in addition to satisfying the following requirements:

-The names of performers must be presented to the senate for approval, before any contracts are signed

-a signed agreement must be obtained from UMass Chief of Police Robert G. Joyce concerning security at the concert.

-A dossier must be assembled by the committee on the Duke Ellington Foundation

- a line by line budget must be prepared by the committee

- information on ticket prices must be finalized.

Mark Hixon, speaking for the concert, said Marvin Gaye was unavailable on the concert date, but Aretha Franklin, had "expressed interest" in appearing.

Hixon said figures being mentioned to obtain Franklin are currently at $18,000.

The Duke Ellington Foundation is headquartered in New York, and is in "the budding stages," according to Kinard. The foundation is currently soliciting donations from musicians as well as the National Endowment for the Arts.

The Academic Affairs Committee reported on the combined Course and Teacher Ecaluation (CATE) and Course Description Guide. The guide will be printed this spring with both student evaluations and the course description. The Administration has agreed to pay $5,000 of the costs with the Senate making up the difference. Academic Affairs Co-Chairperson Steve Krop said combining the two guides "has never been done before."

A new core has been created for graduation requirements. Academic Affairs committeeperson Joan Picoraro said that cores are now called "distribution requirements." The new distribution requirements will include those courses which do not fit into the existing categories. A student can take a new "core F" course to fill requirements for other cores.

The Governmental Affairs committee announced the dates for the Student Government Association presidential elections, Board of Governors and mid term senate elections to fill empty seats. The nomination period for BOG and the presidential elections will be Feb. 14 to the 24th. The election for both will be on Mar. 15-16. The senate nomination period will be Feb. 9-20. Elections will be Feb. 27-28.

Priscilla West criticized Student Activities Coordinator Bud Demers. "Bud Demers is not the strong and efficient leader that the office needs. He is not the student advocate he should be."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said Demers is "very able. He has a difficult job since he is an officer of the administration and serves students. I think he's doing a good job." West quoted Demers as saying he was accountable to the University and not the Student Senate.

Boston paper can't deliver for first time in a century

BOSTON — Not only did the Boston Globe not make it to campus during Tuesday's storm, but for the first time in 106 years the paper was unable to deliver its morning editions.

The Globe printed a 48-page edition, but cut its press run at 36,000 copies when it became apparent that its delivery trucks could not make it through the storm. The usual press run for the morning Globe is 325,000 copies.

The newspaper announced that copies of the storm edition are available for $.50.

Alvin Ailey admirable

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater's First performance last night featured some remarkably supple, well-honed dancers, some fine music (Ellington, spirituals, percussion) and some fascinating choreography.

"Night Creature," choreographed by Ailey to music of the same title by Duke Ellington, is a slick, jazzy, "ooh-so-nice" piece, with the pelvises rolling, the arms pressing circles, diagonals, horizontals into space, the fingers splayed, the proud, with sure carry of the head. The stylish costumes (by Jane Greenwood) of bluish-greenish-silver tie-dyed material with swirling knee length skirts for the women and tank-style leotards for both men and women were a fine complement to the sensuous, sleek movement.

"Cry," also choreographed by Alvin Ailey, is "for all black women everywhere — especially our mothers" (program note). Sara Yarborough performed this demanding, three-part solo with sensitivity, strength and dignity. The first part, ("Something About John Coltrane," music by Alice Coltrane) features the very effective manipulation of a long swath of white cloth, which, kneeling, she throws despairingly to the side first one half, then the other; standing, she creates a stretchable rectangular vise with it which her body struggles to escape; and running, she wraps around her head to create a long train of cloth streaming behind her. The second part, to Laura Nyro's "Been on a Train" has many flailing arms, powerful, angry twists and kicks. The third part takes on a distinctly city atmosphere (music "Right on, Be Free), by the Voices of East Harlem) with noisy desperation, fast, fast, fast pace, the sharp, punctuated movements and rhythms.

But it was seeing Geoffrey Holder, a sinuous dancer who knows how to command the stage, dance with dramatic intensity and brilliant technique, that "made" this performance.

Tickets for the storm cancelled performance of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, February 7, may be exchanged or refunded at the Fine Arts Center box office. Tickets can be exchanged for the Thursday special matinee or evening performance given by the Dance company. They can also be exchanged for the Canadian Opera Company's production of "The Barber of Seville" at the F.A.C. on Thursday, February 16 or the Merce Cunningham Dance Company's performance on Wednesday, March 8.

Refunds will be paid with the return of tickets to the F.A.C. box office until Wednesday, February 22, 1978. Buyers who purchased their tickets from a Ticketron outlet may return tickets to that outlet or the box office. The F.A.C. box office is open from 9-4, Monday through Friday.

EASTHAM, Mass. — Storm tide batters the remains of the bathhouse at the Cape Cod National Seashore's Coast Guard Beach. The building is normally 100 yards from the sea. Several houses washed away in the sea, and officials fear the beach may be ruined by erosion. (UPI Wirephoto)

East Mass. paralyzed

BOSTON [AP] — A second major blackout swept over beleaguered Boston yesterday as the city waited for air-lifted federal troops to help dig away the paralyzing after-effects of the worst blizzard in a century.

The number of storm-related deaths continued to mount.

Meanwhile, a National Guard helicopter dropped blankets and food to commuters stranded since Monday in make-shift shelters beside the snow-checked highways.

All non-essential business through Massachusetts as well as highway travel in the eastern part of the state were banned by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, and he extended the prohibition through today.

The first blackout enveloped the city at the height of the storm Tuesday that left 27 inches of snow in downtown Boston.

Boston Edison Co. had just restored power throughout the city when the lights went off again Wednesday noon.

This time, the blackout affected at least 100,000 customers, most of them in downtown neighborhoods. The utility said the outage was caused by a fire in the city's largest generating plant. Ice and salt buildup on power lines touched off the blaze.

Snowbound Logan International Airport cleared part of one runway Wednesday for the airlift of troops and equipment from East Coast bases.

In all, the Army hoped to fly in 350 troops with bulldozers, wreckers and front-end loaders.

The Army's first mission was to clear supply routes to schools, hospitals and essential businesses in the hard-hit suburbs north and south of Boston.

Meanwhile, state public works trucks tried to push away snow on the drifted highways around Boston. They concentrated on Route 128, the major commuter beltway around the city.

On one eight-mile stretch of this road, 2,000 cars and 500 trucks were abandoned, some of them four-abreast. Public Works Commissioner John Carroll said it would take at least four more days to tow the cars and move the snow.

"It's going agonizingly slowly," said Carroll. "We haven't really made a dent in it yet." National Guardsmen set up road blocks on entrance ramps to major roads to keep people from trying to drive on them.

About 1,000 commuters who failed to reach home Monday night were living Wednesday in Red Cross shelters set up in a movie theater and a factory in Canton and Dedham.

A National Guard helicopter dropped supplies to them and to storm-bound houses.

The second power outage was even more widespread than the first, which blacked out 75,000 of Boston Edison's 220,000 customers in the city. Some of them were without power for 24 hours.

No looting was reported during the first blackout, but it occurred Tuesday night in stores in several Boston neighborhoods. About 110 people were arrested on looting charges, and many of them were ordered held on $100,000 bail.

Throughout Boston, officials estimated that 60 per cent of the streets remained unplowed Wednesday, and they said much of the snow could not be removed.

The death toll from the storm in the East, which began Sunday night, 17 days after an earlier blizzard, was about 50, including 27 victims in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Many of the deaths were blamed on overexertion as people attempted to shovel snow that drifted to 6 feet and more.

National troops relieve New England situation

Compiled from wires — With help from Army troops, with equipment flown from Texas, with shovels and determination, the Northeast began a massive cleanup yesterday of the up to two feet of snow that buried the region.

In other areas, roadways remained impassable because of snow or thousands of stranded vehicles, transportation was slowed and businesses were closed.

Federal troops arrived in Rhode Island on Wednesday to help the state dig out from the worst blizzard of the century, but progress was slow and 4,500 persons were stranded in shelters for the third day.

In New Hampshire, dangerously high tides continued to pummel the state's tiny coastline yesterday, as worried beach residents began to assess the damage to their homes.

A statewide ban on non-emergency driving in Connecticut was lifted by Gov. Ella Grasso at noon. She said cities and towns could put their own bans into effect, however, and about half a dozen did. The statewide ban resulted in tickets for 80 motorists in Bridgeport alone Wednesday evening.

All businesses in Massachusetts were closed on order of Governor Michael S. Dukakis. Logan International Airport also remained closed to regular traffic.

Troops in Rhode Island concentrated on opening one lane on interstate highways to military and emergency vehicles.

State police banned all civilian driving in the Providence area.

Plows had not even begun work on Providence streets yesterday afternoon, and even emergency vehicles were getting stuck in eight-foot drifts.

Streets were littered with thousands of abandoned cars and trucks left since Monday's rush hour.

"It's like time stopped," said Michael F. Ryan, an aide to Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy. "It's something you've never seen before. On Interstate 95, 100 trailer trucks were just stopped dead."

Officials predicted that no buses would run until Saturday or Sunday. Green State Airport in Warwick remained closed to commercial flights. Fuel shortages plagued some state buildings as rescue crews struggled to make oil deliveries.

State and local officials in New Hampshire sometimes by boat, sometimes by National Guard truck — ferried through the blizzard- and ocean-ravaged beach communities to add up the damage to property.

John A. Clements, state public works and highway commissioner, said damage to private property was in the millions of dollars. He estimated the damage to Route 1A, which runs along the state's 18-mile coast at $1.5 million.

Enormous chunks of ice, some nine feet across, littered the highway. Despite clear skies and warm sunshine, houses along the oceanfront remained lacquered with ice.

Most major roads in Massachusetts began to reopen yesterday morning, but there were still severe problems with drafts. Some 2,500 stranded vehicles, including 500 trucks, clogged an eight-mile stretch of Route 128 near Canton, Mass.

The state Department of Public Works sent 12 wreckers and 12 snow removers to the rescue Wednesday morning and officials warned people not to try to look for cars themselves. "No one will be allowed on Route 128," said Public Works Commissioner John J. Carroll.

Student-teacher encounters reality

By DAVID NEEDLE
Special to the Collegian

Editor's note: David Needle is a senior Journalism-English major from UMass student-teaching in the English department of a local high school.

Now that a week's gone by I think I have a fairly balanced perspective on what it means to be a student-teacher. In general I like it, although I've usually come home exhausted. Furthermore, it's not a job in the traditional sense. Interns don't get paid. And the teacher's lot is ridiculously complicated. Such 'essential' chores as Homeroom Period, Corridor Duty, and signing 'late passes' so a student can go to the bathroom without being marked late, take up a significant daily amount of time and energy.

Fortunately there is a lot more to teaching than the mundane morass of monitoring students. Yes, Mr. Linkletter, kids do say "the darndest things." Most of which are unprintable. However, what's more important to me is beginning to understand these high schoolers as individuals, rather than the uniformly suspicious and apathetic group I had projected them to be after my first few days of pacing in front of the classroom.

I teach English and related subjects in a large regional high school. The student body is widely represented by kids with a modest country upbringing to those whose parents hold professional positions that allow them to provide a more affluent raising.

The rapport among the faculty is generally friendly and supportive. The exceptions seem incidental rather than by design. Teaching requires that you use a lot of concentrated energy, mostly mental, and there's not enough coffee in the faculty lounge to keep even the best teacher alert the whole day. But (biorhythms aside for the moment) it appears to me that both teachers and students have 'peak' periods during the day which show in their attentiveness and enthusiasm toward each other. Some seem to be in a constant fog, while others often display a genuine excitement and interest that perks up even the most downtrodden inhabitants of the school. Usually.

There's a learning process involved in teaching that takes a great deal of patience and perceptive thinking. One of the problems I'm encountering is trying to decide how much 'distance' I should put between myself and the students. It's an unwritten law that an effective teacher has to command a certain degree of respect from his or her pupils. And that respect is undermined if the teacher gets too chummy with the students. On the other hand, I think if the teacher can't relate to students as a person, he or she is merely going through the motions of educating.

Many teachers get by without ever really showing any human qualities. Or so it seems to the resentful student, right? However, I've already discovered how painfully human teachers can be. The other day I witnessed a remarkably petty and rather childish incident in the faculty lounge. Apparently a teacher, who had just returned from a sabbatical in Russia, put a huge colorful poster on Lenin on the wall of the lounge. There was some kidding about it among some of the teachers who regularly use the lounge. They didn't sound offended, just amused at seeing something so radically different from the presidential calendars and school bulletins that adorm most of their wall space. The next day some other teachers, who hardly ever use this particular lounge, came in, saw the poster, and had one of the maintenance engineers take it down. Scotch tape can be tricky.

Help group established

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

A support group for victims of sexual assault is being organized through the Everywoman's Center at UMass. The first meeting will take place Tuesday, Feb. 28, at 7:00 p.m. at the center (506) Goodell). The group will run for ten weeks.

Two members of the counselor-advocate group of the UMass Rape Task Force, Donna Cangelosi and Diane Martell, will moderate. The Task Force offers crisis intervention, short-term counseling, and medical and legal advocacy to sexual assault victims.

The support group is intended for female rape victims, eighteen years of age and older, who feel they are ready to "integrate" the rape experience into their lives and who would like a safe non-threatening environment in which to do this.

Using the group's combined resources, members will help each other deal with personal feelings and problems with social institutions (i.e. family, court, police).

Participants will collectively decide on the group's focus. Each member must commit herself to the full ten weeks. Interested women should leave their names and phone numbers at the Everywoman's Center 5-0800 during the day or call one of the moderators (253-5788 or 549-4773) in the evening. Participants are asked to do this prior to the first meeting so that an informal interview with the facilitators can be arranged.

Child returned

[HER SAY NEWS SERVICE] — IN a little-publicized decision, a Superior Court Judge in California ordered a 4-year-old boy returned to the custody of his mother, Jeanne Jullion.

Last May, Jullion's son was removed from her home by police after the child's father charged she was an unfit mother because she receives welfare and is a lesbian.

News in Brief

Senate votes to require middle age vision exams

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — The Maine Senate decided Wednesday to stand firmly behind the law requiring middle-aged drivers to get periodic vision tests.

The 16-14 vote put the Senate in conflict with the House, which had voted to repeal the requirement. Last year, the legislature voted to require drivers to get their eyes tested at license renewals closest to their 40th and 52nd birthdays. Drivers over 65 had already been required to get eye tests.

Secretary of State Mark Gartley interpreted the law as requiring all drivers between 40 and 65 to get eye tests during the phase-in period of the new requirement.

The Senate has voted to clarify the law, making it clear that the eye tests would only be required at 12-year intervals.

The Senate's action means the House will either have to go along with the clarification or leave the unpopular law on the books as is.

In other action, the Senate passed and sent to the desk of Gov. James B. Longley a bill reducing the time in which an injured skier may sue a resort area.

The bill would reduce from six years after an injury to two years, the time in which a lawsuit could be filed.

Ski area operators have said the measure will help them obtain liability insurance at a lower cost.

New Hampshire business gather Maine sales tax

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — A bill aimed at forcing some New Hampshire businesses to collect Maine's sales tax on goods sold to Mainers was revived yesterday in the House.

The House gave the redrafted bill initial approval after voting 64-68 against killing it.

The bill would force New Hampshire businesses whose ads feature sales tax avoidance to register under Maine's sales tax law and collect the 5 per cent levy from customers on the wrong side of the state boundary.

The measure faces another House vote today. The bill will then go to the Senate, which ordered a rewrite of it earlier this year.

Lawmakers from Maine towns along the New Hampshire border strongly opposed the measure, terming it unenforceable and discriminutory.

"I see this as an harassment of York County residents," said Rep. Rick Nadeau, D-Sanford. "I'm sure the governor of New Hampshire, good old Mr. Meldrim Thomson, is going to have state troopers arresting Maine tax people."

Rep. Edward Mackel, R-Wells, the only Taxation Committee member to oppose the bill, said, "This is a bureaucrat's bill. It originated with the Bureau of Taxation."

But, other House members of the Taxation Committee gave the measure strong endorsement.

Rep. Bonnie Post, D-Owls Head, said the measure would put New Hampshire businesses on the same footing as their Maine counterparts.

Earlier this year, the measure was returned to the Taxation Committee after Sen. Ralph M. Lovell, R-Stanford, said he was worried about its potential impact on Maine broadcast stations.

Indian land claim case approaches settlement

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — A member of a presidential task force on Maine Indian land claims met Wednesday with Maine Attorney General Joseph E. Brennan, but the outcome of the session was not disclosed.

Elliot Cutler, a former Bangor resident and member of the White House task force, had also scheduled talks with Gov. James B. Longley later this week.

Officials close to the Indian land claims case indicated that a proposed settlement may be forthcoming.

At a Statehouse news conference earlier Wednesday, Longley backed off slightly from his sharp criticism of President Carter's handling of the negotiations.

Longley had wired Carter on Tuesday complaining that Maine is being bypassed and charged that the task force is trying to dictate the terms of the settlement.

The governor's complaint centered on reports that the task force wants the state to pay a lump sum to the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot tribes instead of giving up 100,000 acres of publicly owned land.

New Hampshire beaches restricted without permit

HAMPTON, N.H. [AP] — Sections of North Hampton and Hampton beaches on the New Hampshire seacoast remained off limits to all except those with written permission from police.

Heavy surf continued to pound seawalls along the North Beach area of Hampton twisting 18-foot steel beams into pretzel-like strips.

Hampton police estimated that as many as 500 houses were damaged in the storm.

Route 1A was in some parts covered with piles of rocks four feet high. Cars, beach cabanas, and even summer homes, were thrown about or buried in snow, sand and debris.

Many side roads were swamped with two to six feet of slush.

State highway workers hoped to open at least one lane of Route 1-A for emergency vehicles.

Senate debates Panama Canal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The great debate over the Panama Canal began yesterday with no thunderous oratory. Instead, Sen. James Allen and Vice President Walter Mondale had a polite chat about the rules of the Senate.

Allen asked and Mondale answered 17 questions the senator from Alabama had about the rules to be followed during consideration of the two treaties President Carter sent up for approval last year.

The tourist galleries were full, but the seats reserved for Senate staff members and VIPs were only sparsely settled and only about one-third of the 100 senators were present when Mondale pronounced the treaties up for action.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd, fiddling with his lapel microphone, tried to put the moment in historic context. He noted the Senate had not used its full dress treaty debate rules since 1922, and perhaps the members would profit from a briefing.

Then Allen, somberly dressed except for a bright striped tie, stood in the aisle to Mondale's right, intoning his questions. The vice president, with his previously prepared answers taped to a copy of the questions before him, replied, declining several times to go beyond his scripted responses.

Allen's first question was whether the Senate did not in fact have two treaties before it. Mondale handled it like a shortstop with an easy grounder affirmatively.

But, as things have a tendency to do in the Senate, the questions quickly got more complicated.

"If amendments to a treaty or treaties inconsistent with the provisions of the documents set forth in the record pursuant to the foregoing unanimous consent request are agreed to by the Senate, would not such amendments so adopted supplant or supercede the inconsistent provisions of such documents?" Allen asked.

Mondale, obviously spying a parliamentary swamp, replied that the presiding officer of the Senate did not indulge in legal opinions about the effect of Senate action.

"Thank you for that non-answer," Allen said.

While his Alabama colleague asked his questions, John Sparkma, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, waited quietly to make the opening statement of the debate. A portable speaking stand was ready on his desk.

Fla. police confiscate potential pot funds

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. [UPI] — Miami Beach Police Wednesday stashed away as evidence the $91,000 they scooped up in a drug raid at the ritzy church-home of a religious cult which teaches that smoking marijuana brings members closer to Cod.

"That money might have been used to buy marijuana," said Hank Adorno, chief assistant state attorney for Dade County. "It would be, evidence. If someone owns it, they can file a motion with the court to get it back. If no one claims it, we'll eventually turn it over to the court and let the court decide what to do with it."

The raid on the Star Island mansion of the Zion Coptic Church, lying just off the causeway between Miami and Miami Beach, came last week just hours after other cult members and two church leaders were arrested along the north Florida Gulf coast in a raid on a yacht loaded with 20 tons of pot.

"If they didn't make the arrest up there, we probably would have gotten a big catch down here," said Miami Beach Police Sgt. Richard Barreto.

The Miami Beach Strategic Investigation Unit scoured the house, looking for marijuana, and with the help of two German shepherds trained to sniff out drugs, found stashes of pot in different locations around the house. Most of the money was found in a briefcase, but $17,000 of it was in a wall safe that a cult member opened for police.

The $91,000 mainly was in American currency, but there was also Jamaican, Colombian and Canadian money.

"I asked a cult member, who the money belonged to, and she said it was 'house money' they used to buy different things," Barreto said. "No one would admit to owning it or knowing anything about it."

Cult members say they are affiliated with the Ethopian Zion Coptic Church of Jamaica, a wealthy sect that views marijuana smoking as a sacred means of communicating with God.

But the guarantees of freedom of worship in the U.S. Constitution do not protect the cult from enforcement of federal and state drug laws, said Frederick A. Rody, Jr., acting regional director for the Drug Enforcement Administration in Miami.

Roads erode

WASHINGTON [AP] — The interstate highway network is wearing out faster than anyone expected, and may require nearly $19 billion for repair and rehabilitation through 1995, the chairman of a congessional watchdog panel said Wednesday.

The gloomy assessment was delivered by Rep. Sam M. Gibbons, D-Fla., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee's oversight subcommittee.

"The finest part of our road network, the instate system, is wearing out faster than aayone expected," Gibbons said.

"This is the system that was designed for a life expectancy of 20 years. Yet, according to a General Accounting Office report issued last year, the interstate is wearing out 50 per cent faster than it can be replaced," he said.

The GAO is the investigative and auditing arm of Congress.

Rockets seek compensation

HOUSTON [AP]— Saying NBA Commissioner Lawrence O'Brien had decided against mediating the case, the Houston Rockets announced Wednesday they will seek compensation in the courts from the Los Angeles Lakers in the Kermit Washington-Rudy Tomjanovich case.

Ray Patterson, Rockets president and general manager, said Rockets lawyers are determining where and when the suit will be filed.

A punch from Washington sidelined Tomjanovich, Houston's leading scorer and captain, for the remainder of the season in a Dec. 9 game in Los Angeles. Tomjanovich spent two weeks in a Los Angeles hosptial after surgery and is to undergo additional surgery in April.

O'Brien suspended Washington for 60 days and fined him $10,000. While under suspension, Washington was traded by the Lakers to the Boston Celtics and is scheduled to return to action Friday.

Representatives of the Rockets met informally with O'Brien in Atlanta during the All-Star game break last weekend, asking that he serve either as an arbitrator or as a moderator for settling the Houston-Los Angeles dispute.

Patterson said Wedensday that O'Brien earlier in the day had instructed league attorney David Stearn to advise William Alverson, Rockets board chairman, that the commissioner was declining the invitation.

Oil leaks in Salem Sound

BOSTON [AP] — Oil leaked into Salem Sound from a Greek tanker that was grounded during the Northeast storm earlier this week, but a Coast Guard spokesman said it appeared an "unsubstantial amount" of the tanker's 160,000-gallon cargo had spilled into the water.

Twenty-eight of the 32 crewmen aboard the tanker Global Hope were removed Wednesday to the Coast Guard cutter Decisive. The captain and three chief mates remained aboard to assist with repairs.

The Coast Guard suspended its search Wednesday night for a missing 45-foot pilot boat that had been sent into the area Monday to help the crew of the Global Hope. The bodies of four of the pilot boat Can Do's five crewmen were found earlier.

The search for the boat and the fifth man was expected to resume Thursday.

Coast Guard spokesman John Bablitch said the Global Hope sustained minimal damage to the hull when it was grounded Monday. He said there was not estimate of the amount of oil which had leaked from the tanker, but he said officials believed there was little spillage.

State Court reduces time

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — A prosecutor is angry at a state Supreme Court ruling reducing a Pittsfield man's first-degree murder conviction for torturing and then beating to death a 4-year-old boy.

"We are very depressed by this decision," said Hampden-Berkshire District Attorney Matthew J. Ryan Jr.

The Supreme Judicial Court reduced the conviction of Calvin Cadwell to second-degree murder in a ruling issued this week. The decision eliminates Cadwell's life sentence, making him eligible for parole in less than 15 years.

He was convicted in the 1975 death of Walter Gerwaski III of Pittsfield, who weighed 25 pounds when he died of a severe beating to the head.

The case should have been a warning that "you can't beat up kids without suffering the consequences. Instead it has turned out not to be that at all," Ryan said Tuesday.

Testimony at the trial revealed the child was repeatedly beaten and abused by Cadwell, who was living with the boy's mother at the time.

The high court said the prosecution failed to show the defendant's act was premeditated or a "cruel or extreme atrocity," justifying a first-degree murder conviction.

Ryan disagreed, saying, "This was a course of conduct that culminated in death. When you look at it, it was obvious atrocity and cruelty."

Gas leaks

REVERE, Mass. [AP] — Gasoline leaked from a storage tank and two dikes surrounding it Wednesday, prompting police to close a highway.

Fire Chief Anthony Mastronardi said the gasoline leaked from an 800,000-gallon storage tank at the Union Petroleum Corp.

He said it was hard to estimate how much escaped from the tank and two surrounding dikes, but some of the fuel spread alongside a small ditch near the parking lot at the Suffolk Downs race track.

"Gasoline when exposed is always dangerous," he said. A fire truck from Logan International Airport was used to spread foam on the escaped gasoline, but Mastronardi said the foam's effectiveness would not be permanent.

He kept a fire detail at the scene, and police closed Lee Burbank Highway, which leads to McClellan Highway.

He said a private company was trying to suck up the escaped fuel.

Mastronardi said the gasoline leaked from the tank through a crack at its base and into an area surrounded by a steel dike eight feet larger in diameter than the tank and designed to contain any leaked fuel.

He said the gasoline leaked through a small crack, apparently caused by freezing weather, in the steel dike.

Some of the fuel then flowed into an area surrounded by an earthen dike. That area also was designed to collect water, which apparently froze creating a crack that allowed the gasoline to escape, the fire chief said.

Frederick Forest of Union Petroleum had speculated earlier that the weight of snow pushing on top of the floating cover of the storage tank had caused the gasoline to leak out the bottom of the tank.

Women perish, trapped in car

NORWOOD, Mass. [AP] — The bodies of two women, victims of carbon monoxide poisoning, were found yesterday in a car largely buried in snow, police said.

The deaths increased the number of blizzard-related fatalities to 13 in Massachusetts.

Police said the women had been dead for several hours when their bodies were seen in the car at 11 a.m. by passing youths.

The car was on Access Road in a desolate area between several homes and the Norwood Airport, police said. There is a store about 100 yards from the location of the car.

The victims were identified as Claire M. Young, 50, and Marie J. Jennings, 59, both of Canton.

Officers said the key was turned to the "on" position in the vehicle. They said they did not know where the women were headed, but speculated they had pulled over to wait out the blizzard that struck Massachusetts Monday and Tuesday.

Human rights column inaccurate

To the Editor:

The Young Socialist Alliance at UMass would like to correct some inaccuracies and respond to some accusations in the article "The Right to Self-Determination" by Yitzhak Santis in the Feb. 6 Collegian.

Santis lumps together for his criticism "such lofty groups as the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade [RCYB], the Young Socialist Alliance [YSA], the International Socialists [IS] and others." We'd like to point out that, as anyone who occasionally glances at the tables in the concourse is aware, there is little unanimity among these groups, particularly on the issues which Santis singles out for criticism.

To mention a few: Santis claims that the "RCYB, YSA and others" have nothing to say about the right of the Kurds in Iraq to self-determination. Wrong — the YSA supports that right. He claims that we condone repression in Cambodia. Wrong — the YSA has spoken out against the policies of the Cambodian regime, although we recognize the defeat of U.S. imperialism in Southeast Asia as an important step forward. And if Santis considers Mozambique a "Marxist" state, then we disagree seriously about what that means.

But with regard to Santis' charge of a "double standard of selective criticism," we do see an excellent reason why students and others in this country concerned with human and democratic rights should take a special interest in fighting against repressive dictatorships in places like South Africa, Chile and Iran — because the U.S. government, acting in the interests of multi-national corporations and in our name, supports, by diplomatic, military and economic means, the white minority regime in South Africa and the dictatorships of Pinochet and the Shah. This is a basic responsibility, not a 'double standard'.

And, we see a very important difference between the struggle for national self-determination by peoples oppressed by colonial and imperial powers — like the people of "our own" colony, Puerto Rico — and the claim by those powers to have the 'right' to oppress someone else — as, for example, the state of Israel, founded and maintained on the dispossession and repression of the Palestinians, or the Canadian state, which uses arguments about the "Canadian nation" to deny self-determination to the people of Quebec. We support the rights of the former whole-heartedly, and condemn the designs of the latter for what they are: another face of imperialist oppression.

The revolution that we are working for, one which can only come about through the action of the vast majority of people, is one which would take control of this country's productive wealth out of the hands of the corporations and allow that wealth to be democratically controlled and used for the satisfaction of human needs. Such a revolution would do away with the endless quest for profit which drives the corporations [and the government they control] to bankroll and support regimes like that in South Africa. It would secure those democratic rights that the U.S. government now denies to Blacks, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, women and individuals and groups who disagree with its policies. It would deny any class or people the right to oppress or exploit another.

Organizational meeting for R.A.'s

To the Editor:

There will be an organizational meeting of OH-C Area Resident Assistants this Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Butterfield Lounge to discuss petitioning for further R.A. salary compensations.

This issue has been recently raised in light of the minimum wage increase to $2.65 effective January 1978. Presently R.A.'s are receiving $2.65 for 6.6 hours weekly. This present salary needs reconsideration by the administration for the following reasons:

1 — R.A.'s work more than 6.6 hours weekly. Not including the two to three hours alone R.A.'s spend weekly in staff meetings, R.A.'s are also responsible for keys, night duty once a week and on rotating weekends, enforcing University policy, acting as social coordinators and enforcing the endangering behavior policy.

2 — In September 1977, under financial pressure, OH-C Area Residential Offices raised R.A. salaries to $2.65 per hour but cut the number of hours down to 6.6 in order that R.A.'s would receive the same salary previously allotted and no salary increase would be necessary after the minimum wage increase this past January.

3 — R.A.s now receive the same salary as dorm security guards who work one night a week. Certainly this comparison clearly illustrates that R.A.'s are underpaid.

The present situation is even more alarming considering that in past years R.A.'s not only received a yearly stipend totaling $800 [the yearly salary of an R.A. today is approximately $500] but also a tuition waiver. Although the salary compensation for R.A.'s has decreased, the amount of time and energy demanded by the job has not. And then, one must also consider the rise in cost-of-living over the years.

Obviously something must be done. As in OH-C Area are asked to attend Tuesday's organizational meeting in order that something may be done.

Lisa Melilli, Jody Marcus, Helen Berg, Darryll Maston, Patrick Brennan are R.A.s in Butterfield House

Friday night's death traumatic

To the Editor:

Friday night I had a traumatic experience. On my way home from a party, I decided to travel North Pleasant Street through the university. Today I'm sorry that I did.

As I approached the Morrill Science Building, I saw Police all over the place. They waved me on through, but as I passed, I saw the reason that they were assembled. I saw an officer pulling a white sheet over the body of a fellow UMass student, a 19-year-old Sophomore from Braintree. Behind him there was a red van with a cracked windshield. I stopped, went back for another look, and then I knew. He would never see daylight again. I fell to my knees and began to pray, and to cry.

I'm having a great deal of difficulty right now, sitting here trying to express the sadness and the reality of what I saw. I guess you had to be there. It made me realize... you just never know....

I left the scene, and continued on my drive to Sunderland. A thousand things went through my mind on that drive back. And I cried most of the way.

I came into the apartment, sat down on my bed, and woke up my roommate. I told him what had happened, and then I left, and went to make a phone call. We don't have a phone yet, so I had to go down to the office of the complex to make the call. The call I made was to my father. The last time that I had spoken to my father was over the phone, and I had hung up on him, but not before telling him where to go. I felt so small, and so cheap as I dialed his phone number, and worst of all, I felt like such a fool. I had to make my peace. He answered the phone, and accepted my collect call. I told him what I had just seen, started crying again, and apologized for everything that I'd said to him during our previous phone call.

There are two reasons why I am writing this letter. First, I am begging all of you with cars out there to please drive carefully and observe all safety regulations. They are there for the protection and well being of everyone. Maybe speed bumps all around campus might be a good idea for this area.

But the second reason that I'm writing is this: If there is anyone — friend, relative, parent, — with whom you are not at peace, make your peace. Last night, I had the chance, but the next time, I might not be so lucky. You just don't know, people, you just don't know....

The new liberalism

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

When the Class of 1981 first shuffled through the halls of Yale University last fall, over 50 per cent of those students reported in a released poll that their political views were conservative. Such was the case in college campuses across the nation where the angry activism and national concern of students from the sixties seemed to have faded completely over the horizon. The newly empowered Southern politician in the present White House seemed to have shovelled in a new wave of conservatism across the country, a conservatism which had even infiltrated the hardy mineds of the young.

But politics is a game, we've heard, but worse, politics is a game of words and labels which are often evasive and misleading. And the reported bout of "conservative" is a point in case.

Conservatism has been associated with laissez-faire politics — the belief that an economic system be left for the most part to its own natural ways. In short, conservatism is passive politics, the belief that whatever happens by course is for the best.

But in a recent poll taken across the nation as reported last month in the New York Times, eighty-five per cent of those reporting conservative political sentiments also reported that they were in favor of increasing social welfare programs and a national socialized medical program. These last views certainly cannot be called traditionally conservative views.

Social welfare and socialized medical care certainly represent activism and certainly represent the desire to take hold of an economic system and not let it run its natural course. These views also represent the idea of "sharing the wealth" and are totally opposite to the conservative notion that "the best shall succeed and it be rightly so."

Obviously the term conservatism as used by both college students and U.S. citizens in polling is both evasive and misleading in consideration of these instances the report of overriding conservative viewpoints in the U.S. may not actually be existing as reported.

Then, on the other hand, conservatism has always been considered from the right of the political spectrum to the norm and one can induce that perhaps that norm now is supporting socialized programs.

If this be the case, one can simply see a change in the American point of view — that is that conservatism may no longer be "conservatism" as we traditionally know it, but actually a new form of liberalism.

Personal patriotism

jerry rogers

In a great display of ideological patriotism, a handful of German Gestapo officers, with the aid of Sam's piano, sing the praises of the Fatherland in "Casablanca." Victor Laszlo, the underground leader, is not to be outdone, and he strides confidently up to the leader of the small orchestra in Rick's Cafe Americain.

"Play 'La Marseillaise!'," Laszlo commands.

The bandleader hesitates and looks to his left toward Rick ("Richard Blaine, American," as Major Strasser identifies him). As Laszlo reiterates his demand, Rick, played by Humphrey Bogart, silently nods his approval and the band strikes up the French national anthem.

A barroom full of European refugees fleeing the Nazi occupation quickly joins in behind Laszlo's lead and the Nazis are soon overwhelmed and forced to stop their singing. Shouts of "Vive la France!" and "Vive la Democratic!" follow the last words of "La Marseillaise".

Now, picture this scene:

The pulsating disco rhythms of the Bee Gees' "Saturday Night Fever" soundtrack help psyche the crowd that has gathered in the Cage to view the basketball game between UMass and West Virginia.

The energy level of the fans and of the Minutemen rises accordingly when an announcer, in a voice that attempts to exude excitement with every sentence, breaks in and tells all that THE national anthem is about to be played.

Shortly after the lyrics of Francis Scott Key's ancient lyric begin to filter throughout the cage, a majority of the fans stand up in a response that typifies psychological conditioning rather than great feelings of patriotism. A handful of these people sing a few lines of the song; yet most are humming the disco tunes so abruptly cut off and talking about how tall the West Virginia teams seems to be in comparison to UMass.

When the anthem is nearly over people begin clapping. This too is attributable to either conditioning or to the fans' wish to get the game underway and their happiness that the bombs bursting in air have finally stopped.

Obviously, these two situations are not easily comparable. However, they can be considered representative of the nature of political differences and the influence of popular cultures at two different points in time.

It is unlikely that Victor Laszlo could instill overwhelming patriotism in the hearts of French men and women as he was able to do in the movie "Casablanca". The likelihood of Americans buying war bonds and conserving rubber so that jeeps might have tires is doubtful now. Though vestiges of the Cold War leave many people with an overly general, ill-defined notion of the differences between political ideologies, most people have either little regard for politics altogether, and instead believe in pragmatism or view politics as personal rather than social.

At one time it may have been logical to assume fans attending a basketball game were "true Americans" and more than happy to sing the national anthem. After all, the competition and sort of social Darwinism surrounding basketball in this country is typical of American corporate capitalism. However, the extension of fans' acceptance of competition to the acceptance and championing of patriotism has since become illogical and unrealistic.

It's always great to be able to feel the tingle that runs up your spine when the words of "Là Marseillaise" drown out the oppression symbolized by the Gestapo singing the praises of the Fatherland. The incorporation of politics on a personal level is, nonetheless, a more honest and intelligent approach to solving problems and satisfying people's needs.

Dissident Colony

bill sundstrom

According to the January 6 edition of Science magazine, UMass is host to a "colony." It's not, as one might expect, a colony of unusual laboratory mice or fungi, or a population of strangely-plumed pigeons residing in the rafters of South College. Rather, this is a human colony, and not of the Puerto Rico variety. It's a colony of "radicals" and "dissident" professors.

Those who have taken a course with one of UMass' radical professors probably don't realize how privileged they are. In the words of the article in Science (hardly what one would call a "dissident" publication): "American radicals have never really found a niche in the universities. By the test of tenure, colleges and universities have been reluctant to give full faculty status to those who espouse basic changes in the political and economic system."

Nowehre has that "test of tenure" been more evident than in the Crimson Halls of Harvard, where the economics department has never granted tenure to a radical. That practice has turned cut to be one of the best things that ever happened to economics at UMass, since a number of the brightest Harvard rejects have flocked to this campus for a slightly less hostile environment.

The history of radical economics at UMass is interesting, if not widely known. It seems that in 1972-72 the economics department was in somewhat a state of turmoil, there being an abundance of mathematical economists and demands that the department diversify. All of this led to the hiring of a brilliant young Harvard economist who had just been denied tenure at that institution because he was, alas, a "radical". That economist, name of Samuel Bowles, was "drafted" in a negotiated package deal, in which four other radicals were also hired.

Today there is probably no better place in the country to learn radical, or "critical," economics, and radical theorists are popping up here and there in other departments as well.

The presnce of radicals, Marxists, and assorted other "subversives" has presented some problems more traditional departments have never had to deal with. The Economics department, for example, has been attracting a disproportionately large number of left-leaning graduate students, who are well-aware of the department's reputation. This would be no hassle were it not for the fact that so many grad students take on teaching assistantships. What has happened in some cases is that a "traditional" economist will present his depiction of economics in introductory course lectures, and a radical T.A. will contradict it all in the discussion section.

This probably leaves some students confused and others angry; but confusion and anger are often signs that the comfortable layer of dust that sits atop the uncritical mind is being disturbed by new and challenging ideas. Some will ignore this disturbance and return to their accounting or government courses much as they were before the exposure to radicalism. Others will enter a painful period of questioning their beliefs and values systems, followed by a few more courses with radicals. Ultimately they may come to the conclusion that they themselves are "dissidents."

Is this colony of radicals, on balance, a credit or debit to the university? The answer will, of course, depend largely on the political persuasion of the person responding. Here are some arguments, from one of those new "dissidents," to be tallied on the plus side:

1) Radicals provide a point of view seldom encountered in American education, but highly influential in other parts of the world;

2) The attraction of and granting of tenure to important American radicals raises the quality of education here and the prestige of the institution;

3) In a society and world plagued by inequality, oppression, economic instability and alienation, radical ideas present some of the most important solutions and directions.

Marx set as one of his philosophical principles the unity of theory and practice — it might be said that radical professors are sorely lacking in the "practical" area. But if they can scrape away some mental cobwebs, or though their studies come up with some viable alternatives to the present state of affairs, their presence will surely have been justified.

Winter is a fact of life in New England

By JOHN LUCZKOW JR.
Collegian Staff

Welcome home. By now we have been through a number of snowstorms which turned to either slush or freezing rain, and one of the bigger snowstorms on record as well. Although we have not had snow for awhile, and much has melted, more is always expected. Tonight there is a coat of frost on all the cars in the parking lots. Tomorrow morning drivers will be handling scrapers. Some cars will refuse to start. Someone will be bullshit. At the base of the hill between Worcester D.C. and Orchard Hill foot-thick hunks of ice are piled by the edge of the walk: evidence of work the Physical Plant did chipping clear the asphalt, eventually. Most of the trees have been stripped naked. Not many birds are weathering it out.

Winter is a fact of New England. (Not only in New England, of course, but since we here we might as well talk about New England. Don't you think? Probably not.) I am not complaining. The fact is that I (in the loose — although not the loosest — sense of the word) love winter. It would make me very happy to see it snow and snow until the path to Worcester D.C. ices up and a big glacier flows down to squash North Pleasant St.

The Physical Plant folks can stand atop the ice and smoke cigars. I am irritated by those who are irritated by the snow. Everyone complains: the newspapers make droll jokes in their weather blurbs. The voice comes over the radio: "Well, here it is: there's more snow on the way. Yuck. Sorry about that." And other radio personnel mutter in the background. And TV news crews shake their gleaming heads. And there I am, gesticulating uselessly, a big stuffed Raggedy JL, thinking, "What is wrong with you people? How can you ever be happy with that kind of an attitude?"

Still, and maybe a little more honestly, one begins to wonder when this winter thing is going to be over. There are flakes and more flakes, the fucking cold, bulky layer upon layer of clothing, nearly breaking a leg on the steps of the Student Union; and it's only just turned February! No wonder we walk around glaze-eyed and tempers snap. One stops wondering and begins worrying. What was it like when the world was green? Maybe will wait forever for the resurrection of life. None of these worries affect me, of course, but the other day I did catch myself on the edge of a morose state. 'What is wrong with you JL?' I asked myself. I had been remembering, which I try not to do because it's hardly conducive to happiness, that last year at this time I was in Florida. Oohh. That's why.

There is a lot of ugliness in Florida, I admit. Billboards, Tampa, tourist traps, ("World's Largest Seashell Factor!!" Honest. There is such a place-thing), fat old women in bikinis, fat old men in bermuda shorts. The state is full of grouchy retired couples who drive Cadillacs and Winnebagos by hitchhikers without a blink of an eye. And is as flat as a piano after someone has danced on the stdings. Oh yea, Florida's got the ugly.

On the other hand, there was an awful lot of beauty in Florida, too. Especially at sunset.

Evening light intensified all the colors. The greenery was lush, exotic, and the smells were strong. The grass was springy with life under our bare feet. It was practically summer, in February. (The Floridians complained. "Too cold!"). We drove the crazy neighbor's old Studebaker Step-Van all over Clearwater, Florida, faithfully following the prescripton on the front-bumper plates of other Florida freaks, which read "ARRIVE STONED". About the most ambitious thing I had to do was toss a frisbee around our apartment complex, and build sandcastles on the beach under a haloed sun. The people were good: for awhile there were about twelve of us hippie-type subversive socialist characters living in a one bedroom apartment. We were smiling most of the time. In the morning someone would walk to a nearby tree and return with a shopping sack full of grapefruit. Sugar is wasted on fresh grapefruit. Life was tough. You get the picture. If you've never been away: quit school. What are you doing here? Right now, at this moment, NOW, Florida is much as I described. Let's force the weatherman over red hot coals; and if you see a groundhog, shoot it before it has a chance to pop its head back into its hole. But I'm staying behind, without complaining, and if you don't like it you can leave. If you all go South there will be all the more space for me to tromp my boots around in. Good luck to you. And good riddance.
